Is it true that no schoolbook that deals with history—especially one that has anything to say of the church—can find a place in our public schools without first being indorsed by the Roman Catholics? If so, what sort of histories will we have in the course of a few years? In a meeting of the Louisiana School Board a report was presented concerning a certain history to which objection had been made on the ground that its allusions to the Reformation were not fair to the Roman Catholics. State Superintendent Harris reported to the Board that "the books in question had been investigated by Mr. Kavanaugh, the Superintendent of Parochial Schools in New Orleans, and found to contain no objectionable matter, and the book was adopted as a textbook in the common schools." From this it would appear that the book had been officially submitted to Mr. Kavanaugh. What would have been the result if Mr. Kavanaugh had condemned it? Simply, it would have been thrown out. If both Protestants and Romanists are to be consulted and pleased in the matter of history, our children will never learn any history of the Reformation that is worth anything. And no history can be complete that does not treat of the Lutheran Reformation.

One of the saddest signs of the times is the constantly increasing number of people who engage in Sabbath desecration. There is hardly any form of desecration that is not indulged. Some good people who are horrified at one form of Sabbath breaking do not hesitate themselves to break it in another form. For no consideration would some men open the doors of their houses and sell goods on Sunday, but they do not hesitate to go to the various pleasure resorts and patronize the trafficers in refreshments. All-day riding in automobiles is a favorite method of spending the Sabbath among the rich and well-to-do. And Sunday excursions on railroads are common. And the students of Christian colleges often spend the day going to or returning from some town to meet an engagement to play an intercollegiate game. Only a few days since one of our Methodist exchanges gave the names of students of a Methodist College who "left Sunday morning" to go to a distant city to engage in games scheduled for Monday and Tuesday. This temptation to violate the sanctity of the Sabbath by all-day travelling is one of the principal reasons why our Methodist Conferences array themselves in deadly opposition to intercollegiate sports. Even Dr. Gilbert, of the "Western," who so heartily favors athletics, hesitates to give baseball "unqualified approval," because the different associations "disregard the Fourth Commandment, and violate the Sabbath." A letter received at this office a few days since from a young preacher pleads for intercollegiate games in one of our colleges, in which it is asserted that the fate of the college depends on them. We could but ask: Have the boys conspired to boycott the college in case they are denied the privilege of going abroad to play ball? A college that cannot live without intercollegiate games ought to die.

The way to put an end to lynching and other forms of mob violence is to give criminals a speedy trial and apply the penalty of the law. More than once this has been demonstrated. Disinterested persons, of course, believe that every individual charged with guilt should have ample time to make preparation for defense, and have a fair trial. At the same time they know that in the interest of justice, and for the common good, criminals should be dealt with as speedily as possible. In cases where the crime is of an aggravated nature, and the guilt a matter of notoriety, there is absolutely no reason why a delay of weeks or months should be tolerated. The law's delays, says the "Picayune," "creates impatience among the people." When the people get impatient, it is no hard matter to tempt them to take the law into their own hands. It is often the case that the trial of men charged with gross crimes is postponed for half a year or more, and then, when it is called, is allowed to go over until the next term. And so on. A conviction follows; then a rehearing is asked, and may be granted. It is tried again; the man is convicted, and takes an appeal. So it happens that years elapse before justice gets its due. As between the law's delays and the necessity for calling out the State's troops to protect a criminal, we do not know which speaks the worse for the country. It is certainly a sad state of things when the civil authorities are afraid, or are unable to execute the laws.

The "Birmingham Age-Herald" says: "Two hundred and fifty-one pulp mills are kept busy in this country turning out the product that goes into modern paper. These mills consumed last year 3,346,106 cords of wood, each cord containing 128 solid feet. A cord is, in fact, a pretty large body in itself. Spruce trees furnished sixty-four percent of the total quantity of wood consumed last year, and hemlock and poplar brought the total up to ninety per cent. The remaining ten per cent came from many species in the forest, pine, cottonwood and balsam leading the list. Scarcely any of the woods in the South are turned into pulp, and this is an additional reason why the effort at Cordele, Ga., to turn cotton plants into paper is regarded with interest. About $4 a ton is offered for cotton plants at Cordele. The wood used by the pulp mills last year cost $8.38 a cord. Imported spruce costs $10.60 a cord. It comes from Canada. Hemlock is the cheapest wood consumed at the pulp mills, its cost being but $6.02 a cord. An increasing amount of slab wood and other sawmill waste is used each year in the pulp mills. Although the supply of woods suitable for pulp making purposes is becoming less each year, yet the Aldrich tariff proposes to tax both the raw material and the completed product." This does not look to us as exactly right. It does not even seem to be good politics, looked at from any standpoint.

The courts of our country seem obliged to accept some very strange, not to say unreasonable verdicts. In a New York (State) court a man was on trial for murder—the trial consuming four weeks. The verdict of the jury read as follows: "While in our minds and opinion we, as men, regard the defendant as guilty, yet, after considering our oaths as jurors and carefully considering the evidence as placed before us, we cannot find sufficient evidence to convict, and therefore render a verdict of not guilty." No wonder the judge "scored the jury" and ordered the clerk to strike their names from the list as "available jurors." After this, can we continue to believe that a man who is of double character—one thing in private and another in public—is a dishonorable man? For the life of us, we cannot see how proof before a court is sufficient to convince a man, "as a man," that a prisoner is guilty, but is insufficient to convince that same man as a juror. Or, is it true that some men in every-day life have one sort of a character, but a different sort of a character when called on to serve his country. If so, this largely accounts for the turning loose of so many men who are clearly guilty of crime against society. In a case in Mississippi, recently tried, two men hung a jury and there was very properly reported disagreement. At the next trial three men stood for acquittal, and nine for conviction, but the nine in a little while went over to the three, and acquittal was reported. And so things go!

A correspondent of the "Western Christian Advocate," Cincinnati, calls attention to a "new peril" that confronts communities which have voted out the saloons. This correspondent says: "These ex-saloons still retain all their paraphernalia: screens, curtains, bars, pool tables, signs, etc.; evidently hoping to hold their stands until a reversal from 'dry' to 'wet' shall come. Soft drinks, lunch, pool and tobacco are the added signs, usually printed with soap on the window. Now these loafing places, with all their devices for drinking and their old habitues, are open freely to boys who dared not to frequent them under the old regime. How long will it take to debauch the moral sense of boys under such conditions? We are facing this problem; it is no trifle, either. The Young Men's Christian Association is doing much for its members. But there are few 'dry' towns that have no Young Men's Christian Association, and where they do exist saloon habitues are not joining them and paying the dues required." What is said about "ex-saloons" in Ohio is perhaps true of the saloons closed in Mississippi, and in Louisiana. If there is no law to take away the screens, curtains, etc., and shut the poolrooms, we warn Christian parents to keep their hands on their boys, and not allow them, either day or night, to visit these places. Knocking out the saloons did not knock the depravity out of the saloon-keepers. It is there still, and will be exerted to overthrow the morals of the boys. Another thing that has become popular is the "moving picture show." Some of them, according to accounts, are as full of depravity as any low theatre in New York. The worst ones have not yet reached the small towns, but they are creeping in inch by inch. Better watch them and keep your boys and girls away from them.

THE SOCIAL MESSAGE OF CHRISTIANITY.

By Rev. M. M. Black.

One of the most noticeable and encouraging signs of the times is the deep interest that is being taken in what are called "social problems," in the betterment of the lot of the masses, in the regeneration of society. In our day a new social consciousness has dawned. Thanks to the leaven of the gospel, a burning enthusiasm for humanity has been awakened, and the conviction is growing deeper and stronger every year that a Christian commonwealth should stand not only for the protection of life and property, for freedom of speech and of conscience, for the enlightenment of her sons and daughters, but also for the correction of abuses, the remedying of social ills and evils, as for example, the abolition of the liquor traffic and of the gambling evil, the rescue of childhood from slavery in mine and sweat-shop and factory, and the protection of the laboring classes from oppression.

Christian people are coming more and more to realize that Christ's purpose concerning the world is not merely to save men as individuals from sin and eternal death, but through regenerated individuals, organized and united, to save society. It is now perceived as never before that the mission of the church and of the individual Christian is to remedy the world's ills, to right its wrongs, and thus produce "a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." As Kidd, in his "Social Evolution," rightly declares: "After all, Christianity was intended to save not only men but man, and its mission shonld be to teach us not only how to die as individuals, but how to live as members of society." "Formerly," as Mr. Wm. J. Bryan well says, "the church placed emphasis upon immortality; now she is beginning to place emphasis upon life." Never before has the fact been so clearly recognized that the obligations of Christian citizenship by no means end with the payment of taxes, the exercise of the right of suffrage, and the leading of a righteous and peaceable life. Every man is a member of organized society with its manifold relations and complex conditions, and out of these social relations social responsibilities arise, for "no man liveth to himself." We are part and parcel of a complex, complicated whole, which we call society, and each citizen is in duty bound to contribute his share to its well-being.

As that eminent authority, Dr. Josiah Strong, pertinently says: "The great questions of our time are social. We are beginning to see that society lives one vast life, of which every man is a part. We are gaining what Walter Besant calls 'the sense of humanity.'"

The rise of giant monopolies in our day, the concentration of the wealth of the nation in the hands of a few capitalists and giant corporations, together with the arrogance of capital, have caused widespread discontent among the wage-earners of our country, who, because they find it hard to provide the necessaries of life for themselves and their families, are demanding a larger share in the profits of toil, and ask not for charity, but simple justice at the hands of the public. We need no prophet to tell us that industrial conditions are not what they should be, and it is as clear as the noon-day sun that something is wrong somewhere. The hard, ceaseless grind of toil in the case of thousands leaves little or no opportunity for religious worship, or for higher development. Shall the church ignore the claims and needs of the workingman, and do nothing for the improvement of his condition? To pursue such a course is both unchristian and suicidal. Can servants of the Master be true to their Lord and give little heed to the "slaughter of the innocents" in factory and sweat-shop? Are the poor in the slums of the great cities to be left to drag out a miserable existence in ignorance, filth and degradation, with but feeble effort to better their condition?

Evidence is not wanting that in many of our cities women are not infrequently driven to evil lives by cruel social and industrial conditions. In a certain large city not many years ago there lived a wealthy family, which in the course of time was overtaken by misfortune. The father died, and the property of the family was found to be heavily involved, so that there was nothing to be done except for the eldest daughter to find employment. She obtained a clerkship in a store at four dollars a week, and was expected to dress well and board herself. One day she complained to her employer that she could not make both ends meet on such low wages. He brutally said to her: "You can do as the others. You can take a companion." The heads of the firm were church goers, who deliberately paid low wages. This is but one out of hundreds of similar cases.

The belief is prevalent among the masses in the large cities that government as we have it is the creature and tool of the capitalist, and that the church is dominated by the rich and aristocratic class. Hence a large per cent of the laboring men of our country are outside the church, and are utterly indifferent to it. They feel that it has little or nothing in common with them. According to a recent religious census in Ohio, not more than ten or twelve per cent, of the working men were found to be members of the church. Materialistic literature is being widely circulated among the Socialists, who are very numerous in certain parts of the country, especially the north and east. Dr. Shailer Mathews, of Chicago, calls attention to the fact that there are scores of societies among certain nationalities of immigrants whose avowed purpose is to ridicule and destroy religion. "The masses," he declares, "are threatened with atheism. There can be little question that the drift among those struggling for social betterment is steadily toward materialism."

Sad to tell, the average citizen is thoroughly satisfied with the administration of public affairs, with existing social and industrial conditions, provided his particular business and community are prosperous. To quote again from that eminent authority, Dr. Shailer Mathews: "Speaking in a broad way, many of those conditions which give rise to social discontent have been set and are being maintained by men who are members of the church. The fact that a man is a professing Christian has not always prevented his paying too low wages, or leaving dangerous machinery exposed, or employing children, or maintaining 'pluck-me-stores.' The problem before the church is complicated and elusive. Human nature cannot be satisfactorily transformed by preparing people to live in supreme disregard of the social conditions in which they and their children must live on earth. Social evils must be remedied socially." As F. D. Maurice strikingly puts it: "We must either socialize Christianity, or Christianize sociology."

A proper conception of our civic obligation as Christians then involves not only the recognition of grievous wrongs and ills, of great economic and moral questions, but also a resolute determination to aid in the reformation of abuses, the righting of wrongs, and in the betterment of the condition of the masses. Rev. Charles Stelzle, Industrial Secretary of the Northern Presbyterian Church, unhesitatingly asserts that the church must preach a clearer social message. In a public address several months ago, he brought the following startling facts: "There are to-day all over this country thousands of men, women and children who would not listen to the gospel message, even though preached by an angel sent from heaven. I think I know why. I went to work when I was eight years old in the basement of a New York tenement house—you could call it a sweatshop to-day. We lived in two rooms in a rear tenement over near the river. My mother sewed wrappers for which she received two dollars a dozen. Many a time I would awake at two or three o'clock in the morning and find her still plying her needle, having gone supperless that we children might have all that there was to eat—sometimes it was but a bit of bread with salt sprinkled on it. If I felt that the church had no message in regard to child-labor, not as I have read about it, but as I have experienced it on the east side of New York; if it had no message with regard to the women who are working at starvation wages as my mother worked; if it cared nothing about the unsanitary conditions in the tenement houses, I tell you I would get out of the church. I would line up with some organization outside of the church that is working to wipe out these curses of our modern civilization."

Ministration to the spiritual needs of humanity must ever be the supreme mission of the church, but there is no question of the fact that ofttimes too little attention has been paid to the temporal needs of the masses, to matters of employment, shelter, relief in distress, amusements, sanitation, etc. The same divine Lord who delivered the Sermon on the Mount also sympathized with and fed the hungry multitudes, healed the sick and cast out devils. He gave to every needy and receptive soul himself—his time, his service, his sympathy, and if his servants would loyally follow in his steps to-day they must render social service and sympathy. Says a great preacher of our day: "The world does not care whether there are thirty-nine or forty-nine articles of religion, but it does care whether there is more justice, more truth, and more love." Supreme indifference to the customs and habits of our times, to social and industrial ills, as to how the masses live is, alas, true of many church members in good standing, but in the eyes of God they are far from blameless. In the graphic picture which our Lord gives of the final judgment, it is made plain that "failure to fulfill the social duties of the present age" will be the ground of exclusion from heaven. "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

Isolated, unorganized, non-co-operative effort in behalf of social reforms and philanthropic movements produces pitiably small results, and not infrequently ends in failure. The lesson of the age with its giant trusts and huge combinations of capital is that the mightiest results may be accomplished through co-operation and union of forces. Co-operation and combination of effort and resources are the watchword of the hour in the industrial and commercial world, and they should be the slogan of the church in her battle for righteousness and peace and purity in all realms. The Federal Union of the churches of Christ in America, representing thirty-three denominations and 18,000,000 communicants, which is now an accomplished fact as the result of the great Conference held in Philadelphia last December, is the harbinger of glorious success, of complete and final victory in the solution of the perplexing social problems of the age, in the great moral reform movements, which are beginning to sweep over the land like a tidal-wave. The successful fight recently made by Governor Hughes, of New York, against race-track gambling was due in large measure to the influence of the Inter-Church Federation Conference held about three years before. As Bishop Hendrix forcefully says: "Problems that seemed too great to be solved by individual churches now become opportunities to the Federated Churches in our great cities. The nation has found a voice on great moral questions greater than ever heard before. Its sound will go out into all the world."

The hour is at hand for the Christian citizens of our great Republic to unite in a grand and mighty crusade for the better protection of the home by more stringent and uniform divorce laws, for the complete overthrow of the saloon, the abolition of child labor, the prevention of stock and grain gambling, as well as of race-track gambling, the righting of unjust and oppressive industrial conditions, and the preservation of the Christian Sabbath, which is the workingman's greatest boon. May God speed the day when every social ill shall be removed, when "nothing shall hurt or destroy in all the holy mountain of the Lord," when all nations shall become one brotherhood, when

"The war-drum throbs no longer, and the battle-
flags are furled,
In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world."

MINISTERIAL COURTESY.

By Rev. Jno. W. Ramsey.

Some years ago there appeared in the columns of the "Advocate" an excellent article from the pen of Rev. R. G. Porter on "Ministerial Courtesy." The writer does not now recall the wording of that article, but the substance of it was to the effect that it is a very discourteous thing for one pastor to go into another pastor's charge to perform a marriage ceremony, to bury the dead, or to baptize the babies.

Surely, there ought to be no necessity for an article of that nature addressed to ministers of the gospel, for if the gospel teaches anything it teaches that "love doth not behave itself unseemly;" that is, it makes a gentleman of a man. And if any man ought to be a gentleman, it is a preacher—especially a Methodist preacher. But for one pastor to enter the bounds of a brother pastor's charge to marry the living or bury the dead, or baptize the babies, or to carry on a continuous correspondence with the people of a former charge after the pastoral relation has been severed, and thus keep himself between the people and his successor, is not a gentlemanly thing to do, much less is it a Christian, brotherly act.

I repeat, there ought to be no necessity for the appearance of articles in the columns of our Church papers on ministerial courtesy, for Methodist preachers ought to be instinctively courteous one toward another. But the facts are otherwise. Some will invade another pastoral charge to bury the dead, to baptize, and to marry the living. The writer knows of instances where a pastor on leaving a work would secure the promise of a young lady to send for him to perform the marriage ceremony, and later on meeting her, would say, "I hold you to your promise." Others have been known to write to people of a church on a charge other than his own asking if they desired him to assist their pastor in a meeting.

Are such things possible among Methodist preachers? Yes, not only possible, but are actually done, and that too by men who preach a gospel of courteous conduct and gentlemanly bearing one toward another. How can those who do such things consistently preach a gospel of brotherly love—the love that "doth not behave itself unseemly?"

We are living in the twentieth century, an age of advanced civilization and enlightenment, and preachers who are guilty of such discourteous conduct toward their brethren in the ministry cannot be accused of ignorance or thoughtlessness. They know better, and they do not forget. What excuse then, if any, can we make for them? How are we to account for their conduct? The writer knows of no way to explain their action except upon the basis of inherent depravity, and whether the depravity is total he is not prepared just now to say. His present knowledge of psychology does not enable him to speak positively of the nature of this grade of depravity—whether it be regular in its action, or spasmodic and fitful; and he hopes that its peculiar manifestations will soon cease, so he will not need to pursue his investigations of its character.

There is another phase of this subject, however, that seems to demand immediate attention, that, if possible, a remedy may be discovered. Every one has seen the nicest and finest shades of courtesy in men of other professions toward one another. For instance, the medical fraternity are exceeding courteous, so much so that regardless of the seriousness of one's illness, another physician would not respond to a call without the consent of the physician who is treating the case. Now, the question is how to get preachers to be as courteous toward one another as are the members of the medical fraternity, or for that matter, to exhibit on all occasions, the same sense of courtesy as do men of other callings in life. This has never been done, and great honor awaits him who discovers the means, or shows the way. May the Lord soon raise up that man, as he did Moses, the leader of Israel.

Still, this is going to be a difficult task, for it seems that some preachers are not instinctively courteous, their natures do not tend that way, nor can they be taught it. And what is most surprising of all, though they live in an age of Christian enlightenment, and preach a gospel of Christian courtesy, they simply won't even absorb it.

But if some Methodist preachers are not couteous by nature, cannot be taught it, and won't absorb it, what then? How can they be cured of their distemper? What can be done? Nothing, absolutely nothing. Like the stream which flows on its way undisturbed by the pebbles that may be thrown into it, they must also go on their way, hurting their brethren and bringing them many a heart-burning, till they, like the stream, finish their course.

But cannot something be done that the preachers of the future may be more courteous in their relations with their brethren? Yes, something can be done. The writer suggests that such articles as that written by Rev. R. G. Porter on "Ministerial courtesy" be stereotyped and kept on the front page of our Church papers, and let our Bishops in their addresses to young preachers instruct them in this matter, and also let this subject be included in the course of study.

The writer cannot imagine St. Paul (who said "Be kindly affectioned one to another, in honor preferring one another") being discourteous toward the other apostles; nor can he think of Christ who said ("Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them") being otherwise than courteous toward his disciples, though he was their Lord and Master. And shall not Methodist preachers follow the example of their Lord, whose gospel they preach?

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE BRETHREN.

Over a half century has passed since I became identified as an itinerant preacher with Methodism in the States of Mississippi and Louisiana. True, the services rendered may not have been worthy of any special record to others, yet through them I have been wonderfully blessed of God. Since June 1st I have been held prisoner to bed and chair and to improve the passing moments, I have been reading The History of Methodism, as Connected with the Mississippi Conference, Vol. 2, Rev. Jno. G. Jones, historian.

I wonder if the preachers and laity of Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana and Texas are aware of the debt of gratitude due by them to Rev. Jno. G. Jones for the preservation of data, and the compiling into a few volumes facts concerning the labors of Methodism spreading over a vast territory of the Southern States, not obtainable elsewhere? I rejoice that I have had personal companionship with some of these heroes of the cross.

As a child, in New Orleans, La., I sat under the ministry of W. M. Curtis, W. R. Nicholson and Chas. P. Clark. Brothers Nicholson and Clark went over to the Protestant Episcopal Church and later on Brother Nicholson became one of their Bishops.

In the early years of my ministry I became quite familiar by roll-call with the names of Ben. M. Drake, B. Pitkin, Thomas Clinton, Lewell Campbell, James Walton, John B. Higginbotham, S. W. Speer, John Lambert and others. In Vol. II mention is made of Rev. Isaac V. Enochs. I wonder if he was the father of Fletcher, Isaac V. Jr., and Capt. Jas. Enochs—a noble band of stalwart Methodist laymen of Copiah and Hinds Counties, known by many of my co-adjutors in the ministry? I was unaware of the noble lineage of Mrs. W. R. Stuart, of Ocean Springs, Miss., until I read the record of her grandfather, Rev. John, and her father, Rev. Hamilton McCanley. I now cease to wonder at her devotion and consecration, and her untiring efforts, while a confirmed invalid, in sustaining Methodism in her present home-town—when gathered to her fathers, let it be written upon her tomb-stone: "She hath done what she could."

Chapter 24, Vol. II, mention is made of the adhesion of Rev. Ben. A. Houghton to the Northern division of the Methodist Church and his closing hours of life. In 1853 at the Summer home of Rev. Elias Porter, Ocean Springs, Miss., I, as an invalid boarder in said home—was priviledged to be in the room of Rev. B. A. Houghton, as the sands of the hour-glass of time were with him rapidly passing, when he requested of those present to sing, "O sing to me of heaven, 'when I am called to die.'" As we sang, his face lit up with a heavenly glow, but too feeble to join in the singing, with eyes open, upturned as if expecting any minute the coming of the angelic chariot, he waited until we began the last verse, then closed his eyes; when we finished he was asleep in Jesus. I then knew not the noble record of his life-work, recorded in Brother Jones' History. Ah, my young brother minister, you will make no mistake in your ambitions as a preacher to have a similar record of eloquence and faith ascribed to Rev. Ashley Hewitt. See page 263. Rev. Dr. Talley was asked how he enjoyed the sermon. "Oh," said he, "it liked to have killed me! My earthly vessel was so full, it was ready to break and let my enraptured soul fly away toward heaven." Read pages 264, 265 and 266 of a faith triumphant, even when the wife said, "Nancy is really dead."

I say glory to God for "a faith that laughs at impossibilities, and cries 'it shall be done.'" To many, it may be helpful to read pages 476-478, of a great victory given Rev. Lewell Campbell, when, as a presiding elder, Satan kept him constantly annoyed by injecting into his mind fear of harm to loved ones at home. I thank God, Brother Campbell made no claim of patent right to the remedy discovered; it is free, perfect and lasting as the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ.

In these days when we read of "Blasting the Rock of Ages," "A Blast at the Blaster," etc., it will do your soul good, stiffen your backbone, unlimber your stiff knees, surge your soul with hallilujas, and "glory to God" that the Lord God Omnipotent yet reigneth, as you read the preserved record by Brother Jno. G. Jones of our fathers in Israel—proving the Scripture true,

"They that honor me, I will honor."

WHITWORTH COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The forty-ninth Annual Commencement of Whitworth Female College has just closed. The splendid success of the past session adds another brilliant chapter to the history of its magnificent achievements. There has been an enrollment during the session of 227 students.

The Commencement exercises from first to last were in every way creditable both to the student body and the president and his excellent faculty.

The splendid attendance of the public upon these exercises was a flattering testimonial to the undiminished interest in the welfare of this historic institution. On Sunday morning May 30, Rev. W. T. Bolling, D.D., of the Memphis Conference, preached the Commencement sermon to a large and appreciative audience. The writer did not hear the Doctor's sermon, but has been informed that he missed a great discourse. Rev. W. M. Williams, of the Mississippi Conference, preached a fine sermon to the Y. M. C. A. Sunday night.

The Alumni meeting monday morning, May 31, was a notable feature of the Commencement exercises. The array of cultured women paying honors to their much loved alma mater was inspiration to the friends of the college. The address was delivered by Dr. Bolling in his usual forceful style. The concert Monday night was highly entertaining and evidenced masterful training in the beautiful arts of music and elocution. The rendition of the beautifully varied programme attested the extraordinary talent of the young ladies chosen for the occasion.

Tuesday, June 1, was Graduation Day—a day that will ever live in the memory of those who received their merited diplomas as marking a beautiful epoch in life. The elegant and timely address delivered by the Hon. J. N. Powers was followed by the presentation of diplomas by Dr. I. W. Cooper.

The following is the list of the graduates who received the A. B. degree and were awarded diplomas: Misses Wessie Eula Brumfield, Florence Estelle Granberry, Verne Manon Pigford, Bessie Chichester Cooper and Maude White.

Those receiving the B. L. degree were: Misses Marie Ellis, Sallie May Griffin, Eva Dorothy Herren, Eva Alice Jones, May Vergie Smith, Willie Doris Stevens.

Other awards were made as follows: Diploma in expression, Miss Lucile Lynch; diplomas in commercial course, Misses Myrtle Bine, Katie Clark and Rhoda McLemore; certificate in piano, Miss Ackie Grant; in expression, Miss Ruby Smith; certificates in book-keeping: Misses Hallie Bridwell, Willie Belle Cox, Edna Crawford and Ethel Smith.

The scholarship medals were awarded as follows: Senior medal, Miss Wessie Brumfield; Junior medal, Miss Mary Berry; Sophomore medal, Miss May Neal Ellis; Freshman medal, Miss Gertrude Davis; Sub-Freshman medal, Miss Talulah Lipscomb; Preparatory medal, Miss Ruby McLemore. Miss Ella Meyers won the medal for expression in art.

The board of trustees commended Dr. Cooper for the improvements added to the property and the excellent sanitary conditions which he has carefully maintained.

The opportunities offered by Whitworth College for Christian education are inferior to none in the State. The Methodists of Mississippi ought to put it on a competitive basis with any institution for female education in the South. We are able.

J. T. LEGGETT.

"MOTHERS" DAY.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The tender remarks on "Mothers' Day" in a recent issue of the Advocate by Rev. W. L. Blackwell, of Vicksburg, Miss., touched a sympathetic chord in my heart and I kindly beg leave to add a few words with my hearty indorsement of his sentiments.

I have often wondered in these latter days of memorial observances of almost every conceivable nature why the mother sentiment had been crowded out, and out of a thankful heart I praise him (who though hanging painracked on the cruel cross forgot not the welfare of his mother) that I have been permitted to see faint gleams of the dawning of a day set apart by the nation in loving remembrance of the mothers of our glorious commonwealth, than whom no others deserve quite so much praise, for truly it has been said that "the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world."

So, while we twine garlands to the memory of our noble and illustrious sons who have passed off of the stage of action, let's pause and pile high our most beautiful laurels in honor of the mothers who gave men birth and rearing.

Tell me of a noble, true and virtuous manhood, and I'll tell you of a pure, sweet and loving spirit who found her most blissful happiness in pressing a tiny form to her bosom and singing softly a tender lullaby or placing a loving hand on a precious little head and whispering trustingly:

"Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray thee Lord my soul to keep. If I should die before I wake, I pray thee Lord my soul to take. Bless papa and mama, bless me and make me a good little boy, bless everybody, for Jesus' sake." Then the good-night kiss and the gentle tuck of the cover, while a silent prayer ascends for wisdom to guide the little one into all truth and righteousness.

Later in life when the time comes to go out from the home nest for the first time, we see her again slipping a copy of the Bible into his grip with words something like these written on the fly-leaf: "Read this Book daily my boy, for mother's sake."

Then the sweet, comforting, encouraging epistles are often sent reminding him of his obligations to his country and his God, sealed with a mother's kiss and sent with a mother's love and prayers.

Tell me not that Christian mothers are not the stay of our nation, and it affords me much happiness to place this tribute to their memories.

If there has been anything in my life worth while, I owe it principally to the influence of my beautiful, sainted mother. I doubt not that there are times in all of our lives when our hearts crave to live over again the sweet days of childhood, and we find ourselves repeating in the language of another who had known a mother-love:

"Backward, turn backward, oh time, in thy flight,
Make me a child again just for to-night!"
Mother, come back from that echoless shore
And take me again to your arms as of yore—
Your loving watch keep,
Rock me to sleep, mother; rock me to sleep!"

It was my blessed privilege to attend the Woman's Mome Mission Conference at Corinth, Miss., recently, and on Sunday "Mothers' Day" was observed by the Sunday School.

Almost every man, woman and child wore a white blossom in honor of mother. Everyone present received quite an inspiration as a class of ninety-five stalwart men marched from their study, each wearing a white carnation in loving memory of their mothers.

The superintendent made a short, but timely and appropriate talk. He held up a small, beautiful Bible, and said it was given him by his mother, whom God called from him when he was only two years of age, and on the fly-leaf she had written a prayer. He said that prayer had helped him more than all the books he had ever read and all that he had attained to as a Christian was due to that little Bible and that prayer, and that he expects to meet and know her one glad day in heaven.

Dr. Boswell, the Christian mothers and their Bibles have piloted many thousands safely into the glory land.

Only the other day, I sat with a young man by the bedside of his dying, invalid mother, who was one of the most consecrated Christians I have ever known, and he said to me, "Since I have gone to the city many temptations have been thrown about me, but the counsel and prayers of this frail little mother of mine have proven sufficient, her sweet, earnest face would stand out before me and I could not yield. "How can I live without her?"

I thank God devoutly for the Christian mothers of our land, and shall gladly hail the time when a day will have been set apart to meet yearly as a nation and pay them the homage they so richly deserve.

THE JACKSON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Jackson District Conference convened at Mendenhall, in the Methodist Church, at 9 o'clock a. m. After appropriate religious exercises conducted by the presiding elder, Rev. J. R. Jones, the session was called to order.

Rev. C. F. Emery was elected secretary, with Rev. J. E. Gray assistant. All the preachers in the district except four were present. Ten laymen only attended as delegates.

The following visitors were introduced to the Conference: Revs. T. W. Adams, J. C. Chambers, W. H. Saunders, G. W. Bachman, H. G. Hawkins, Dr. I. W. Cooper, Revs. L. E. Alford, W. M. Pinson, L. J. Caughman (pastor local Baptist church), W. M. Williams, Prof. J. E. Walmsley, Rev. W. W. Pinson (representing the Board of Missions), R. Selby (Conference Secretary of Education), W. Fred Long, Mr. O. F. Turner (editor of the "Search Light," a paper published in Jackson in the interest of the Law Enforcement League).

The following brethren addressed the Conference:

Rev. G. W. Bachman, representing the Publishing House.

Rev. L. E. Alford, representing the Board of Church Extension, among other things requested the brethren to apply for loans, instead of asking for donations.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, representing the Committee on Conference Relations, urged prompter collections for this worthy cause.

Rev. H. G. Hawkins gave an interesting account of the work being done at Port Gibson Female College.

Prof. J. E. Walmsley gave a very encouraging report of Millsaps College. There had not been a serious case of sickness during the session; a splendid revival meeting had been held, and every member of the faculty was a worker in some department of the Church.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, president of Whitworth College, delivered an eloquent address on Christian Education, and gave a very gratifying account of the work done by the worthy institution that he represented.

Rev. C. F. Emery, secretary of the joint hospital committee of the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences, offered a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the Mississippi Conference to memorialize the General Conference to create a Hospital Board, and to provide for the establishment of one or more Methodist Hospitals.

The various charges in the district were called and careful inquiry was made as required by the Discipline. The reports of the pastors showed the work committed to them prospering. Revivals had been held in several charges and planned in others, resulting in many conversions and accessions to the Church. There seems to be a general and unusual awakening in home religion evidenced by the erection of many family altars. Several new churches have been built. The financial reports were very encouraging. One young preacher reported that he had baptized 78 children. An aggressive campaign seems to be on for increasing the circulation of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Sermons were preached by Revs. J. S. Purcell, L. L. Roberts, T. B. Clifford, W. F. Long, J. E. Gray, W. W. Pinson and J. C. Ward.

Canton and Brandon were nominated, and the first named was chosen as the place for holding the next session of the Conference.

Judge A. G. Norrell and Brother J. E. B. Blewett delivered stirring addresses on the Laymen's Missionary forward movement.

Rev. R. Selby delivered an able address on Christian Education.

A resolution offered by a young preacher, a student of Millsaps College, requesting the Mississippi Conference to submit to the trustees and faculty of that institution the disposition of the much mooted contention for intercollegiate games, was very promptly tabled.

Rev. W. N. Pinson, chairman of the State Law and Order Enforcement League, whose vigorous work as a detective has unearthed so much violation of law, delivered a forceful address and urged that local organizations be established throughout the State.

Charles C. Anderson was granted license to preach, and James F. Campbell was recommended for admission on trial. Everette L. Marvin voluntarily surrendered his credentials as a local deacon.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: A. G. Norrell, C. L. Ray, R. W. Millsaps and J. C. Cavett. Alternates: J. P. Bennett and N. A. Mott. T. P. Barr and A. G. Norrell were elected to fill vacancies on the Board of Trustees of the district parsonage.

A resolution was adopted authorizing the trustees to dispose of the present district parsonage in Jackson and to buy or build a new one without delay. The following committee was appointed: R. W. Millsaps, T. P. Barr, I. C. Enochs and A. G. Norrell.

Rev. C. F. Emery offered a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the Annual Conference to memorialize the General Conference to create the lay members of the various conference boards members of the Annual Conference.

Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt read the following resolutions relative to the death of Bishop C. B. Galloway, which were adopted by a rising vote, after which Rev. G. S. Harmon offered prayer.

RESOLUTIONS ON THE DEATH OF BISHOP GALLOWAY.

Whereas, our heavenly Father has recently called our beloved Bishop Charles B. Galloway to his reward on high; therefore be it resolved by the Jackson District Conference:

First—That it is with feelings of no ordinary sense of bereavement that we realize the death of one who was endeared to us by so many of the strongest of earthly ties.

Second—That in the death of Bishop Galloway the Methodist Church, the State of Mississippi and the entire nation have sustained a loss which no language can express and no thought can measure.

Third—That while we are grateful to God for having given us through his beneficent providence one so eminently worthy of all appreciation and affection, we bow with reverent submission to the will of him who doeth all things well.

Fouth—That we would convey to his bereaved widow and children an expression of our sincere sympathy in their sorrow.

Signed, W. L. C. Hunnicutt, J. E. Walmsley, G. S. Harmon, committee.

The following licensing committee, on nomination of the presiding elder, to act ad interim, was elected: Revs. C. W. Crisler, C. F. Emery, J. W. Ward and W. W. Morse.

Rev. W. M. Williams, manager of the Mississippi Orphans' Home, gave a very interesting account of that splendid institution, and urged that the pastors uniformly adopt the systematic method of raising funds for the support of the home by giving the incidental collection of one Sunday in every month. The present building is taxed to its utmost capacity, and new buildings are urgently needed. Liberal contributions have already been made for this purpose, and steps will be taken at once to secure the balance and begin work as early as practicable. Brother Williams is universally conceded to be the right man in the right place.

The local preachers were passed in examination of character, and their licenses were renewed.

The reports of the several boards and committees were read and adopted.

A vote of thanks was adopted by a rising vote, thanking the people of Mendenhall for their hospitality; the host of the Conference, Rev. H. A. Gatlin, and the Secretary of the Conference.

Rev. J. R. Jones, the new presiding elder, presided with grace and dignity as though acquired by years of experience. At all times affable and courteous, he directed affairs so that the business of the session was transacted rapidly and to the satisfaction of all, every interest of the church being fully and carefully inquired into.

Conference adjourned sine die at noon Friday, the 11th inst., with benediction by the presiding elder.

C. F. EMERY.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Baton Rouge District Conference held its sessions June 1 to 4 at Slaughter, where hospitality and good-will abounded. Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt and his people entertained royally.

Our new presiding elder, Rev. C. C. Miller, presided with tact, and gave due attention to the various interests of which a district conference should take cognizance. The outlook on the district appears to be good. Special prominence was given to prayers and preaching. There were showers of blessings (and torrents of rain). The preaching had the evangelistic note. Behind each messenger Sinai could be discerned, and before him the cross appeared. Sermons were delivered by Revs. J. M. Henry, Walton, Freeman, McCormack, Alford and Riggs.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement meeting resulted in Judge R. R. Reid, of Amite, being chosen district leader.

Rev. J. M. Henry made masterful addresses on missions and church extension.

The Sunday School work was stressed by Mr. Ellzey and Miss Juden. H. W. Knickerbocker represented the American Bible Society. Rev. R. W. Vaughan made an eloquent plea for the Orphanage. Rev. C. B. Carter, commissioner of education, made a lively address on education in true Brisconic style.

The "New Orleans Christian Advocate" was well represented by Rev. J. M. Henry.

Mr. Fisher, of the Anti-Saloon League, rang out a few telling notes.

One young man was licensed to preach, viz., J. H. McLean. D. M. Griffin was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial. The following were elected lay delegates to the Annual Conference: Judge R. R. Reid, Wm. Jackson, W. H. Underwood and T. J. Reams.

A movement was started to secure a district parsonage. The following trustees were elected: R. R. Reid, J. R. Abels, W. W. Babington, R. H. Benton, Dr. A. R. Holcombe, F. H. Holden and V. E. Eskridge.

A memorial service was held in honor of the late Bishop C. B. Galloway. Touching addresses were made by Judge Reid and Rev. J. M. Henry.

The Conference will meet at Bogalusa next year.

Fourteen Good Reasons for Patronizing Grenada College

First—The unexcelled Home Comforts, unequaled anywhere else in the State.

Second—The Health Conditions; we rarely require the service of a physician.

Third—Our unusually skilled corps of teachers, whom we were able to secure only by paying a salary much above that paid by other girls' schools of the State.

Fourth—The Fine Arts Department, unequaled in the State and unexcelled in the South. Our teacher of Art studied in Germany and France, and our teachers of Music are graduated from the best Conservatories of America.

Fifth—See Descriptive Course of Study, which is conscientiously carried out as indicated.

Sixth—The Lyceum Course, which is superior even to that sustained in the University of Mississippi.

Seventh—The Library, which is fuller and better adapted than that of most girls' schools of the South.

Eighth—Strong Christian Influence dominating all instruction.

Ninth—Personal Attention to the Individual Pupil, with a view to develop the best even out of peculiarities of character.

Tenth—A superior Student Body as Associates, since most of the indifferent have been eliminated.

Eleventh—The Rates are lower than those of any other school doing the same grade of work, owing to the Conference Assessment, which gives us an income not possessed by other schools; further, we have no stockholders to whom we are forced to pay dividends, as are some private schools. Our patrons receive back in excellence of service more than they pay in.

Twelfth—We place but two girls in a room, while most schools put from two to six.

Thirteenth—We require our teachers to continue study. Two are in Europe, two in Chicago, others at other schools in North and East.

Fourteenth—All these superior features enable us to turn out a larger percentage of graduates, who take high stand in the educational world, than any other school in the State. It means something to hold a diploma of the Grenada College.

"POWER FOR SERVICE."

This is a book of 261 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It is from the press of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Following is the quarterly report of Hattiesburg District:

We have nine societies on this new district. At Court Street, Hattiesburg, a Young People's Society has been organized, with fourteen members, and called the Nevada Martin Society for our missionary. A Juvenile Society has been organized with nineteen members and named for Miss Hallie Buie, our recently-appointed missionary to Korea. Forty-one names have been secured for our Buds and Blossoms roll. All this in less than a month for Court Street makes a district secretary's heart rejoice. Eleven names have been added to the Woman's Society also. The pastor's wife, Mrs. Geo. H. Thompson, is president of the Woman's Society and the leader of all the missionary work of the Woman's Societies of the church. To her we owe much for this live missionary spirit among the ladies and young people of Court Street Church. She is doing all she can for the development of the work there.

Twenty-five new members have been added to the roll in the district. We hope to make this new district one of the best in the Conference.

SALLIE SMYLIE FERGUSON,
District Secretary.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The following report, written by Mrs. A. W. Evans, Press Superintendent, and published in the "Mount Olive Progress" of June 11, shows the good work being done by the ladies of that auxiliary:

"The regular meeting of the W. H. M. Society was held at the M. E. Church, South, Monday at 4 o'clock, fifteen members and three visitors being present. After devotional exercises and reading of the minutes, reports were given by the captains of each of the four companies, who have been raising money during the past month for improving the church. The reports were indeed gratifying and encouraging. Company No. 1 turned over to the local treasurer, $29; No. 2, $5.50; No. 3, $7; No. 4, $11; total, $52.50. The report of the committee for securing honorary members was made which resulted in 50 names being added to the list and $50 to the treasury for local work. The local treasurer reported $141 raised during the quarter ending May 31. The connectional treasurer reported $9.21 sent to the conference treasurer. The corresponding secretary reported 168 visits made to the sick and strangers, 115 papers and leaflets distributed, $17.75 expended in helping the poor and 24 garments given to the needy."

The following was taken from the same paper under date of June 18:

"The contract was given to our fellow-townsman, A. W. McDaniel, and the color unanimously agreed upon was pure white. The painting will be done at once, and in the meantime the society will set about to raise funds to remodel the inside of the church."

It is indeed encouraging to know of the rapid and gratifying growth of the Woman's Home Mission Societies in the Mississippi Conference, and we hope that this will continue until there is a live, wide-awake Woman's Home Mission Society in every church in the conference, and we call on the pastors to help us in this work. Our corresponding secretary, Mrs. B. F. Lewis, sends the following report for the quarter ending May 31:

"During the quarter, six new auxiliaries have been organized, and we have a total of 1537 members; thirteen boxes have been sent to the Orphans' Home and 2253 visits have been made to sick and strangers. We have raised during the quarter for all purposes $2460.10."

The corresponding secretary informs us that the claims of Edwards and Homewood have been paid and that we have now over $130 in Nashville to our credit. When we realize how much good is being done in helping build parsonages and churches in places that need help, we wish that our means knew no bounds.

The report of the Press Superintendent, Mrs. J. C. Clark, of Main Street, Laurel, contains the following extracts:

"Report of the first vice-president, Mrs. L. B. McCarty, was very interesting. She suggested two ways of raising money for our 'Charity and Help' fund. One was to purchase a small bank to be passed around at each meeting and any amount from a penny up could be dropped into this bank, thereby keeping on hand a reserve fund for our 'Charity and Help' work. The other way was for each member of the society to pot a nice plant, and late in the fall or winter to have a sale of these plants, the proceeds to be applied to the same work of charity."

"The visiting committee reported eighteen visits to sick and strangers this month. The Home Mission Society of Laurel Main Street Methodist Church reported more visits to sick and strangers at the Annual Conference than any other society in the conference."

"The great need of a night school in the cotton mill district was ably presented by Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, and various means of raising money to assist in this good work were suggested. Mrs. L. D. Simmons suggested that we secure as many honorary members to the society as we could and apply the money to this work. Mrs. Hobbs then called for a volunteer committee to solicit and collect contributions for the night school work. The following ladies responded: Mrs. O. C. Hunt, chairman; Mrs. G. B. Landrum and Mrs. Scott Steppe."

Mrs. Clark concludes her report by announcing the subject for the next meeting and then adds these words: "Watch this column for particulars." All business firms must advertise in order to succeed. The example of this wide-awake press superintendent would be a good one for the Home Mission Societies of the Mississippi Conference to follow.

MRS. J. L. NEILL, Press Supt.

A HARLEQUINADE.

"Too little of the permanent assets of the University stands to the credit of the Church. It is time we were showing our appreciation in a substantial way of the noble work which Vanderbilt has wrought."

These are the closing words of the (Nashville) Christian Advocate's account of the recent meeting of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust.

We have been hearing this in various forms for the past fifteen or twenty years. It has usually been in the form of a question after this fashion: "What has the Methodist Church ever done for Vanderbilt University?" And its inspiration could usually be traced to the academic shades of the University itself.

Answering, I venture to state that the Methodist Church has furnished the talent that has administered the affairs of the institution which has become great in her hands. She has given to it her moral support, which is not a negligible quantity. And she has supplied the patronage and student body, without which it could not have lived. Even the gifted Chancellor, who, it is said, feels restive under church ownership and control, is a product of the Methodist Church. Without these, what could the money of the Vanderbilts have accomplished?

So, everything considered, the most valuable assets of the University stand to the credit of the Church. Their permanency depends upon the future conduct of those who direct its course.

But for the fostering care of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the University would not now be the object of the lustful designs of the secularizing influences prevalent in educational circles.

For what purpose is this old friend thus tricked out and again brought forward? What part is he now to play? Is he to divert us by his droll tricks of speech? Or does the (Nashville) Christian Advocate's writer suppose for one moment that the denominational pride can be spurred into a charge under a leader of so strange a [illegible]? The performance is nauseating to

MULE AS A MONEY RAISER.

When Missouri Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, meets at Savannah this summer, the Rev. H. R. Cooper, the agent appointed by the Conference to raise an endowment of $100,000 for the benefit of aged preachers and their widows, expects to report the successful completion of his task. He has already raised about $75,000.

Down amid the cotton woods of Audrain County sleeps a typical Missouri mule, which departed this life at the age of thirty. To this mule and the story connected with it Mr. Cooper does homage for the success which has followed his efforts in raising the endowment fund.

When the assignment was made by the Bishop two years ago Mr. Cooper realized that he had hard work ahead. Some of the churches were taxed to their utmost to meet the various obligations for missionary and church extension work, and to pile $100,000 on top of that looked like crowding the mourners; but Mr. Cooper took up his task cheerfully.

He had been in Conference thirty years, twenty of which he was presiding elder, and he had become something of a philosopher. He knew that his appeal for the poor preachers and the widows would have to be something out of the ordinary if it was to reach further down into the pockets of his people.

After he had toured the State a little while someone told him about Brother Smith's old mule down in Audrian County. He went there and investigated and came back home with a smile upon his face. Then he began telling the people about the four-footed patriarch, so:

"Brother Jim Jones was a Methodist of the old school; always at his place in church, ready to shout, sing or pray with the best of them. He never cheated in a horse trade, never lied about the qualities of his dogs, and was always honest with his neighbors and his God.

"Among his stock was old Bill Crow, a black mule nearly a third of a century old. His service had been almost as long as his years. One morning Brother Jones hitched Bill Crow up to the plow and started across the field.

"'Git up!' said Brother Jones.

"Bill Crow didn't move. He just turned his head and looked kinder mournfullike at his boss and then laid down. His working days were over.

"Brother Jones saw that, because it was the first time Bill Crow had ever refused to move when commanded. He went up and looked into the mule's eyes and saw tears in them. He knew Bill Crow had done the best he could, and that he hated to quit. There was no help for it, and so he turned the old mule out in the woods to die.

"That night Brother Jones' boy, Joe, came to him and said:

"'Pap, what've you done with old Bill Crow?'

"'Why, son, he fell down at the plow this morning and so I turned him out to die. Guess his working days are over.'

"'You turned old Bill Crow out to die?'

"'Why, sure; he ain't no good any more.'

"'But, see here, pap; ain't he been working all his life for you?'

"'He sure has, son, and he worked good, too.'

"'And you goin' to church every Sunday and singing: "I want to be an angel?" Pap, do you reckon an angel would 'a' treated old Bill Crow that way after he worked for him all this time?'

"This was putting the thing in a new light, and the old man began to feel like he had been pretty mean to old Bill Crow. He spoke to his wife about it, and she told him if he didn't go out and get Bill Crow and bring him to the barn and feed him and treat him well from this on she'd leave him. Every person about the place seemed to think that Brother Jones had treated his old mule outrageously mean.

"Brother Jones got so ashamed of himself that he sneaked down into the woods and hunted up the old mule and brought him back, and from that time on every day was Sunday to old Bill Crow."

The story of old Bill Crow excites the sympathy of the congregation before they see the application, and when the story is finished Mr. Cooper stands up his aged preacher and asks them if they are not going to be as good to him as Brother Jones was to his old mule. The homely illustration has done more to open up pocketbooks than a world of fine spoken oratory could have done.

People have sent checks by the scores, with letters saying that the mule story had so worked on their feelings that they just had to do something for the old preachers. Many who had never before contributed to such a fund have seen the application and have resolved that they would be as good to men as they would be to mules. The story put them in good humor, and when you get people to laughing they are likely to be generous.

Under the old regime the preachers on the shelf received from $75 to $200 a year, never enough to enable them to live in comfort. Some had toiled out their lives, giving their surplus salary to the good of the cause, and then found old age and decrepitude upon them without any nest egg for the rainy day. It was to meet this plain duty to the old fighters that the endowment fund was proposed, by which it is hoped to care for the needy in a manner befitting their long service.—From the New York Sun.

CLUB RATES.

The club rates for 1909 are as follows:

For clubs of five or more, we will send the "Advocate" for $1.50 each.

In clubs of ten or more we will send the "Advocate" for $1.25 each. In either club we allow a commission of 25 cents on each subscriber, which we expect the person securing the club to retain when making remittance to us. We make no distinction between old and new subscribers in the clubs. The only condition is that you secure enough names to obtain the club rate and that all arrearages be paid. We have made these clubs small enough, that no one should send in a club asking for the club rate until he has the necessary number. After you have once secured your club, you may continue to add to it until the next Annual Conference, at the same rate, sending one at a time if you wish.

Any preacher who so desires, may send the full amount of the club rate, letting his subscribers have "Go Forward," instead of the commission. We will only send "Go Forward" when there is a request for it. To make the matter still more plain, if possible, when we receive five or more names accompanied by $1.50 for each name, we will give a year's subscription to "Go Forward" to each of these persons, if we are asked to do so at the time the names are sent in. When we receive ten or more names, accompanied by $1.25 each, and the request to send "Go Forward," we will do so.

When checks are sent us for $2 or under, add 10 cents to cover cost of collection. A check for $1 is only worth 90 cents to us. When we have to pay the collecting fee, we will give credit on subscription only so far as the balance after paying for collection of check will carry said subscription

Two men were having an argument as to their respective strengths. "Why," said the first, "every morning before breakfast I get a bucket and pull up ninety gallons from the well." "That's nothing," retorted the other, "I get a boat every morning and pull up the river."

OUR METHODIST MACHINERY.

One of the editorial brethren declares that so far as the ministry is concerned, "the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is one of the finest and most effective religious organizations in the world." As to the Church itself he says, "It is not so well organized," and proceeds to point out its defects.

We do not claim perfection for the Church's running machinery, but we feel persuaded that if the machinery as it is could be kept in motion according to the directions found in the Discipline, the friction would be so slight as to escape notice, and the results so wonderful that if taken "knowledge of" by other churches they would be "provoked to love and good works."

We are in hearty accord with every movement at all adapted to produce greater efficiency in the working forces of the Church, but we are not in sympathy with those who attribute failure anywhere or to any extent to the lack of democracy in our Church government. That is the biggest kind of a humbug turned loose to buzz about among the people in the effort to make them believe that they are deprived of their share of government in the Church. Those who swing this bug around, overlook the fact, else do not know, that the General Conference, the law-making body of the Church, is composed of an equal number of laymen and preachers, which makes it thoroughly representative of the people. That is the essence of democracy.

We challenge those who clamor for more democracy to look into those things which concern the laity more than anything else. It will not be a great task for them to learn that the lay men, and the women too, have as much work laid out for them as they are able and willing to perform. In confirmation of this, we ask the reader to turn to those sections of the Discipline that map out work in behalf of Home and Foreign Missions; for the Joint Boards of Finance, and every section that deals with the collection and disbursement of money. Especially do we insist on a thorough study of the Church Conference. This Conference, along with lay-delegation in the Annual and General Conferences, was provided for in 1866. It was hailed, as was lay-representation, as a long step towards democratic government in Episcopal Methodism. Now take the regulations of the Church Conference in connection with the chapter on the support of the ministry and it will be seen that each local Church not only has much to do in supervising its own spiritual interests, but has absolute control of its finances. The Annual Conference itself, according to an Episcopal decision cannot override the order of the Church Conference. See Paragraph 591, Discipline 1906, page 337.

And when in addition we consider that preachers are made from the ranks of the laity; not one of whom can be laid hold of and utilized in any capacity by an Annual Conference without receiving first the recommendation of a Quarterly Conference, and then the authority of a District Conference, both of which are controlled by the laity, it seems clear that little ground is left to complain of the lack of democracy in our government.

That the Church has been slow in utilizing the laity, men and women, is true. Now that the importance of putting everybody to work is recognized, and open doors are seen in all directions, there is nothing in the way of any one who has a mind to help. If there ever was a time when the ministry of Methodism was unwilling to divide the Church's tasks with the brethren, that time has passed. The preachers are more than willing to accept any help that may be offered. The lack of democracy does not hinder. Nothing stands in the way, except the lack of consecration and sacrifice—the giving of one's self to God, and willingness to surrender worldly means to his service.

As well as we are able to determine the machinery of the Church is in good running order. It needs only to be put in motion and run to the limits of its capacity. If those who desire more democracy in the Church will begin with the Church Conference which by the way, is almost unknown in some charges, and has had a fair show in but few, and watch the working of the machine all the way up to and through the General Conference, we think they will be fairly convinced that the membership is fully represented, and that what is needed is not more personal liberty or power, but more of personal life and energy.

Only one thing in the Church is undemocratic, viz.: Our method of supplying the Church with pastors. This is lodged in the hands of the Episcopacy. Herein is secured the safety of both the Church and the preachers. About this we may have more to say at another time.

HELP THOSE WOMEN.

St. Paul's exhortation, "help those women," is invariably relied on by our sisters, and the brethren, too, whenever and wherever the women of the Church stand in need of encouragement or material aid. They quote as though the apostle meant that they should co-operate with the women in all their laudable Church work. The two women alluded to, Euodias and Syntyche, were doubtless Church lovers and Church workers—possibly deaconesses, who labored with St. Paul, but it was not "help" to carry on the work that he had in mind. The two, though good women, and Paul's helpers, had a falling out. If they did not quarrel, the disagreement was serious and hurtful, so much so as to attract the apostle's attention and call for his intervention. He first exhorts the women themselves: "I beseech Euodias and beseech Syntyche that they be of the same mind in the Lord;" and, as if this was not sufficient, he says: "I entreat thee, also, true yokefellow," Timothy, or Silas, or the chief elder or bishop at Philippi—nobody knows certainly who was addressed—"help those women who labored with me in the gospel" to a reconciliation. Commentators agree on this interpretation. If they are correct, it is hardly right to seize upon the exhortation and make it do duty in a cause never intended by the author. It may not be a "mortal sin," but is nevertheless a perversion of the Scriptures.

John Calvin was a great man—a great thinker, and accomplished great good. His followers are and ever have been among the best citizens and most devoted Christians. They do well to keep alive the memory and deeds of their renowned leader. But we fail to see that Calvin controls the theological thought of the day, or exercises a predominating influence over governments, as some extravagantly claim. On the contrary, saying nothing about the influence of religion or civilization, Arminianism, especially in the United States, has counteracted, if not wholly dissipated the influence of Calvin's horrible decrees. We do not miss it far when we say that the union of the Presbyterian (North) and the Cumberland Presbyterians shows that the Calvinism of to-day is not the Calvinism of one hundred years ago.

Christian people seem to be quite able to keep up with the world in organizing for general improvement. In additon to the church which furnishes opportunity for the communion of saints, we have the Sunday School; the Epworth League; the Guild; the Brotherhoods, several of them; the Gideons; the Y. M. C. A.; the Y. W. C. A.; the B. Y. P. U. the W. F. M. S.; the W. H. M. S.; the N. C. K's; and the Layman's Movement. Maybe there are others. The latest one of which we have heard is "The Young Men's Movement." Surely no preacher can stand before a District Conference and say, as we heard one say many years ago to Bishop McTyeire, "We have nothing in our church to interest our young people." But, if so, the Bishop's reply would be pertinent: "You have the communion of saints."

The Third Chapter of the Epistle of St. James, which, instead of "skipping," we have read more carefully, discloses a profound insight into the wickedness of human nature, and an aptness for dealing with the practical affairs of life. Dealing with serious things, the Apostle treats them in a serious way. There is not a word in the Chapter at all adapted to excite mirth, or make readers believe that he would lessen the force of his blows by humorous speech. Men do not "dance on graves" or "table their games on tombstones." No more would a sacred writer undertake clownish tricks or play upon words in dealing with the tongue "that is a fire, a world of iniquity," or "wisdom that is earthly, sensual, devilish." The effort to show that St. James adds his quota to the funny things in the Bible is a failure. The tendency of the effort is to weaken respect for the Word of God.

PERSONAL.

Rev. T. J. Upton, en route from New Iberia, La., to the home of his son, at Jackson, La., spent a pleasant hour in the Advocate office.

Rev. R. S. Walton, of Hammond, spent last week at Port Vincent, helping the pastor, Rev. T. M. Burgess, in a meeting. The work, we understand, was crowned with a good degree of success.

The venerable George Jackson, one of our oldest ministers, called to see us last week. After spending a few days in the city he went to the Seashore Camp Meeting. He is in excellent health and spirits.

Rev. W. H. Lewis, the new presiding elder of the Meridian District, "quickly worked his way into the hearts of his preachers," and the District Conference recently held "adopted resolutions commending his efficiency."

Rev. J. B. Randolph has finished the theological course in Vanderbilt, receiving the degree of B. D. He is now down in his native hills of North Mississippi at work, having charge of Myrtle Circuit—is located in the parsonage. May he have great success!

Rev. S. D. Howard, in writing of the Crowley District Conference, reported that Rev. A. R. Hoffpauir preached the opening sermon. This, he says, is a mistake, which he desires to correct. The sermon was preached by Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, whose pardon is begged by Brother Howard.

Rev. J. S. Duke has taken charge of the Inverness (Miss.) Church and two others composing the circuit, heretofore served by Rev. R. A. Ellis, who, on account of ill-health, was forced to retire. He has planned for meetings at all the churches, and enters upon the work with zeal and faith.

Rev. W. G. Harbin, after a strenuous campaign, winding up at New Iberia, has gone home to rest awhile, and to take in the District Conference, which meets in his home town, Haynesville, La. He passed through the city on Monday, and honored us with a call, which we appreciated very much.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Gloster, Miss., passed through the city last week en route to the Camp Ground, where he availed himself of the advantages afforded at the Preachers' Institute. We thank him for giving us the pleasure of his company for about an hour. He is one of our old North Mississippi friends.

Rev. W. W. Mitchell, under date of June 20th, says: "We are moving on smoothly, and I hope making some progress in the old town of Grenada." The evidence of this is found in the good list of subscribers which Brother Mitchell forwarded—like a business man, on a separate sheet from his news item. He has our sincere thanks.

The Times-Democrat scribe at Seashore Camp Ground in notes of the Preachers' Institute reports Rev. J. T. Daves as "the preaching elder of the Atlanta District." That is a new order of elder. It is a distinction to be coveted—so many of the "beloveds" being unable to attain to the honor. We cast no reflections on any particular brother.

Rev. J. S. Parker, writing from Yazoo City, Miss., gives notice of the death of the oldest Methodist in the Bethany Church, Brother A. L. Holt. He died June 18, and next day was buried just back of the church he founded, and which he loved so much. A suitable memoir will be furnished in due time.

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, of Parker Memorial, left for the West on Tuesday last. He will go to Denver to visit one of his sisters; from there he will go to California to see another sister, and on the return trip will stop to see a brother, but at what point we do not call to mind. He will be absent several weeks. We trust he will have a safe and pleasant journey.

Rev. R. B. Donner, who has been crippled for a long time, is now unable to walk and says that he is afraid that he "will have to abide in the house." There is no improvement in the afflicted joint, and the doctors oppose amputation. He is patient under the rod, "esteeming it a great honor to be called to be still." Let the brethren everywhere remember this faithful servant in prayer.

Brother N. A. Mott, Yazoo City, desires us to announce that the time of the Institute for Sunday School superintendents, advertised to be held at Meridian, July 27, has been posponed to Sept. 22-24. This change is made necessary on account of the great storm which so delayed farming operations that it was thought a large attendance could not be secured from the rural districts in July.

The Houston (Texas) Daily Post of June 22 gives a good amount of space to the new Shearn Memorial Church, of which Dr. J. E. Wray is pastor. Dirt was broken on the 21st by Bishop Ward, followed by Dr. Wray, the building committee, and five "elect women," each throwing a shovel of earth. The seating capacity of the house when fully open is 2500. It will be a magnificent structure.

Prof. R. W. Jones, for many years connected with the University of Mississippi as Professor of Chemistry, which position he resigned three or four years ago, was last week elected to the chair of Geology in the same institution. He has accepted, we understand. His many friends will heartily welcome him on his return to Oxford, where he will resume his place in the church, as well as in the classroom.

Rev. N. G. Augustus, presiding elder of the Durant District, has prepared and sent out an elaborate programme to be followed at his District Conference in session as this paper goes to press. In addition to the programme the presiding elder gives the names of expected visitors who will be cordially received and entertained; the names of every pastor and lay delegate to the Conference, over one hundred in number, and also the names of the lay leaders of the District. Nobody seems to have been overlooked.

Brother S. J. High, treasurer of the Board of Missions of the North Mississippi Conference, has submitted a report of receipts for the first six months of the year. He adds this statement, which will be very pleasing to all the brethren: "Our collections on foreign missions are nearly three times what they were the same date last year, and domestic missions almost twice as much. The time should come, and I believe that it will, when the preachers will send in all of their mission money the first six months of the conference year."

We thank our good sister who was thoughtful enough to send us a bit of "church history," clipped from a militant paper—one that is always "fighting mad." We agree with her that "editors should keep well informed," but we beg to say that what she sends us is the stuff J. R. Graves used to preach "raised from the dead." It is too old to be noticed. The Christian world has outgrown the spirit of the men who wrote and adopted the Cotton Grove resolutions. Men who parade them to-day are out of touch and out of sympathy with to-day's religion.

Rev. John M. Moore, Ph. D., managing editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, has recently delivered a series of lectures on the Oriental nations at Georgetown, Texas, in the Institute held there. He is now delivering a series of lectures at the Preachers' Institute in session at the Seashore Campground. While en route from the hot gales of Texas to the refreshing breezes of the Gulf coast, he honored this office with a call, which was highly appreciated. He spent a portion of the day viewing the work of Methodism in New Orleans.

Rev. H. G. Hawkins furnishes us the following item which will prove interesting to many readers: Rev. W. F. Long, General Sunday School Secretary for Mississippi, has offered a gold medal to the student of the Port Gibson Female College who during the coming session furnishes the best original essay upon "The Organized Sunday School Work." By March first each member of the Senior, Junior and Sophomore classes will hand in to the teacher of English an essay upon this subject, the teacher to select the best ten, and these ten to be submitted to a competent outside critic who will select the one best.

Rev. R. A. Meek, of the Greenville District, tells us that the Methodists of Tunica, Miss., are untiring in their efforts to succeed. Within the past two years they have purchased a neat parsonage and recently built and furnished a new church, the first service in which was held on June 13th, and there is a very little balance on the two structures unpaid.

We have been favored with long communications—some of them in the form of essays or addresses read to public assemblies—how many, it is not necessary to say. Some of them will appear—some day. Others will be a long time coming out, if ever, especially those printed in other papers before they reached us.

GALLOWAY MEMORIAL CHURCH.

My Dear Dr. Boswell: I wish to commend in strongest terms the movement for the erection of "Galloway Memorial Church," in Jackson, Miss. In Jackson a part of Bishop Galloway's active ministry was spent. There he made his home for years. There, in the capital city of his native state, his dust awaits the call of the Resurrection Angel. It is altogether fitting that a great Church should bear his name in his home city and attest to those who are to come after us the esteem in which he was held by the generation in which he lived.

SPECIAL REQUEST.

Will the Third Vice Presidents of the Auxiliaries of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Mississippi Conference, please send me their names and address, that I may communicate with them during the coming month? This favor will greatly aid me in my work. Mrs. W. H. Hunter, Third Vice President, Lumberton, Miss.

CHANGE OF DATE.

Bishop Ward requests us to announce that the Louisiana Conference will meet in Alexandria, La., Dec. 15, instead of Dec. 8, as heretofore published. Preachers and others interested will take notice of this change and govern themselves accordingly.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

At the recent meeting of the Board of Trustees, I was instructed to urge the payment of the subscriptions to the Endowment Fund. I was authorized to engage the services of such persons as I could secure to aid me in making these collections.

We now have an unpaid subscription list of $31.300. Of this amount, $10,000 is NOW DUE. If we can collect this $10,000 it will secure another $10,000, which will almost complete our ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND, we started out to raise three years ago. Surely, our friends will not falter or neglect to send in their checks, when so much depends upon prompt action.

I am anxious to engage the services of competent persons at each of the places where we have subsciption lists. Such friends as Lee Rogers, of New Albany; Warner Wells, of Greenwood; Sam Berryhill, of Water Valley; H. C. Campbell, of West Point; Mrs. Helen Woodword, of Starkville, and others, are worthy of all praise. Kind friends, send in your checks.

T. W. LEWIS.

THE CENTURY.

The July number of the "Century Magazine" is out in advance of the month, as usual, and a superb number it is—worthy of a place in every home that has any literary taste at all. One of the most interesting articles is "The Human Side of Calvin." It will be read with more than ordinary interest by all who delight in biography. To those who contemplate making their first journey across the ocean the article, "Safety at Sea," will appeal without difficulty.

The "Century" can be found at all news stands, or may be ordered from the Century Publishing Co., New York.

SEASHORE CAMP-MEETING.

ANNUAL CAMP MEETING JULY 7-15.

Special Rates on the Railroads.

NO ADMISSION FEE AT THE GATES OF THE GROUNDS DURING THE CAMP MEETING.

The Seashore Camp Meeting is known over a large part of Methodism to-day. Men have attended it from all parts of the Union. Last year the revival fires burned with old-time vigor and we are hoping and praying for a better meeting this year than last.

The religious services are under the direction of the Presiding Elders of New Orleans, Seashore and Mobile District Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, and these brethren will be assisted by the best preaching talent that can be obtained.

Preaching under the Tabernacle, Grove, and Cottage Prayer Meetings, and other religious services, will be held during each day and evening, to which all persons on the grounds are not only cordially invited, but are expected to attend.

Plan to come this year, and bring your unconverted friends with you. All Methodist preachers will be admitted into the grounds and provided with board and lodging free of charge during Camp Meeting.

A DELIGHTFUL SUMMER HOME.

There is not in all the Southland a more delightful place to spend the summer than on the Seashore Camp Ground. There are ample accommodations and good board. A great many families own or rent cottages on the grounds. Electric lights, artesian water and gas for cooking give the essential comforts of the city. The seashore drive and electric street car line extends for thirty miles or more, with comfortable homes on one side and the gulf on the other. The bathing privileges are free to those who make their homes on the camp grounds. The gulf breeze tempers the climate, until it is more delightful than at many Northern resorts. Fresh fish and oysters may be had all the summer through.

A CONGENIAL PLACE FOR CHRISTIANS.

Too often the summer outing has been a time for relaxation of the spiritual life, and even of backsliding on the part of our church members. Many men and women date the beginning of their aggressive service for the Master to a few days spent on the camp grounds. There is a distinctively Christian atmosphere, and the many assemblies as well as the Camp Meeting bring together some of the brightest men and some of the most saintly characters we have. There is no compulsion about attending any of the lectures or sermons, but they are in easy reach and there is a sane and healthy tone, that tends to vigorous thinking and wholesome living. If you spend your vacation on the camp ground, you will not require a month to recover from your "rest," but you will at once be ready to take your place in your work and your church when you return to your home.

ATTRACTIONS FOR THE SUMMER OF 1909.

Annual Camp Meeting, July 7-15. The Camp Meeting really gives the right to exist to the grounds, and it was for this purpose that Christian men invested their money in this property, in order that men might come away for a season from their other cares and commune with God. We hope for a revival this year.

Summer School for Sunday School Workers, July 16-23. In this day, when every school teacher who is keeping up with his profession attends a summer normal somewhere, it is a mark of the enlarged conception given to the most important teaching that we have, that summer normals are being provided for Sunday School teachers. In the school of methods for Sunday School Workers some of the most experienced teachers of the nation will tell how best to conduct the Sunday School.

Seashore Assembly for Christian Workers, July 24-Aug. 3. This is the successor to the former Seashore Epworth League Assembly. It has simply broadened the scope of its work. While not undertaking to do especially evangelical work, but rather to train the young people how to work, this assembly usually numbers many conversions as an immediate result of its work. Some of the gracious revivals that have blessed some of the churches have had their inception in the new conceptions of service given the young people in this assembly.

TOPIC FOR JULY 4.

Godless Commercialism. Mark v: 1-20. (Patriotic Service.)

The subject for our lesson is godless commercialism. The Scripture lesson is taken from the healing of the demoniac on the coasts of Gadara. The story is surprisingly simple and direct. The Master, with his disciples crossed the sea and entered the country of the Gardarenes. They found a demoniac among the tombs, so fierce that men could not bind him. The Master cast out the evil spirits. They asked permission to go into a herd of swine feeding near. When permission was granted, the swine, to the number of about two thousand ran down into the sea and were drowned. When the owner of the swine saw the demonaic, clothed and in his right mind, and heard of the loss of the swine, they entreated the Christ, that he should depart out of their coasts. They were not willing to pay for the healing of men, possessed with evil spirits, at a cost of at least ten thousand dollars apiece.

2. Godless Commercialism.

Theoretically, the business world moves on lines that are both selfish and cruel. Men must buy in the lowest market and sell in the highest. The workman must be made to labor at the lowest point that competition can reduce him to. In the commercial warfare, every competitor, must be robbed of his right to live, and all business taken away from him if possible. What wonder is it that men who have tried to run their establishments on such principles, have tried to believe that there was no God. They have tried to reduce time and eternity to a matter of dollars and cents. It is this spirit of trade that has reared some of the great trusts that have heen utterly ruthless in destroying their competitors.

3. Man is More Than Money.

When the Lord touches the business life, he makes it plain that a man is worth more than all the money in the world. He propounds the question, "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" He places the golden rule, in the midst of commercial transactions. Before every man the Lord sets a final auditing of accounts at the great day of judgment. What may pass the strict limits of the commercial law, may be far from passing the tests of the judgment day. The chief end of life is man, and the making of man in the image of his Lord. The business that tries to cut God out of it, and that does not hesitate to destroy men, will bring all that are concerned in it under the wrath of God. To-day men are raising questions of revenue and of commercial welfare when the liquor traffic is under discussion. Men who admit that it brings only destruction, and benefits no one, will yet hold to it, because it pays. When men, who are seeking the welfare of their fellow-men, hinder some godless pursuit, or even take from the legitimate gains of business, the same cry is raised as of old, and they seek that the Christ shall depart out of their coasts.

4. Commerce, the Servant of Man.

This world is to fit men for the next. The commerce of the world may cover its material need, but more than this it is to serve to uphold man in his spiritual enterprises. If all the herds be lost, and the business resources taxed to the uttermost, it is a little thing, if the gospel be brought in reach of men, and men be brought to Christ.

LESS THAN ONE BOTTLE DID IT.

A sufferer writes: "Can certainly say that Hughes' Tonic is the best chill remedy I ever heard of. Used only part of a bottle, and used no quinine, and it cured me." Sold by Druggists—50c. and $1.00 bottles.

NOTES FROM OLIVE BRANCH.

Dear Doctor: As I stop long enough to ponder, I realize the rapid march of time and see another half year chronicled on the dim pages of the history of the past—and I am thus advised that soon another Annual Conference shall convene in North Mississippi, and soon many of us, as itinerants, shall be moving to new fields of labor to face new problems and to serve new people.

For the half year gone, I would like to make a report, and correct one mistake in regard to my work:

First, I note in our Conference Minutes of 1908, that Pleasant Hill is credited with $295 expended on churches and parsonages and Olive Branch is credited with nothing at all. This is a mistake, for Olive Branch raised and expended $295 on churches and parsonages last year, and not Pleasant Hill. Pleasant Hill may have expended that amount, but not to my knowledge; but I know my charge did expend that amount and that it was reported thus at our last conference. This correction is due my people at Olive Branch.

This is my second year with the cultured, kind, and thoughtful people on the Olive Branch charge. Since conference we have made marked advancement along all lines. Every church on my work is in nice working order and everything moves on to victory. I am just back from the League Conference, at New Albany and I find my Epworth Leagues are the "banner Leagues" in North Mississippi. I organized an Epworth League here at Olive Branch about three months ago, which has a membership of seventy-eight. A good per cent. are active, earnest, enthusiastic, hopeful members. My church membership here is only about fifty members. We are not a dead League, but a live, working League, remembering our motto, "All for Christ." Give us the "banner."

I have a fine working League at Kelly, with about twenty-five members. This League raised last year about $120 on church repairing and on missions. The young people in these Leagues are my faithful "standbys" in church work. We have a total League membership of 103. Beat that, my readers, if you can.

I have five Sunday Schools on my work, all of which are now doing much better work than last year. We recently had two Children's Day services on my work. Both were above the average, well rendered, and heartily appreciated by the large audiences, both inside and outside of the churches. They are calculated to do much good as both are educational and spiritual forces for developing the young mind and life in my churches. Our Children's Day services were great successes; and my heart throbs with hope for the future church at Olive Branch and at Kelly, led on to victory by the young people and children here.

We expect to report all collections in full at Okolona this year. Our protracted meetings begin soon. I have secured able help and am expecting mighty, "old-time" revivals and a manifestation of the "old-time religion."

We all love our presiding elder, Brother Young. He is succeeding nicely up here, and is appreciated by his preachers and people. The clouds are rifted, the sun is bright. Our forces are marshalled. Forward we march. Success is sure. Pray for us.

Fraternally, K. P. FOUST.

A GREAT REVIVAL.

On Tuesday morning, May 25, we began our meeting at Brooksville and for eleven days the people of the place were stirred as never before. Rev. Robt. A. Clark, of Okolona, besides doing all the preaching, conducted the men's prayer meeting at 4 o'clock each afternoon in a vacant store right in the heart of the business district. The current opinion among our people is that they have never before in revival meetings had the gospel preached to them with greater power, earnestness and effect than during this one just closed. Interest increased with each service and the congregations grew steadily and to such proportions that at morning services there were as many present as at evening.

For the first time in the history of the town, every place of business was closed during the morning service and men who have not been to church for months and some for years, were present at this hour.

Out of seventy-five male residents of the place, there were as many as sixty-seven at the prayer services in the afternoon. Before the meeting closed, fifty-seven of these men were talking and testifying, and forty-three of them praying in public.

The ladies' afternoon prayer meeting was proportionately as well attended and results at their services equally as great. As a result of the revival we have a united Christian people, "kindly affectioned one towards another" and "zealous of good works." Among other results, a number of family altars were erected and without exception, the Christians of the town pledged themselves for greater service and larger usefulness. A number who had been living inconsistently were reclaimed and many of the indifferent were interested and consecrated themselves anew. Two united with the Baptist Church and seven with the Methodist.

Thus closed the most far-reaching revival ever held in Brooksville, during which time every life in the place was touched, strengthened or changed. In the accomplishment of this great work the Lord used Brother Clark, the three local pastors and the godly men and women with unusual effect. To him be all the praise.

A DOCTOR IN THE FAMILY.

Royaline Oil, made by the Royaline Medicine Co., of New Orleans, La., answers so many useful purposes in the home that it is even spoken of as being like a doctor in the family. Its timely use saves, not only much suffering and time, but also physicians' bills. Cuts, aches, inflammations, swellings or any other soreness can be quickly alleviated by the application of Royaline Oil, the great antiseptic. Price 25c. a bottle. At your druggist.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address:

HOME COMFORTS.

Every man and his family wants home comforts, and spends a great deal of money for them. Now that the city is putting in the sewerage system and connecting all property with the water pipes free and the firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co. are doing the same with the sewer pipes, there is no reason that any family in the city owning a home should not have these comforts, especially when they go farther and do all kinds of plumbing work on contract and on the smallest monthly payments, giving the property holders every chance to enjoy these comforts and pay for them while enjoying same. If you are a property holder, see them and get them to tell you the cost, and the liberal terms will cause you to have the work begun at once.

The order is not feeling, fact, faith; or feeling, faith, fact; but it is first God's facts, which are laid as a foundation of adamant; then our faith, which apprehends God's facts and rests upon them; finally feelings come when we fulfill the conditions upon which they depend.—F. B. Meyer.

Obituaries.

SYLVINIA ELIZA COOPER TALLEY, daughter of Jarid Russell and Tobitha Cooper, was born in St. Tammany Parish on the east bank of Bogue Chitto river about two miles north of Sun, La., on March 26, 1848, and died May 22, 1909, at her home in Slidell, La. She was married to William Enoch Talley on the third day of December, 1870. This union was blessed with eight children, six boys and two girls. Three boys and one girl have preceded their mother to their eternal home. Mrs. Talley united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, early in life and remained a loyal member of the same until God, in his love, said, "tis enough, come up higher." She was an unselfish, sunny-souled Christian, zealous of good works, patient in tribulation, and blameless in character. On account of feebleness of health, she was confined to her home for three or four years (and a great deal of the time to her bed) before she died, but her faith was undimmed by doubt or anxiety. Her greatest pleasure was doing for others and ministering to the sick, and helping those in distress or need, for none were turned away from her door empty-handed. She bore in her person, the graces of the Spirit, and expressed the principles of the gospel in her daily walk and practice. I have known Mrs. Talley for nearly two years, and have often gone to her bedside, and talked to her, about her hope in God, she would smile and say, "O, Brother Peters, you don't know how much joy and comfort I find in trusting Jesus, I am only waiting for him to call me, I am ready to go." She could truly say, "My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord, my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God." She leaves behind to mourn her going, a husband, four children, several grandchildren, and a host of friends. Good-bye for a while, wife, mother, friend. We mourn our loss now; but some glad, sweet morn, we shall again see you, but not as we did here; we shall see you in a more radiant body, a perfect body. In heaven, we shall see you. Good-bye.

T. V. PETERS.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT TO THE MEMORY OF BROTHER R. F. PARKER.

At a meeting of the quarterly conference of the Yazoo City M. E. Church, South, held May 31, a committee was appointed to draft suitable resolutions to the memory of Brother R. F. Parker, who departed this life on Friday, May 28, 1909, and the following resolutions were prepared by the committee:

Whereas, We are again called upon to mourn the loss of a friend, a Christian brother and a fellow-worker in our church. It seems to us with our limited vision like a strange dispensation of Providence when one in the prime of life is cut off so suddenly and with but little warning, and especially when that one is so useful, and is such a leader among men; but we are not questioning his ways; we are not asking or reasoning why; we bow in humble submission to the Almighty will. But the stroke is none the less severe, we feel our loss none the less keenly, and we stand stunned and bewildered in the presence of death. But it was God's will, and his ways are past finding out; they are true and righteous altogether.

Mr. R. F. Parker came to Yazoo City from Anding several years since, and at once took rank among the foremost business men of our city. He identified himself with the Methodist Church of Yazoo City at the earliest opportunity, as he had long been a leading member of the church at Anding, and he was soon after appointed a member of the board of stewards which office he ever after continued to hold. He was one of the most useful and consistent members of our communion. He was a man among men, of sterling integrity and upright in all his dealings. One of the highest encomiums ever passed upon the life of another was said after his death by one who had had many and large business dealings with him, that he was one man who was truly honest, and that his word was always accepted as good as his bond. Therefore, be it resolved

First—By the quarterly conference of the Yazoo City M. E. Church, South, that we deplore the loss of our brother, and take this method of expressing our appreciation of his worth. He was a Christian gentleman, a loving husband, and a kind, affectionate and indulgent father. In all the relations of life, he was true, exemplary, and conscientious in the performance of his duties.

Second—That we extend to his bereaved widow and children our heartfelt sympathy. We mourn deeply with them in their hour of sorrow, and words fail us to express the depth of the grief we share with them. But we desire to point them to One who has promised to comfort those who mourn, and to protect the widow, and to be a father to the fatherless, and whose word never fails. Our prayers join with theirs that the loved ones remaining may look forward to a glad re-union in Beulah land.

Third—That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the quarterly conference, that a copy be furnished the family of the deceased, and that the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the three city papers be requested to publish them.

A. H. COURTS,
I. S. REED,
N. A. MOTT,

FROM IUKA CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I have been thinking for some time that we would give a brief account of what we are doing on Iuka circuit. This charge lies in the extreme northeast corner of the State of Mississippi. We have six regular appointments, and preach at three other places when we think there is a probability of doing good. This is our second year on this charge. We are praying for an improvement over last year which must have been two hundred per cent. above what it was when we came here in December, 1907.

This past Spring we fenced our five acres of parsonage land. The yard, garden, and farm lot is all newly fenced with post and wire.

We have five Sunday Schools on the charge, all doing good work. We expect to begin our revival meetings the fourth Sunday in July and expect to continue through August and September. We are praying for one hundred conversions and as many accessions to the church.

I earnestly solicit the prayers of all the good people in behalf of Iuka circuit.

Respectfuly yours in the work of the ministry, J. R. JAMES, P. C.

AN APPRECIATION.

I take this way to express my heartfelt thanks for the many kind letters of sympathy received from the brethren since the death of my wife. They were much comfort to me in this sad hour. May God bless all of you.

Your brother in Christ,
E. L. WHIDDON.

CHILDREN'S DAY AT HUB AND HATHORN, MISS.

Dear Editor: The Cildren's Day at Hub on June 6, and Hathorn June 13, was a success viewed from a moral standpoint. A programme of some twenty parts was gotten up at Hub and was creditably executed, consisting of songs, Bible reading (from memory) dialogue, recitation and invocation.

The choir led off with a call hymn, "Bring Them In," and was followed by a song of welcome by seven girls, the memory reading of the 23rd Psalm, by Verdie Selman, following was a prayer by Hilary Westbrook, the pastor. One of the most pathetic parts was the rendition by four girls, Essie Denison, Annie Boyet, Verdie Selman, and Lucile Carnathan, of the old-time song, "Rock of Ages," they sang as to the unseen, their training had neared the perfect.

The outstretched arms, the clasped hands, the swaying bodies and inclining head was in harmony with each other and in accord with the strains and sentiment of music. The effort could easily bear the insignia of "par-excellent." Time and space will not admit of extended notices of each part, but without a venture we can say, the children acquitted themselves nobly at Hub and Hathorn.

Mrs. J. G. Keeton, at Hub, and Miss Clara Branton, of Hathorn, at the organ was equal to the emergency and they conducted their parts to the full satisfaction of the participants and audiences. Prof. H. F. Peterson was leader and moving spirit of the programme at Hub and Miss Clara Branton, at Hathorn.

The writer preached a sermon at Hub to the parents and children on the subject, "Little Things Constitute Greatness."

Following, a collection was taken up at Hub of $3.85 and one at Hathorn of $2.31, for the Sunday School Board. The closing song was then sang and the audience dismissed and some of us left feeling that we were the better by having been there. Amen.

Fraternally,

HILARY WESTBROOK, Pastor.

CARR CHURCH.

The Carr Church, in the southern part of Scott County, Miss., is the oldest—not only Methodist Church—but the oldest church of any kind in Scott County, south of the A. and V. railroad. This church was organized in 1837 by Rev. A. T. M. Fly, pastor of the Paulding circuit in the Monticello District, of which Rev. Green M. Rogers was presiding elder.

The congregation was first organized under a bush-arbor near the residence of Rev. Jacob Carr, local preacher, of whom mention is made in Jones' History of Methodism in Mississippi, Vol. 11, p. 398, but soon a comfortable house was built. Col. Frederick Carr, in whose honor the church was named, defraying most of the expense. This congregation soon grew to be the largest and most wealthy congregation in east Mississippi, and in this church some of the most substantial men and women in Scott and Smith Counties received their religious training.

The last of the charter members, Mrs. Marguerett Rhodes Weems, departed this life in the triumphs of a living faith in the Lord Jesus Christ whom she learned to trust in early childhood, July 7, 1903. Her husband, Mr. Samuel R. Weems whom she married Nov. 9, 1838, still survives and resides with his youngest son, Robert, on the old homestead where he and his young bride first began house-keeping in the Winter of 1838.

This grand old patriarch was born in Abbeville District, S. C., Sept. 24, 1814, and moved with his parents to Lawrence County, Miss., in 1816, where he lived till 1838, when he married and moved to where he now lives. He and his wife reared one of the most honored and respected families in the State, one of whom is our own Rev. J. M. Weems, D.D., and another, Mr. W. L. Weems, is the Newton District Lay Leader of the Laymen's Movement.

"Uncle Sammy" Weems (if I may use this familiar title) joined the Carr Church in the second year of its existence and has been one of its most substantial members. He is now almost totally blind and deaf, and is badly stooped under the weight of ninety-five years, but he has risen superior to the cares of the world, and is patiently awaiting the summons to come up higher and be re-united with his companion and other loved ones who have gone on before.

ADVANCE IN MEDICAL SCIENCE.

Medical science has taken a great leap forward during the past century. A century ago very little was known of bacteria, bacilli, germs and of the methods universally recognized for fighting such invasions. They used to let a man die of diseases that are easily curable to-day. In no branch of medicine has greater progress been made than in treating those addicted to the use of morphine and liquor. Such human slaves are now looked upon as diseased rather than naturally vicious, and down in Atlanta, Ga., there is a man, who for over thirty years has been treating successfully nearly all who have been brought to him. One may be, from the world's standpoint, a human wreck. But Dr. Woolley will put new life in him and make him a man—with a righteous abhorrence for the degrading influence of drugs. If you know of anyone in your neighborhood who needs to be uplifted from the mire of despair, won't you write to Dr. B. M. Woorley and give him the person's name and address?

At Port Gibson Female College, $177 pays board, laundry, tuition, medical, library, Gibsonian, lyceum lecture fees, and all expenses of educational trip to New Orleans.

LESSON FOR JULY 4.

PAUL'S JOURNEY—ANTIOCH TO PHILLIPI.

Acts xvi:6-15.

Golden Text: "Come over into Macedonia and help us." Acts xvi:9.

It is profitable to preserve, as much as possible, a continuous line of thought in the study of the beginning and organization of the church of the New Testament: for this purpose it is necessary to recur to Lesson viii of May 23, in which the council at Jerusalem was the subject. Satisfied with the decision of the council, Paul and Barnabas returned to Antioch accompanied by Judas and Silas, when after a short time Judas returned to Jerusalem, but Silas preferred to remain. Silas' decision, at first glance, has not the import that succeeding events gave it. So it is with many things that occur in life, that seem but a passing influence of inclination, but eventually assume an important place in the line of duty marked out for us by an over-ruling Providence.

While Paul's actions may seem to be controlled by a powerful energy of his own, yet the man chosen by the Son of God for a work of boundless magnitude, must be in communication with, and under the direction of the Holy Spirit. Having this in mind, there is less tendency to wonder when we read of the Holy Ghost forbidding this and that, and directing them to the places to which they should go and at what time.

Another tour to visit the places where they had been and preached the Word, was being planned by Paul and Barnabas; but the journey was not taken together. Never again were these yoke fellows to work together. It gives the Christian heaviness of heart to read of how these two ambassadors of Christ should so allow such contention between them as to raise a question of right or wrong in the mind of every one that reads the Scripture. In extenuation the fact of liability to err is present in the heart of the best of men "lest they be exalted above measure." The result was separation; Paul and Silas going one way, and Barnabas and Mark another, and who can tell but that there was a special work for both that could best be done apart?

So Paul and Silas, "being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God" began a tour over the way, and among a people, that by this time had become endeared to the apostle: for after Paul's conversion he resided some time in the regions of Syria and Cilicea. Passing through Derbe and coming to Lystra they met Timothy, a young man in whom the the apostle must have seen great promise of future usefulness. Paul's heart opened to receive the young man, and would have him to go with him, and be with him in the ministry —Paul loved Timothy—he called him "mine own son in the gospel" and always in after years, even when Timothy was exalted to the bishopric, he still had oversight of him as a father has for his son. From the wording of the Scripture in recounting these events, it is concluded that Mark had also joined the company, so now there were four, each ready for their part for the great work before them. After the churches had been visited in the various places to which the apostle had gone before, he turned to new fields of labor. His pathway was laid out, but the Spirit had not as yet made the direction known. So Paul turned his face eastward toward Asia, but the Holy Ghost forbid him to preach the Word there. Teachers and students will wonder at this, and at how the Holy Ghost communicated with the apostle. Let none wonder that this consecrated servant of God was in communication with heaven. Did not the Lord Jesus come to him more than once and talk with him? Was he not "such an one that was exalted to heaven?" Then why could he not have been directed by the Spirit that dwelt within him in an unmistakable way: as for the manner of communication, God created the body for the means of exercising the Spirit that dwells within the body, the body weakens and dies, then is the Spirit deprived of exercising speech, hearing and thought, because the organs that God made for that use in the body perished when the body perished? No. God is a Spirit and with a voice that some mistook for thunder, called from heaven in the language of earth that time when Jesus, standing among his disciples called to his Father: "Father, glorify thy name." Then came a voice from heaven, saying, "I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again." Think on these things and wonder no more except that some day even we may be able to speak without the aid of this "poor stammering tongue."

The manner of Paul's call to Macedonia can better be understood by us of to-day, because the material is more manifest, and the vision easier to interpret. Paul harkened to the call and at once journeyed to Phillipi. He and his company must have arrived there about mid-week, in time to look up any that loved and served the Lord Jesus. It is natural for those who love Jesus, to love to be in one another's company, but many of the present-day do not cultivate this Christian sociability and friendliness; especially in the cities is the plain, humble believer often unsuccessful in finding a cordiality that should need no sending out. On the first Sabbath in Phillipi Paul found friends, and he found the place where they went on the Sabbath to pray. It was out in a quiet place by the riverside. So he and Silas and Luke and young Timothy went to that open air prayer meeting on that Sunday morning. O, we would that we could have been there; there with Paul who, with all his great learning, determined to know nothing but "Jesus Christ and him crucified." There with Silas who shared Paul's suffering, and was a comfort to him. There with Luke whose spirit-guided pen produced the words that we read to-day. There with Timothy, who, when we think of his mother, Eunice and his grandmother, Lois, reminds us of childhood days and the blessing of godly parents.

As after some of our prayer meetings, the faithful ones love to remain awhile, and shake hands and exchange brotherly greeting, so after this prayer meeting by the riverside, Paul found a worshiper of God that was ready to befriend him. It was Lydia, a wealthy woman, who heard Paul's words and "the Lord opened her heart" and she believed and was baptized; before that she had only known God as the God of the Jewish religion. This may have seemed an humble beginning of the great work of help for the man in Macedonia, but Paul was satisfied and accepted Lydia's hospitality, as it was given as a work that follows a saving faith.

The man that Paul saw in his vision, we can see every day without a vision, for we speak to him and do business with him every day. Have we spoken to him about Jesus this past week? Have we ever spoken to him about his soul? Do we even mention the name of our Savior in our office, in our store, in our shop or field?

Our religion is not of much force if we only use it on Sunday at church or Sunday School. You go among people who do not come to church, who never will come to church, yet these people must hear the gospel; if you do not tell them of the salvation you have found, your Father in heaven will some day ask you why you did not. This is the work of the Laymen's Movement, and if you cannot do it as an organization, do it as an humble servant of Christ, for you must hear the cry of the man from Macedonia.

EXPECTING A REVIVAL.

Dear Advocate: The "God of our fathers" is still with us on the Vimville charge. Deep conviction and showers of blessings attend our monthly appointments. We are planning and praying for an old-fashioned camp meeting on the work, Aug. 3-17 at the church here in Meridian with the co-operation of the other churches on the work.

We want to secure a large tent for the meeting and have secured one of the best evangelists of the Kentucky Conference for the human leader of the meeting.

We are expecting a "feast of good things" and give all a cordial invitation to come and be with us through the entire meeting and you will be entertained free of charge. We especially invite all pastors who can come, for many things will be during the meeting that will be of special benefit to them.

We want to hold most of our meetings, if not all, on the other part of the work beforehand and wind up the revival campaign with the camp meeting.

We crave the prayers of all God's people who read these lines that we may leave nothing undone that would be condncive to the revival needed.

I find myself at this writing wonderfully encouraged and strengthened for the coming conflict with sin and its advocates. Let us "earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the founders of Methodism" that old-time revivals of Methodism may be seen and felt once more in our midst.

In his service,

J. A. WELLS.

REVIVAL MEETING AT HUB, MISS.

Dear Christian Friends: The scriptures have placed no limitations on the possibilities of prayer, all proper things are made possible, therefore "prayer is the highest form of Christian service."

I desire to enlist your interest and earnest prayers in behalf of the Hub revival meeting June 30 to July 9, 1909. Can you not place this meeting on your prayer list and pray once in each day for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on this occasion. If you cannot do this, will you pray at least one "effectual fervant prayer" to this end.

A revival of the unusual sort is needed in these parts. Our Father is able and willing to bestow it. God's store of grace has not been exhausted, neither has the fullness of his power yet been seen. Now, for concentrated prayer and efforts for the glory of our Master and for the help of immortal souls. You are cordially invited to attend these services and partake of the heavenly benefits.

Rev. J. N. Tucker, of Meridian, Miss., will be the principal leader with several helpers. Yours in him.

Glances at the World.

The prohibition wave is not receding as the brewers and distillers are telling the people. It has struck the Northwest, even Nebraska. The campaign was opened in Omaha on the 27th of June by ex-Governor Hanley before an audience of ten thousand people. And to add to the interest of the matter, and perhaps to the consternation of the liquor fraternity, Mr. Bryan has come squarely out on the temperance issue. At least, so says a press dispatch, and we have seen no contradiction in any of the papers. Nothing about it, one way or the other, so far as we have seen, has appeared in the Commoner. We hope the report is true. If so, it will make him a tower of strength in the campaign now on in his home State. It will likewise give to the anti-saloon party great strength among the Democrats throughout the whole country, for, notwithstanding his third defeat for the Presidency, he is still the idol of the Democratic party. We are only sorry that Mr. Bryan did not take that stand years ago.

A great stir was created down in Georgia on account of the strike of white firemen of the Southern Railroad. Their effort was to get rid of the negro firemen. The matter was of serious and of wide-spread interest. But arbitration was proposed and accepted by both parties to the contest—the railway authorities on the one hand and the white firemen on the other. Arbitrators were quickly selected, and without any waste of time they went at their work. The first effort of the white firemen was to set before the arbitrators the attitude of the public on the question, arguing that if the negroes were retained there would be great dissatisfaction and probably disorder among the people. To prove this they brought a large number of town mayors from different points in the State. The commissioners declined to take into account the state of the public mind, but to decide the question on its merits. This "knocked out" the white firemen the first round and left them little to say. The commissioners, in less than a week, decided there was not sufficient reason for ousting the negroes from the places they held as stokers, and they were allowed to remain. A like decision was reached by the authorities of a Texas railroad in answer to switchmen who demanded that negroes be displaced for white men in the yards at Houston.

An outcry has been raised by many secular papers against mission work among the Chinese in the cities because one Chinaman of the many hundreds being taught has proven faithless and murdered his teacher, a prominent and highly respected young lady. The papers are saying that Chinamen join the mission classes only because they desire to learn the English language, or because the classes are usually taught by young women. At least, one paper went so far as to say that never yet has a Chinaman been converted to the Christian religion —not even in their own land where Christian missionaries have been laboring for more than a century, and where there are hundreds of thousands of professed believers. All such talk is the result of prejudice, and comes from men who look only at the commercial side of the Chinese and Japanese question. They never read of the victims of the Boxer rebellion from the moral or religious side of that deplorable event. They never heard or read of the many Chinese converted to Christ, and who lived and died in the faith. It may not be best for young and impulsive girls to lead classes of Chinese men, but to denounce the missions as a whole, and arbitrarily close them as was done in Chicago June 27, is without reason. It is a species of fanaticism unworthy of intelligent and sober minded citizens.

Whether a desire to create a sensation or a desire to rectify abuses, was attempted by one "Inspector Harms, of East St. Louis," will perhaps never be known. He reported to the Department of Agriculture certain violations of the "pure food law" in one of the packing houses, and deliberately declared that the work of inspection was largely a farce. The department promptly ordered an inquiry, but it came to nothing. The witnesses cited by Harms did not sustain him in his charges nor did he testify. The inquiry, so far as it extended, may have been all right, the report in accordance with the testimony, but that the agents appointed to investigate did not get at all the facts is evident. They say they "wanted to get the truth," but "were certain the employes of the packing houses would not tell it unless they knew they would be protected in their jobs." That reveals a sad state of things—men employed in important work, involving the health of the people, will not tell the truth for fear of being discharged. It reveals more: That packers will not, if they know it, keep men about them who dare to tell the truth under oath. If these things be true, how can an honest investigation be conducted? What is a report, made under such conditions, worth to the public? Nothing; absolutely nothing.

We clip the following paragraph from the Northwestern Christian Advocate of Chicago, anent the case of a foreigner who applied for naturalization papers, but who on examination acknowledged that he kept his saloon open on Sunday and intended to "keep on doing so:" "The Supreme Court in a recent decision in the case of Louis Harsky, of East St. Louis, denied him the right of citizenship because he kept his saloon open in defiance of the Sunday-closing law. The defense of Harsky was that all the other saloon keepers of the town kept their places of business open on Sunday, and that the officials sanctioned the practice; to which the court replied that "it is essential to the safety and perpetuity of the government that laws be enforced until repealed. The decision as to the wisdom of the Sunday-closing statute rests with the legislature, not with the court; but so long as it is the law it should be enforced." The mayor of Chicago appears to be the only person who has had the courage, if such it be called, to disagree with the Supreme Court. He patronizingly admits that 'of course we all respect the opinions of the Supreme Court,' and then proceeds to show his respect by adding that the decision does not alter his belief that 'the Sunday-closing law should not be enforced in Chicago.' If this is not anarchism one wonders where to look for it. And yet we ask why our cities are misgoverned!

The liquor folks are a sharp set. It is a hard matter to head them off. They have recently set forth a new idea on the Louisiana prohibition, or local option law. Caddo parish, which includes the city of Shreveport, in 1905, voted out the saloons. Having exhausted every other method of defeating the will of the people, the attorneys for the saloonists have discovered that the police jury in obedience to the will of the people, had authority to prohibit the sale of liquor only in drinking houses and shops. The statement is that the police jury under section 1211 of the Revised Statutes of the State "was only authorized under and after a vote of the people to grant or withhold licenses from drinking houses and shops within the limits of said parish, and were wholly without power or authority to prohibit the sale of such liquors at retail except at drinking houses or shops as provided by law." Under such construction of the law, if sustained, all men have to do to avoid trouble is to pay the United States tax ($25), get him a supply of liquor and peddle it on the streets or in the woods—or anywhere except in a house. A boot-legger could do a flourishing business. This reminds us of the man who got round his pledge of total abstinence in a temperance society by soaking ginger cake in liquor and eating it. His plea did not avail, for though he had not violated his vow by drinking whisky, he had not abstained from its use. The soaked gingerbread made him drunk.

President Hall, of Clark University, has recently given out some figures well adapted to waken thought in serious and patriotic minds. Citing one of the leading colleges for women in the United States, he says that during the first ten years of its life, ending with 1888, there were 370 graduates, of whom, up to the spring of 1903, 158 had married, considerably less than half the graduates. One hundred and fifty-one became the mothers of 315 children, or "2.08 children per mother." In the next ten years, ending with the classes of 1898, there were 1130 graduates, of whom, up to 1903, only 331 had married. It is probable that others have married since, but the figures show that as time advanced not only was there a decrease in the number of marriages, but that the birth-rate was remarkably low. Whether these figures would be sustained by statistics from other schools, we do not know. But, if so, the facts show that something, somewhere, is wrong; either that the education is defective, or that much learning naturally turns a woman's mind and heart from domestic life. What should be done? Cease to educate the girls? By no means. Find out where the trouble lies and correct it. Let presidents and teachers impress the girls with the fact that the more education they have sanctified by religion the better prepared will they be to help build and conduct a home, and that home building is their God-given mission.

DID SAUL OF TARSUS OR MATTHIAS FILL THE VACANCY.

The historical setting given to the election of Matthias to fill the vacancy in the apostleship caused by the sin and fall of Judas Iscariat makes it a readable and interesting story. It has the charming simplicity, brevity and literary finish common to all that St. Luke wrote. And it is so true to life! It is just what we would expect Peter to propose, and the other disciples to agree with him in doing. And Matthias "was numbered with the eleven apostles." It is a beautiful story of their devotion to Christ and of their indifference to what the chief priests and pharisees were saying and doing. It well deserves the literary setting which St. Luke gives it in the chronicles of the disciples of our Lord prior to the Pentecost.

But, as a matter of fact, did Matthias actually fill the place in the apostleship made vacant by the fall of Judas Iscariot? The writer thinks not. In the first place, St. Luke does not say that they were divinely instructed or directed to elect him. Peter counseled to that effect, but he claimed no inspiration for his counsel. He based what he said on the prophecy concerning it. The disciples, acting on Peter's counsel, prayed and cast lots. The fact that they prayed is an evidence of their desire to please the Lord, but it is no proof that he directed their vote, and by it made choice of Matthias to take the place of Judas Iscariot. There is nothing in the record to indicate that God accepted him in the place of Judas. The Lord has always reserved the right to choose the men he wants for the ministry. He has never delegated this right to the Church. He has never thought it wise to do so. And if he will not trust the Church to call men to the ordinary pastorate, he certainly would not trust the disciples, unendued and uninspired by the Holy Spirit, to call a man to the office of an apostle. If the disciples at Jerusalem prior to the Pentecost could call a man to the apostleship, why cannot the Church of today, endowed with the Holy Ghost, call and commission men to the Christian ministry, and supply herself with the needed men in her pulpits? As to Matthias being "called by the general conference in Jerusalem," there was no "general conference." The only divine authority they had for assembling at Jerusalem, and the only business they were charged with, was to wait until they should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. But if there had been a general conference, unendowed by the Holy Spirit, and uninspired by his presence, it could not have called and commissioned a man to the apostleship.

But one of the peculiarities of the apostolic college was that it consisted of twelve men. In the Holy Scriptures a greater or less number is unknown. For reasons which we do not fully understand, but which are sufficient to the mind of our Lord, the twelve apostles in some high spiritual sense represent the twelve tribes of Israel. For that reason their number could not be increased nor diminished. For the same reason they did not and never can have any successors in office. A close reading of the New Testament will reveal to us that they bore witness to Christ in one particular in which no others did. Others received the Holy Ghost and wrought miracles in the name and power of Christ, but they could not impart the Holy Spirit and the miraculous gifts which they possessed unto their converts. Philip, one of the seven deacons, a man full of faith and the Holy Ghost, could work miracles among the Samaritans and convert them to the Christian faith, but he could not impart unto them the Holy Spirit and the miraculous gifts he possessed. He doubtless told them about the Holy Ghost: how he had been given to the disciples at Jerusalem, and that he would be given to them, but he could not impart him to them. In order that they might receive him, Peter and John, two of the apostles, were commissioned and sent to them from Jerusalem. Only the apostles bore witness to Christ by imparting the Holy Spirit and his miraculous gifts to others. They alone seem to have been conscious of such divine power. Hence it is that at their death the power to work miracles practically ceased in the church. Some manifestations of miraculous power from time to time, at occasional intervals, as the Lord had need of them, have occurred; but as one of the peculiar and essential functions of the apostolic office seems to have been to bear witness by imparting the Holy Spirit and his miraculous gifts to others, and as there were only twelve apostles, and as their office ended with them, miraculous gifts have not since their death been among the spiritual gifts of the Church.

As a reward for such distinguished office and service, the twelve apostles are to receive singularly distinguished honors. In the nineteenth chapter of Matthew, in answer to Peter's question, "Behold, we have left all and followed thee: what shall we have, therefore?" Christ replied: "Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

That this honor is intended for the apostles is clear from the fact that there are only twelve thrones and from the following verses which contain promises to all the other disciples. In the 21st chapter of Revelations, 14th verse, St. John says: "And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb."

Now, if Matthias did actually take the place of Judas Iscariat, then there were thirteen apostles, one more than was originally chosen, one more than was needed to represent the twelve tribes of Israel; one more than thrones were prepared for to judge the twelve tribes of Israel; one more than there were names written in the twelve foundations of the wall of the eternal city of God. Not Matthias, but Saul of Tarsus, took the place from which Judas Iscariot by transgression fell, is my belief.

THE PREACHER—A POWER.

By W. A. Belk.

I have seen a man whose heart had been touched from the altar of God and whose life had been consecrated to his work. Every fiber of his being was alive with burning zeal to do his Master's will. His conversion was true and genuine. There was no doubt about it. God had laid his hand upon him and he had obeyed the call. He had walked boldly out from the world and standing at full height answered the roll and joined the army. He, moreover, had not failed to take the proper training for his work. His education was thorough. His reading was wide and judicious. His life was pure and his ambition to do good was keen. As I gazed upon him I said, "What a power for good is this man!" Young, ambitious, educated, energetic, thoughtful, gentle, brave, handsome—the pride of the church—he stood ready to enter upon the duties which lay out before him. I watched that young man. Wherever you met him, whether in the quiet of home-life or otherwise, there was that about him which made you feel and know that he was a "soldier of the cross" and a child of God. It was impossible to be with him without feeling the power of God emanating from him. His very presence, his manner, the tone of his voice, the touch of his hand, the sparkle of the eye, the manly bearing of his person, all stamped him as one of God's children and also one of his ambassadors. Looking upon him I could but recount the great good which that man is accomplishing and which he is yet to accomplish in this world for God. Caesar, Napoleon, Alexander, Hannibal and many others immortalized themselves in battle. Cicero, Demosthenes, Burke, and Henry charmed the world with their undying eloquence. Homer, Virgil and Shakespeare pleased and startled the world with their sweet strains of poetry. But the deeds of these men do not reach beyond this life, while those of my hero not only touch time, but likewise eternity. See him yonder standing at full height in the sacred pulpit telling men of God, of sin and of eternity. "Only remembered by what he has done" when his life shall be over and some faint estimate of his usefulness may be had. He is a preacher. God's divine hand is upon him. Eternity alone will reveal his worth and works. No sacrifice is too great and no labor too severe for him. He has laid himself upon God's altar and God is using him. Let us give him our support and sympathy. It will do him good to know that he is both appreciated and loved. His fight is a hard one. His enemy is strong and alert. Let us not forget that his enemy is our enemy. Let us cheer him and encourage him and help him. Let him feel that "A voice is ever at thy side,

Speaking in tones of might,
Like the prophetic voice that cried,
To John, in Patmos, Write."

VALUE OF THE SOUL.

By E. B. Partin, M. D.

Who can compute the value of the soul or determine its worth? We usually determine the value of a thing by the purchase price paid for it. If it cost but little, the value placed upon it is small. If it cost a great deal in dollars and cents, the value is enhanced in proportion to the cost. But when it comes to the soul of man, who can estimate its great worth? We see people every day who seem to place very little value on their immortal souls. They do not seem to think about that immortal part within, which is worth more to them than all the wealth of this world. They do not seem to think or care that it must spend eternity in heaven, or else be cast out into outer darkness to suffer forever. The Savior said (Matt. 16:26) "What is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

That God places very great value on the soul of every man, woman and child is evidenced in the gift of his only begotten Son to die for them, that they should not perish, but, by believing on him, have eternal life.

"What wondrous love is this
That caused the Lord of bliss
To lay aside his crown for my soul."

The Apostle Peter says (I Peter, 1:19): "We are not redeemed by such corruptible things as gold and silver, but by the precious blood of Christ."

It is said that Rowland Hill, on one occasion, was preaching to a vast audience in the open air, when Lady Anne Erskine, who was passing that way in her carriage, on learning who the preacher was, requested to be driven near the stand, that she might hear the great preacher. Rowland Hill, on seeing her, and learning who she was, paused in his sermon and said to the audience: "I have something for sale; who will bid on it? I am going to sell it by auction, and it is worth more than the crown of Europe. It is the soul of Lady Anne Erskine. Will anyone bid for her soul? Hark! me thinks I hear Satan bid. What is his bid? 'I will give riches and honor and pleasure—yea, I will give the whole world for her soul!' Hark! I hear another bid. Who bids? The Lord Jesus Christ! Jesus, what will you give for this soul? 'I will give peace and joy and comfort that the world knows nothing of; yea, I will give eternal life for her soul.'" Turning to Lady Anne Erskine, the preacher said: "You have heard the two bidders for your soul; which shall have it?"

She ordered the footman to open the door, and, pushing her way through the crowd, she said: "The Lord Jesus shall have my soul."

There are two bidders for every soul. Satan promises that which he cannot give, for he is a liar from the beginning, and tries to deceive. But Christ promises that which he is abundantly able to fulfill, and does fulfill to every soul that trusts in him.

THE UNREALIZED LOGIC OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

By Walter G. Harbin.

For Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan to recommend any book is enough to cause me to want to read it. On a recent visit to Jackson this most discriminating reader recommended and loaned me to read "The Unrealized Logic of the Christian Religion," by W. H. Fitchett, B.A., LL.D.

Mr. Fitchett is prominent in Australian Methodism, and through his writings is becoming known throughout all the world of thought and literature.

The unrealized logic of religion is a manual of unexpected evidences. For three hundred years theological literature followed a beaten track, a track so well beaten at last, that given the subject of a book, any moderately close student of theology could reel off the chapters from the back of his head, without ever so much as glancing at the table of contents. Especially was this true in the field of evidences. There was little room for variety, except in the verbiage employed, and that had a tendency towards the stilted coolness of a judicial opinion that made evidences pretty dreary reading.

The theology of the Reformation was theo-centric. It had its origin in the attributes of God. This was necessary. What those mighty intellects did not settle in the field of abstract theology is doubtless beyond the grasp of human logic. The theology of to-day is Christo-centric. It has its origin in the personality of Jesus Christ. We are trying now to enter into the consciousness of our Lord.

With these changes the science of Evidences has changed. The last word has been said and said repeatedly on evidences a priori and a posteriori. Analogy will never go beyond or rise above Butler. Prophecy has been exhausted to find the cumulative evidences in the answer of type and anti-type, and in literal fulfillment. Only the passage of the years, and the slow fulfillment through generations unborn of prophecies which are still prophetic can add much to the evidences derived from that source. But with the awakening of intellect in the Renaissance and with the writing of the Novum Organum, a new field was opened for evidences, which apologetic writers were very slow to enter.

We are learning at last that Nature is as much, though far from as high, a manifestation of God as revelation. This accretion to our verities has given us a new school of apologetics. Some of those who have exploited this field have given us very hazy outlooks, and foggy views, but they have done us service. We are learning to look through nature up to nature's God. Geology and biology alike have been appealed to for deeper evidences of the truth of the Word of God.

Hugh Miller gave the world "The Testimony of the Rocks;" at a later date Henry Drummond, scientist and theologian, and eminent as both, gave us a new analogy in his "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," and in our own times Sir Oliver Lodge has found deeper reconciliations between a changeless faith and a ceaselessly re-crystallizing science.

To none of these classes does Mr. Fitchett's book belong. This is an age of economy. We are making fortunes out of things our fathers threw away. Mr. Fitchett founds some of the most forcible arguments for the Christian faith that twenty years has produced on things that no apologist of a past century would have considered for a moment. He is the economist of apologetics. In realms that we had passed over time and again, and from sources unnoticed by us all, he has built of disregarded materials a mighty bulwark for the Christian faith.

I shall not give much of what the book contains. It would be better to stimulate the appetite for the reading of it and stop at that. But some of the suggestive chapter-headings will awaken interest in what they contain. "The Logic of the Changed Calender." "The Logic of the Missionary." "The Logic of Ourselves." "The Logic of Human Speech." "The Logic of Answered Prayers." The strongest chapter in the book is that on "The Logic of Unproved Negatives." Infidelity has made its denials, let it state and prove its affirmatives. And—but read the chapter.

A sentence from the book itself sets forth the lofty daring of its purpose: "It is certain there are proofs of the truth and divinity of religion which lie closer to us than those formal arguments of which we have spoken, and are of quite another type. They do not need to be drawn out into syllogisms; perhaps they cannot be drawn out so. They are incidental, infinitely various, apparently unrelated to each other; seen vividly at times, and yet at other times lost to the sight." These are the proofs this book sets forth.

It is unfortunate that a writer with so keen insight and so deep penetration should not cultivate a style better adapted to make his reader see things from his own lofty point of vision. Mr. Fitchett's style is sometimes lacking in clearness, and is heavy enough to make it easier to read his book a little at a time than at a sitting. Given clearness and ease of style the book would make as much noise in the world as "The Natural Law in the Spiritual World."

The reader who takes up the "Unrealized Logic of Religion" has an inviting task. Task enough to keep all the faculties of his mind awake, and he will find too all that he could ask to reward him for his pains.

"The Unrealized Logic of the Christian Faith" opens a new field of evidences, and sheds upon it a light remarkably strong and forceful.

THE SEASHORE ASSEMBLY FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

Since the summer sun has made its presence felt we naturally turn our faces toward the gulf breezes and long to be on the banks of the bay.

No spot offers so many advantages as the famous old Seashore Camp Grounds, near Biloxi, Miss. It is a hallowed place because of the prayers of the noblest saints which have gone up from there for the past forty years.

Now that the eyes of the church have been drawn in that direction, and are faintly realizing our advantage in its possession and calling its different assemblies to meet there, with prospects of a branch of our Training School being built on the grounds, it behooves our young Methodists of the adjoining states to keep in touch with its life. I wish to impress upon every reader of the Advocate the importance of trying to get the young people of our church to attend upon the meetings of the Seashore Assembly for Christian Workers, convening this summer, from July 24 to Aug. 3. This is the meeting of the three states, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, to train and inspire proper ideals for Christian service for the present day; and if we would keep abreast with the best thought in doing the Master's work we should attend upon this gathering.

The officers of the Louisiana division to look after its interests are as follows: Rev. A. L. Townsley, President, New Orleans, La.; Rev. Jno. E. Foster, Vice-President, Algiers, La.; Mrs. W. W. Holmes, Secretary, New Orleans, La.; Rev. T. V. Peters, Treasurer, Slidell, La.; Rev. S. L. Riggs, Executive Secretary, St. Francisville, La.

There were about forty workers from Louisiana in attendance last year, and we are very anxious to have at least 100 to enroll during the session of 1909. So let the president of the Woman's Home Mission Society, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Epworth Leaguers, Sunday School superintendents and pastors impress upon our young people publicly and otherwise the importance of saving a little money and taking a vacation from the ordinary pursuits of life and refresh themselves in body, mind and spirit, and derive the greatest benefit for the least expenditure that has ever been offered to the youth of this country. It will cost approximately about $20 for the round trip from most of Louisiana, board and all.

There is no Christian gathering in the South that offers such advantage to every one desiring to attend. I have attended the Y. M. C. A. Summer School, and Moody Bible Institute, and I do not believe that an assembly by the sea can be excelled anywhere for more definite results during a ten-day session.

No one with a ready mind and heart can help but be uplifted by coming in contact with the personnel of the faculty and leaders. Rev. Fitzgerald Sale Parker, D.D., President of the Assembly, not only teaches some of the classes, but gives expression to the whole movement, and the Southern Church has scarcely a more resourceful man in it. Rev. Jno. A. Rice, D.D., whose heart and head is overflowing with the life of God and his Book, and who is fully in sympathy with the whole movement of the Assembly, is to be there to teach one of the Bible classes. Rev. Thos. Carter, D.D., professor of New Testament exegesis at Vanderbilt University, is to lead one of the Bible classes, and if you cannot be interested with his wit and fire you must be beyond redemption and had just as well remain away.

There are Miss Mabel Head, associated with the Woman's Home Mission Society, and Miss Daisy Davies, of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society—two young women of the highest type of womanhood, whose gifts and graces eminently fit them to fill their places in the Assembly as uniquely as any two characters of all the land.

Mrs. Lipscomb, teacher of Bible and mathematics at Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., has been in attendance for several years, and filled in the programme of the vesper service by the sea, and who that ever heard her pleading and elegant voice could discount her ability and worth in such a gathering?

There will be Dr. Hamill and his wife, Miss Susie M. Juden and T. V. Ellzey, the leading lights of the Sunday school work of this country, to give their best service to the Sunday school interests; and there will be half a dozen other good workers present to assist.

The evening lectures will all be given by specialists of the line of thought best fitted to help the young life of our church to-day. With most excellent bathing facilities, boating, fishing and all recreations and a religious atmosphere permeating the entire life of the grounds, with such a small cost, it seems that all should be satisfied and put forth an effort to attend the session this summer. S. L. RIGGS.

If your cup is small, fill it to the brim. Make the most of your opportunities of honest work and pure pleasure.—Henry Van Dyke.

Fourteen Good Reasons for Patronizing Grenada College

First—The unexcelled Home Comforts, unequaled anywhere else in the State.

Second—The Health Conditions; we rarely require the service of a physician.

Third—Our unusually skilled corps of teachers, whom we were able to secure only by paying a salary much above that paid by other girls' schools of the State.

Fourth—The Fine Arts Department, unequaled in the State and unexcelled in the South. Our teacher of Art studied in Germany and France, and our teachers of Music are graduated from the best Conservatories of America.

Fifth—See Descriptive Course of Study, which is conscientiously carried out as indicated.

Sixth—The Lyceum Course, which is superior even to that sustained in the University of Mississippi.

Seventh—The Library, which is fuller and better adapted than that of most girls' schools of the South.

Eighth—Strong Christian Influence dominating all instruction.

Ninth—Personal Attention to the Individual Pupil, with a view to develop the best even out of peculiarities of character.

Tenth—A superior Student Body as Associates, since most of the indifferent have been eliminated.

Eleventh—The Rates are lower than those of any other school doing the same grade of work, owing to the Conference Assessment, which gives us an income not possessed by other schools; further, we have no stockholders to whom we are forced to pay dividends, as are some private schools. Our patrons receive back in excellence of service more than they pay in.

Twelfth—We place but two girls in a room, while most schools put from two to six.

Thirteenth—We require our teachers to continue study. Two are in Europe, two in Chicago, others at other schools in North and East.

Fourteenth—All these superior features enable us to turn out a larger percentage of graduates, who take high stand in the educational world, than any other school in the State. It means something to hold a diploma of the Grenada College.

THE BLOOD SONG.

By Rev. Walter G. Harbin.

"There is a fountain filled with blood,"
The song rang on the frosty air,
As near the mission's door he stood
In rags, defiled, in deep despair.
He slipped inside, he scoffed, he heard,
He feared, he hoped, he knelt to pray;
Light leaped in eyes by sin long blurred,
The blood washed all his sins away.

"The dying thief rejoiced," they sang,
The organ's thousand voices pealed,
His full heart broke, he felt the pang
Of all his inward guilt unhealed.
His thoughts were high, his speech was clean,
But Christless, life's dim path he trod,
"Though vile as he," he owned the stain,
And yielded all his soul to God.

"Dear dying Lamb," a little child
Sang on her way to Sunday School;
A mother's holy influence mild
Had formed her to her Master's rule.
"Thy precious blood," the sweet voice broke,
The young heart opened like a flower,
As in her soul that old song spoke
Its message of his cleansing power.

"When this poor lisping, stamm'ring tongue,"
The dying Christian woke, and stirred;
Around, their hearts with anguish wrung,
They bent to catch his latest word.
A song rose from the couch of death,
A sweet voiced triumph o'er the grave;
He gathered all his failing breath
And sang that fountain's power to save.

"Then in a nobler, sweeter song,"
Through heaven's high arches soars the praise;
Angelic host and blood bought throng
Unite the Lamb's new song to raise;
And sweet and strong mids't that high strain
Swells one clear note of love and blood,
Diviner now the old refrain,
"And sinners plunged beneath that flood Lose all their guilty stains."

A TRIBUTE TO BISHOP GALLOWAY.

As I looked with loyal pride on the apparently aged face of that noble son of my native state pictured on the first page of the Nashville Advocate I felt a glow of admiration, until, as by a presentiment, it occurred: "he is not, for God hath taken him." Twenty-four years ago I met him in the sanctum of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, while he was its editor, and realized that I was in the presence of no ordinary personage, as he tenderly made mention of a contribution I had made to the waste-basket a few days previously.

What a short time it seems since he entered upon his lifework by joining the Mississippi Conference. Well do I remember a little anecdote that happened at Conference which my dear, good father told me of. I think it was the first session after young Galloway had joined; he rose, and was speaking, when the presiding Bishop called him to order. He sat down, and an old veteran arose and uttered a most striking prophecy, saying, "the Lord has a mission for that young man."

Early did the great Church of his choice recognize its duty to place him where he would be untrammeled in the accomplishment of his great lifework, and how nobly did he respond to the call!

While Bishop Galloway always served his Master with becoming humility, it seemed to me that after he was elevated to the Episcopacy he reconsecrated himself and realized to its full extent Christ's teaching: "Except ye become as a little child."

Precious thought! and precious promise, to all given, who will be faithful to the end to meet him, together with all the stars of the first magnitude, with an immeasurable multitude of saints and angels around the great white throne, to spend an endless eternity of unutterable bliss, the first moment of which will repay ten thousand times over for every tribulation, sorrow or suffering met in this life!

CROWLEY DISTRICT.

Dear Brethren: Our district conference was a success in every respect, and reports showed most gratifying results for the first half of the Conference year.

Much remains, however, to be done, in order to meet our obligations, and put our district in the front rank of the conference, where it rightly belongs. We should not be satisfied with anything less than a great revival throughout the district, and collections in full.

This can and will be done, if every preacher and official will do his duty.

The very least that should be expected of any charge is the payment of its assessments in full, and this is the first step toward a gracious revival.

Let the preachers begin at once a systematic canvass in the interest of the benevolences, and see to it that every member and friend of the church make some contribution. If this is done it will be an easy matter to provide for these modest assessments in full, and we should not be content with anything less

None of the assessments for ministerial support are extravagant; and in many instances are inadequate for the actual needs of the preacher and his family, and a failure to meet this obligation must, of necessity, greatly embarrass him. Let the stewards bring this matter before their congregations, and insist that they meet this debt to their pastor. No more heroic band of men ever lived than those cultivating the fields in the bounds of this district, and to these same Southern Methodist preachers is and will be due the redemption of this country. Others may come and others may go, but these go on forever.

EPWORTH LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The Epworth Leagues of the North Mississippi Conference held their Annual Conference in New Albany, Miss., June 15-16 and 17th. The Conference was the best in the history of the Leagues of North Mississippi, and the effect of this great meeting of young people is going to be felt throughout the Conference. From the very beginning the spirit of consecration and loyalty to their Master's cause was evidenced by all who took part, and cold and dead indeed must have been that heart that could have witnessed the devotion and enthusiasm of these young people, without being filled with a holy zeal to do greater things for Christ.

The Conference was opened Tuesday evening by Rev. R. A. Clark, president of the North Mississippi League Board, followed by a message from Brother J. B. Small, president of the Conference. The address of welcome was delivered by Brother G. L. Jones, of New Albany, and responded to by Mr. F. J. McDonnell, Jr., of Okolona. The first evening session closed with an impressive consecration service, followed by a social half-hour.

Wednesday, the second day of the Conference, was well begun by a quiet hour service at 6 a. m., conducted by Rev. S. L. Pope. Devotional services at 8:30 a. m., by Rev. T. W. Lewis, were followed by organization and enrollment. At 10 a. m., a well prepared report of the first vice-president, Miss Bessie Critz, was read. This was followed by a very interesting talk on "How to make a Devotional Meeting both Interesting and Profitable," by Miss Nora Evans, of Booneville, after which we enjoyed a round-table discussion of practical problems of this department. At 11:15 we had the pleasure of listening to Dr. W. F. McMurry, of Louisville, Ky., on the "Needs of the great Southwest for Church Extension Work."

The afternoon session was begun with devotional services by Rev. T. W. Lewis; after which the work of the Junior, Intermediate, and Boys' Leagues was taken up. The Junior Superintendent, Miss Mary Sweatman, was not able to be with us, but a very interesting paper on "How I Conduct A Junior League" was read by Mrs. Theresa Cavin, of Okolona. An open conference then gave opportunity for general discussion of this work. The second vice president being absent, no report was had from the Charity and Help Department. The Conference then went into a very thorough discussion of the work of this department, and we feel sure that from the ideas exchanged greater things along this line may be expected from the Leagues.

After a short devotional meeting at 8 p. m., Dr. McMurry again addressed the Conference, taking as his subject the "Reign of Josiah" and illustrating most entertainingly the possibilities of the young life of the church.

Thursday morning the quiet hour was observed at 6 a. m., being led by Rev. S. L. Pope. At 8:30 the regular morning session opened with devotional service by Rev. T. W. Lewis. A business session followed, during which Kosciusko was selected as the next place of meeting. The report of the third vice-president was then read by Rev. J. H. Holder, as Miss Blanche Foose could not be present. Mrs. W. E. Kennedy, of Columbus, then gave a demonstration of "How to Conduct a Successful League Social" which was greatly enjoyed by all.

An open conference then followed and the work of this department was fully discussed, and the experience of some of the Leaguers given. A general discussion was then engaged in as to the best method of conducting a business meeting. The necessity of a business meeting once a month was clearly shown and the value of using the regular printed report forms for the different departments was fully demonstrated.

Mr. T. B. King, of Memphis, then addressed the Conference, pointing out the necessity of early training and example to the young, and by the relation of a touching incident in the life of Henry W. Grady impressing the great truth that only when we become as little children do we really enter into the kingdom of God.

The last afternoon session opened with a devotional meeting, and then the fourth vice-president not being present, his report was read by Rev. J. H. Holder, secretary of the League Board. Brother Holder supplemented this report with valuable suggestions on mission work, calling special attention to the mission study course. The Conference then went into an election of officers which resulted as follows:

President, J. B. Small, Winona; first vice-president, Miss Nora Evans, Booneville; second vice-president, Miss Estha Hall, New Albany; third vice-president, Mrs. W. E. Kennedy, Columbus; fourth vice-president, Walter Boswell, Kosciusko; secretary and treasurer, W. E. Kennedy, Columbus; Junior Superintendent, Mrs. Jennie W. Shannon; press reporter, Miss Mary Stokes, Columbus.

District Secretaries—Aberdeen, Mrs. Theresa Cavin, of Okolona; Columbus, Miss Bessie Critz, of West Point; Corinth, Miss Elizabeth Bouten, of New Albany; Durant, Miss Lovie C. Clark, Kosciusko; Greenville, Rev. R. P. Neblitt, Shelby; Oxford, Mrs. J. H. Mitchell, Water Valley; Sardis, Rev. S. L. Pope, Senatobia; Winona, Miss Mary Sweatman, Winona.

The regular devotional exercises, Thursday evening, were followed by a splendid address by Mr. T. B. King showing how earnest and constant our efforts as Epworth Leaguers should be to find the lost, and to make soul-saving service the one great purpose and aim of our lives.

The installation of officers then followed, and was made very impressive by all Leaguers coming forward and pledging their support with a good, old-fashioned hand-shaking. Personal expressions as to what had been gotten out of the Conference, and how it would be used, brought to a close the most successful League Conference we have ever had the pleasure of attending.

At the business meeting of the Conference the following resolutions were adopted:

1. We are profoundly grateful for the evidence of substantial growth in League work throughout our bounds. We believe the Epworth League is on a firmer basis than ever before.

2. We hereby express to our Conference officers, especially to the programme committee, our unqualified appreciation of the splendid work they have done during the year. They have been diligent in stirring up the pastors and Leaguers, and they have given us a Conference of much value to us.

3. It is our belief that the Junior League and the Juvenile Missionary Society should be united on some fair and just basis, so that our children may get all the benefits without the confusion of the two organizations as they now exist. We request our president and secretary to prepare a suitable memorial to the General Conference to meet in Asheville, N. C., next May.

4. We hereby express our thanks to the railroads for reduced rates of travel and to the press for courtesies extended.

5. We are especially grateful to the good people of New Albany for the generous hospitality extended to us during our stay here: to the committee on entertainment for their untiring attentions, and to Brother Harris, the pastor, for thoughtful courtesies.

One hundred and twenty-seven delegates registered, representing thirty-seven towns in the North Mississippi Conference.

AN APPEAL FOR A CHURCH.

I wish to inform the readers of the Advocate that the Poplar Springs Methodist Church was accidentally burned, and that it is very necessary for us to build a creditable one in its stead, since Meridian is building out that way, and, too, it was near the Beeson Male and Female Colleges. Our people are bestirring themselves for such a building, but they are not able to build and complete such a building without help, and therefore we appeal to the readers of the Advocate to send us any amount that they may see proper, and we shall thankfully receive it, with prayer for the contributor.

Dear readers, please do not read this appeal and then forget it without a response of at least $1, more or less. We should be quite thankful to receive about $1000. With that amount we feel sure of our ability to erect the building needed. Dear reader, please help us at once, so we shall be able to hold a revival in same, any how, in September or October, if not sooner. May God's blessings be the possession of all.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, state president, writes: "With this letter I am saying 'good-bye' on the eve of my annual trip to New York. My address will be 225 Rich Ave., Mount Vernon, New York." Let the women who may need to write to Mrs. Kennedy while she is away take notice. We wish for her a pleasant and profitable journey with a safe rreturn.

MONROE.

We were privileged to spend a day in Monroe recently visiting Brother and Sister Wynn and their new W. H. M. Auxiliary. When we learned Monroe had really become connectional, we felt like saying, "I told you so." Brother Wynn is helping those women and they are helping him. Prospects are bright for a revival. One thing is noticed that is a new departure, each woman responded to "roll call" by stepping forward and paying dues. Monroe is "all-right." Brother Wynn's father and mother are visiting him. The church is "a thing of beauty and a joy forever," a more comfortable and commodious parsonage none need desire. There is just one dark side to the picture. Monroe is cursed with the open saloon. May we all work and pray "till we make the map all white."

THE MISSISSIPPI ORPHANS' HOME.

Since this institution was established eleven years ago, there have been 567 children received. There are at present 160 in the Home. The present building was constructed four years ago in Jackson, Miss., and was intended to accomodate 150 children. It is now filled to overflowing and others are knocking at the door for admission. We need two other brick buildings, costing from $30,000 to $35,000. Three men have kindly agreed to give us half of this amount, will you not assist in this worthy cause? Any amount you may feel justified in contributing will be duly appreciated. The institution belongs to the Methodists of Mississippi and is a home for all white orphans or destitute children.

This is practical religion; money here invested will be bringing in returns and declaring dividends long after you have passed away.

Make remittances to Rev. M. L. Burton, treasurer, Purvis, Miss., or to me direct. Papers throughout Mississippi, will please copy.

WISE SUGGESTIONS CONCERNING EDUCATION.

Selected by Rev. W. A. Betts, President Mississippi Conference Training School, Montrose, Miss.

If a man is to be educated physically and intelligently because he has a physical and intelligent nature, why should he not be educated and trained morally and spiritually because he has a moral and spiritual nature? If men are to be trained to be strong in muscle, why not to be strong in the Lord? If to wrestle with each other, why not with wickedness? If to carry on mimic fights and boxing, why not to fight the good fight of faith? If to gain the crown of victory in contests with each other why not an incorruptible crown? If to run races in the gymnasium and on the campus, why not to run the race that is set before them in which they are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses? Why, in short, if they are to be trained in bodily exercise that profiteth little, should they not be trained in godliness, that is profitable unto all things?"—President Hopkins.

* * *

I think that which deals with spiritual things should be elemental and ingrained, and not produced from without. The effort to make one religious is apt to result in nothing more than whitewashing a sepulcher. I am not opposing efforts to reform and give better manners. * * * That we should seek by our education to develop the spiritual nature is of first and last importance. I do not believe, however, that it can be plastered on. I think that as a veneer religion is a failure. This I consider fundamental.—D. C. Barrow, LL. D., of Ga.

It is in failure to rightly apprehend the elements of religious education that we may err.

Ask then: Is truth that makes free taught? Is unselfishness that makes all men brothers, taught? Is devotion to duty taught? Is courage which endureth and sustaineth, taught? These are things which all have the right to ask, for all must hold that these things are good. And all should hold that those who teach should exhibit in life these attributes of character. The school which does not require regular and systematic performance of such tasks as are set is, in so far as it falls short, irreligious.—D. C. Barrow, LL. D., of Ga.

* * *

Whatever else may be the function of the academy, its patrons expect it to provide the elements of general culture and an acquaintance with the subjects included in its curriculum. They look to it for the beginnings of scholarship, for training in accuracy, and for such knowledge as will enable its graduates to pursue future studies in science, arts or trades with success. This calls for intensive work in order to promote precision of thought and speech, without which there can be no thoroughness of scholarship, no successful college career. Those studies which develop strength belong to this period and this curriculum. We must not forget that in laying foundations we should first desire solidity. He who sacrifices this for decorations has missed the purpose before him. A special province of this school is to teach pupils how to study. When a boy has learned where to look for things and has acquired some initiative in thinking, together with the mastery of a few subjects at the basis of education, his college and future career can no longer be a matter of doubt.—Prof. J. D. Clary, of Arkansas.

* * *

Education is not breadth, if breadth means the spreading of one's energies over too wide a field, but it is mastery. Happy is that youth who has secured is his boisterous years the results of firm discipline, and has learned the value of thoroughness and concentration. It is our part to give attention to these things. We make no specialists. When he leaves our hands, he will be neither merchant, minister nor magistrate, but should be first of all a man.—Prof. J. D. Clary, of Arkansas.

* * *

Whereas, from the birth of Methodism down to the present hour the educational work of the Church has been her right arm of power; and whereas the future power and usefulness of our Church are dependent upon the maintenance of our institutions at such a point of efficiency that we can train our children under positively Christian influences, so that whether as preachers or laymen they may show themselves to be workmen that need not to be ashamed; be it

Resolved, 1. That we declare it to be the unwavering purpose of the M. E. Church, South, to furnish academic, collegiate and university training, which shall have it as its aim to develop the physical, mental and spiritual powers to the highest possible point and to bring all these developed powers into captivity to Christ that our children may do their work in life in right relation to God and to humanity, and thus work together with God to bring in the Master's kingdom.

2. That we call upon our people to show their sincerity and the earnestness of their purpose by giving their sympathy, prayers and money to maintain, equip and endow our institutions, so that our schools may be able to give to our children all the advantages that are necessary for the proper development of their God-given powers.—Board of Education, M. E. Church, South, 1908.

Is any one ready to say that the Southern people are not able to equip their schools, colleges and universities up to the level of those favored institutions in the East and North and West? If so, it may be answered that any people with patience, courage and indomitable energy enough to triumph in a single generation over the ravages of the most disastrous war ever waged in history, and then when fully on their feet have moral force enough soon to eliminate by acts of legislation a drink bill of nearly a half billion of dollars annually, have the innate manhood to amaze all mankind with what they can do. The Southern people can do anything they determine to do.—Dr. James W. Lee, of Georgia.

THE BAG-OF-BEANS TEST.

"Very well," remarked Mr. Henry Thurston, looking up from his desk, where he was just signing a check, "So they've passed the punctual and honesty tests? Now try them on the bag of beans. A fellow will never make a success in our business if he gets cross and shows temper over trifling mishaps and unavoidable accidents. And one is always meeting with just such annoyances in work of this kind. The one who proves himself good natured at the bursting of the bag—if either does—may be told that he is engaged at seven dollars a week."

Mr. Thurston paused, and took up his pen.

"Wait a minute," quickly after a moment's reflection. "Be sure there's enough water on the counter to thoroughly wet the bottoms of the bags. Then, too, try one of them this afternoon, and the other at the same time to-morrow. It might hardly be a fair test of their dispositions to make use of it on either of the two boys in the morning. One sort of feels better natured then, you know, anyway!"

Mr. Nelson, head clerk in the big wholesale and retail establishment of Thurston & Lincoln, left the comfortably furnished office of the firm, and went back to the busy delivery department.

There were three qualifications which the head of the establishment insisted that each employe of the company should possess and strictly live up to. These were honesty, punctuality and wholesome good nature. Boys had been known to lose their position there, owing to their getting angry over mere trifles. Mr. Thurston felt that a boy's usefulness to the firm depended on an unruffled disposition quite as much as it did on punctuality and honesty.

The constant growth and enlargement of Thurston & Lincoln's business made it necessary from time to time to increase their working force accordingly. And it was the custom of the company to promote, at such times, the men and boys already in their employ, leaving to be filled by the new hands only the "bottom down" places, as the clerks characteristically called them.

One of the men had just now been sent out on the road as a traveling salesman—the firm did a large wholesale business—causing, after a rearrangement of the force, a vacancy in the delivery department.

Harold Stevenson and his cousin, Willis Fuller, had both applied for the position, and they of all the many applicants had passed the punctuality and honesty tests; and now it lay between the two boys as to which one would be successful in obtaining the desired situation.

Thurston & Lincoln had the reputation of being the most reliable firm with which to hold a job in the large and thriving village of Muncie.

"I s'pose it's selfish—I admit—but I hope old man Thurston will give me the place," declared Harold Stephenson, with an air of careless disrespect. He was talking with Willis over the prospects the evening before the first bag-of-beans test. "Of course I'd like for you to have it, too; but you wouldn't mind losing it as much as I would. This probation 'stunt' of his—I don't imagine Mr. Lincoln has anything to do with it—is a queer wrinkle. I call it a piece of downright foolishness; I don't know how you regard it."

"It gives them a chance to find out whether they want a fellow or not," replied Willis, considerately. "For my part, I think it's a pretty good scheme. Of course, it keeps a fellow in suspense—and all that."

"Which one of us do you s'pose will 'land' the job, anyhow? Give us your opinion," and Harold picked up a chip and began whittling aimlessly.

"I haven't the least idea—but one of us! And I'm rather proud that we've been singled out from all the fellows who've made application; there were twenty, at least, which applied for the place."

"More'n that," exclaimed Harold.

"Not very many more. And if they give it to you, I stand a show of getting the next place when a vacancy occurs. I won't be disappointed, though; I don't very well see how I could if you get it."

"I've been trying hard enough," and Harold put up his jackknife. "After I'm once sure of the job, you bet your life I won't be as painstaking over every little thing as I've been this week. It's just killing on a fellow to be so punctual, and all that kind of nonsense—a person couldn't stand it long."

"He'd have to while he worked for Thurston & Lincoln," remarked Willis, quietly. "And it's no more'n right he should."

"Well, you can, if you get the place. You'd be a fool, though."

The two boys, while closely related, were entirely different in disposition and temperament. Harold's character was well described by their Uncle Thomas as being one of "fits and starts." Willis, though not so smart in many ways, was a steady-going, earnest fellow, always "making good" the responsibilities laid upon him.

Willis Fuller was sent out with one of the delivery wagons the next afternoon—the afternoon of the first bag-of-beans test, it being the purpose to have him absent from the store at the time of Harold's trial.

A four-quart bag of beans had been left on the counter in one end of the store, placed as though by accident in a small amount of water.

Harold was helping one of the clerks put up an order for the afternoon's delivery, when Mr. Nelson called from the door, where he was overseeing the loading of a wagon just about to start out, "I wish, Stephenson, you'd bring over here that bag of beans you'll find on the north counter." "All right, sir!" and Harold left his work and hurried over for the beans. As he hastily caught up the bag the bottom suddenly came out, scattering its contents over the floor and under the nearby boxes and barrels.

"Confound the luck!" exclaimed Harold, his face flushing a deep red. "Some one's a precious pretty fool, slopping water round in that way!" And he savagely kicked the unoffending peck measure which lay on the floor beside him back under the counter.

"I've spilled them—everywhere!" he called angrily across the store to Mr. Nelson. "The team will have to go without them, or have another order put up. 'Twill take me till doomsday getting them all off the floor again!"

"I'm afraid he won't do," reflected the head clerk; and as he glanced over toward the other end of the room, he saw Mr. Thurston silently standing in his office door.

Mr. Thurston, of course, made no comment, and after watching Harold for a moment, as he began angrily to gather up the beans, he quietly closed the door, and went back to his desk.

"I'm glad it's going to be decided soon," remarked Harold, as the two boys were walking home from the store that evening. "Mr. Nelson says we'll know to-morrow, and if I'm not going to have the place, I don't want to be fooling away my time away to please old man Thurston and his crowd! I saw him watching me while I was picking up a bag of beans I spilled to-day. I s'pose he wanted to see how fast I could work—but I didn't hurt myself. It doesn't pay!"

"He seems to me like a mighty fine person to work for; and Mr. Nelson's just a peach of a man!" exclaimed Willis, enthusiastically. "It's queer you feel as you do. For my part, I don't wonder so many folks apply for the place when there's a vacancy there!"

"Oh, well, it's good enough, I suppose," returned Harold. "I kind of think they like me; they ought to—I've given them a square deal!"

It was in the middle of the afternoon, the next day, when Mr. Nelson asked Willis to carry the bag of beans he'd find on the cereal counter to Freeman Baker, who was just then checking off an order for a downtown restaurant.

He hurriedly took up the bag, when out dropped the beans, falling in reckless confusion on the store floor.

"I'm afraid I've done it now, Mr. Nelson," called Willis, quickly. "You'll think I'm a blunderer; but it won't take long to gather them up again. I might as well laugh as cry," cheerfully. "I'll have them off the floor in a little while, and I'll work all the harder afterwards."

"That's the kind of a fellow to have!" Mr. Thurston went back to his work in the office—Willis hadn't seen him standing in the partly open door.

"I don't understand why they gave you the place!" declared Harold, gloomily, as Willis joined him that evening outside of the store door. "I've actually slaved for a week for them; never tried harder in my life to please—and this is what I get for it!"

"I really expected they would give you the job," replied Willis, generously. "And I don't see why they didn't!"

But Mr. Thurston did; and his reason was based on the result of his bag-of-beans test!—Zion's Herald.

"Power for Service."

This is a book of 261 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It is from the press of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

THE SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

The great [illegible] Seashore [illegible] is again at hand. The [illegible] while we write [illegible] people from all sections of the country are making their way to the [illegible] spot by the seashore. If any brother or sister [illegible] on this notice,—those pondering the [illegible] during this hot weather—we hope they will decide at once to go to the Seashore Camp Meeting. There is no better place in all the South, as far as we know, for summer recreation and [illegible] a spiritual uplift. [illegible] We do not know who will be the preachers [illegible] that is immaterial—the preachers will be there and their trumpets will give no uncertain sound. Living is about as cheap at the camp ground as anywhere else, besides it has the advantage of sea breezes and sea bathing. Let everybody who can, go to the Seashore Camp Meeting!

OUR EPISCOPACY—UNDEMOCRATIC.

Episcopal Churches are supposed to be governed by Bishops. Whether they occupy an order in the Church or only an office is immaterial to the discussion of the question as one of Church polity. As a matter of fact pure episcopacy is found only in the Roman Catholic Church. It is maintained in a modified form in the Church of England, of which the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States is the offspring. It exists likewise in a modified form in Methodist Episcopal Churches. These Churches maintain Bishops and they have extensive power, but their authority is not absolute. Their duties are as clearly defined as are the duties of the humblest order of preachers in Methodism, and they are held strictly to account. The examination of the character and official administration of the Bishops is as rigid and searching as the examination of presiding elders and pastors.

Only in three particulars does the power of the Episcopacy even seem to be absolute, viz.: In arranging the districts, choosing the presiding elders and appointing the pastors, and deciding questions of law coming up in the regular business of an Annual or a District Conference, or on appeal. In the three particulars named there is both great authority and responsibility, requiring wisdom, grace and the spirit of impartiality that the duties of the Bishop may be so performed as to [illegible] the interests of the whole Church. [illegible] preachers [illegible] subject [illegible] questions of [illegible] except in the case [illegible] and confirmed by the College of Bishops. In such matters the Bishops [illegible] as a court of last resort [illegible] General Conference may alter [illegible] the question to the Annual Conferences [illegible]

The [illegible] Conference [illegible] the Bishops [illegible] 1828 [illegible] General Conference [illegible] presiding elders [illegible] much authority [illegible] We are [illegible] appointment is undemocratic, but that it is [illegible] On the contrary we see that Episcopal Methodism [illegible] only a complete and efficient system of supplying churches with pastors, but that it is [illegible] of all denominations in winning [illegible] Whether the itinerant system under the direction of a competent Episcopacy may be credited with the success of Methodism it is unnecessary to affirm.

Some of our brethren surrender or beg the question when, in attempting to defend our polity they tell us it is a system built on compromises: that the preachers surrender their right to choose their fields of labor, and the people surrender their right to choose pastors. When and where did the preachers obtain the right to go where they please? When and where did the people secure the right to choose pastors? There is not a word of such rights in the New Testament, nor in the organization of Mr. Wesley's original societies, nor in the organization of American Methodism. As Mr. Wesley ante-dated the societies, members being received only on his approbation, he being "the father and founder under God" he claimed the right as the societies grew and multiplied, to name his "helpers," and the people accepted his appointments as children in the gospel. And, as the Episcopacy in our Church ante-dated the Church itself in America, Mr. Wesley having ordained and authorized Dr. Thomas Coke as General Superintendent and sent him to America as his representative, it follows that if Mr. Wesley had a right to appoint the preachers in England, Bishop Coke had the right to appoint them in America. It was in the power of the preachers who represented the societies at the organzation of the Church in 1784 to reject Bishop Coke, and organize on their own responsibility, and in their own way, but they chose to organize under Mr. Wesley's directions thus recognizing Dr. Coke's right, and the right of his successors to appoint the preachers. Episcopal authority to appoint the preachers has been exercised from the beginning to the present day, and cannot be taken away without destroying the very constitution of the Church. As a believer in the providential rise of Episcopal Methodism we are unwilling to change [illegible] alter any part or rule of government so as to do away with Episcopacy or destroy the plan of our itinerant general superintendency. We are unwilling even to modify our [illegible] elders and make them share with the Bishops the responsibility of stationing the preachers. This would be like submitting to Congress the election of the President's cabinet and holding cabinet officers [illegible] responsible [illegible] Such action would destroy [illegible] of the presidency. Our Bishops [illegible] as general superintendents have the right to call in council not only presiding elders [illegible] laymen, [illegible] presiding [illegible] would share with the Bishops the responsibility of making the appointments. [illegible] would [illegible] away with [illegible] and lodge the most important work of the Church in the hands of a commission [illegible] beyond the province of the General Conference.

In our ranks we have no [illegible] out of work except those who are disabled by sickness or age. We have no churches without pastors. This is one of the glories of Episcopal Methodism. The Bishops' eyes are on the whole field and they keep the work supplied. This could not be done without an itinerant ministry, and an unhampered Episcopacy.

PERSONAL.

After spending a few weeks in Texas, Rev. W. G. Harbin will hold several meetings in the bounds of the Ruston District.

Rev. H. N. Brown, of Morgan City, La., is in the city with his wife, who has been sick for some days in one of the sanitariums. We are glad to learn this (Monday) morning that she is improving.

The Ruston District Conference had a large attendance and a delightful session. The Presiding Elder, Rev. R. W. Tucker, is very popular in his district, and the people respond readily to his suggestions.

Rev. W. W. Perry gives us notice of the death of a good man, Brother Chas. A. Redding, who died at his home, Terry, Miss., June 12, in the 59th year of his age. He was superintendent of the Sunday school, cashier of the bank, and useful both in the church and in the community.

We reprint this week Rev. T. W. Lewis' call in reference to Millsaps College endowment notes, with an added word which came in last week after the paper had gone to press. It is a matter of utmost importance, and we trust our preachers will comply with Brother Lewis' request.

Our friend and brother, Rev. W. G. Harbin, now in the local ranks, was honored last week by the Ruston District Conference, of which he was a member, by election as delegate to the ensuing session of the Louisiana Annual Conference. He was also made secretary of the District Conference.

We learn with pleasure that Rev. F. N. Sweeney has so far recovered his health as to be able to resume his work at Baker, La. During his protracted sickness the people of his charge were very kind to him; and to them and all others who showed an interest in his welfare he returns his heartfelt thanks.

Notwithstanding the exceedingly warm weather, accompanied by an unusual quantity of rain, Rev. T. W. Lewis, of Columbus, Miss., tells us that the work of the Church "moves on as usual. About one hundred persons attend the prayer meeting, and three hundred the Sunday school." And the preacher is at his post.

Dr. J. A. Rice, of Rayne Memorial, has been over in Texas. Both at the commencement of Southwestern University and the Preachers' Institute he mightily pleased and edified the people. He preached the commencement sermon, and delivered the literary address. At the Institute he delivered a course of lectures. We learn privately that the lectures literally captivated the preachers.

Rev. G. W. Gordon, of Kossuth, Miss., writes requesting the prayers of the brethren in behalf of his wife, who was, on June 24, stricken with paralysis, the whole of her left side being involved. At the time of Brother Gordon's writing she was slightly better of the stroke, but still in a serious condition. May the good Lord sustain Sister Gordon in this affliction!

Rev. L. B. Hankins, Pleasant Hill, Miss., is again on the sick list. He entered upon the active duties of his pastorate too soon after his long sickness last fall. He is now suffering a "nervous breakdown." He asks the brethren to remember him in prayer. He is highly esteemed by the members of his charge, and they will bear him in mind and heart while he is resting at a Mineral Wells resort near Memphis.

We learn that on June 22, 1909, the marriage of Miss Annie L. Henderson and Mr. Howard Henderson, of Chicago, Ill., was solemnized by Rev. Jno. F. Foster at the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Mansfield, La. Miss Henderson is a stepdaughter of Rev. Robert Parvin, for long years a member of the Louisiana Annual Conference. Mr. Henderson is a leading lawyer of Chicago. The good wishes of the Advocate go with the happy couple.

On June 30 Miss Lucille Williams and Prof. Paul Worley were united in marriage in the parsonage at Mayhew, Miss., by Rev. T. H. Dorsey. The bride is the "daughter of the parsonage," her father, Rev. A. H. Williams, having for many years been a faithful itinerant preacher. She is a recent graduate of Grenada College, and we heartily congratulate Prof. Worley in securing her heart and hand. The young people have our best wishes for happiness and long life.

We have received from Dr. McMurry several leaflets published by the Church Extension Board, among them: "The Reign of the Rose," by Dr. W. E. Stahler, of the Lutheran Church; "The Dynamics of a Building," by Rev. Henry Trawick, of the Alabama Conference, and "The Larger Life and Church Extension," by Bishop Wilson. These and others, all concerning Church Extension, may be had for the asking by writing to Dr. W. F. McMurry, Louisville, Ky.

A well devised and elegantly printed programme of the Corinth District Conference has reached us from the presiding elder, Rev. B. P. Jace, who invites us to "come or send a hand." The Conference will be held at Booneville, Miss., July 20-23. It will be hot about that time, Booneville is about four hundred miles from this end of the line, and our pocket-book "flatter than a flounder"—the effect of the "dull season." We nevertheless appreciate the "beloved's" kind invitation.

One of the great civic conferences of America is the Temperance Conference inaugurated last summer at Winona Lake, Ind. It will be made a permanent institution. The conference will be held this year one week beginning on the first day of August. It is the only assembly or conference of any great importance in which Southern talent is duly recognized and represented—seven leading temperance men of the South being on the programme. There are eight, counting Robert E. Clay, "the colored orator" of Bristol, Va. Rev. Geo. R. Stuart, one of the great Southern leaders, is the Director of the Temperance Conference.

Dr. H. W. Featherstun, of the Natchez District, kindly furnishes the following personal items: "Rev. H. C. Brown, at Centerville, is suffering severely from over-work, a serious nervous breakdown. No man was ever in higher favor with any people than is H. C. Brown with the people of Centerville. No man ever did better work than he has been doing there. We hope for his early restoration; but at present he is very sick. * * * Rev. H. W. Van Hook, at Woodville, has become president of Edward McGehee College for Girls, located there. Not every man could successfully run a pastorate and a college at the same time; but I am sure that Van Hook can. The prospects at Woodville for both are very promising."

A PROPOSITION.

We are desirous of making it possible for any student attending our Training School to take bookkeeping, shorthand or penmanship, along with the other studies pursued. If, therefore, any capable young man or woman proficient in these departments wishes to take our literary or piano course and pay board and tuition for same by teaching bookkeeping, shorthand or penmanship at such periods as may be mutually satisfactory, we would like to correspond with him or her. By this means we can build up a regular business department, and be able to offer a salary the following year.

TO IMPROVE OUR CHURCH AT HOLLY SPRINGS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I dislike to "tell tales out of school," but must be pardoned this time for so doing. For the past three Sundays our faithful pastor, Brother Borders, has been giving us sermons at the 11 o'clock service on our duty towards the material part of the church. For instance, one of his sermons was from Haggai 1:4, which reads: "Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your celled houses, and this house lie waste?" You can imagine about what a man of his ability would say from that text. So, last Sunday, after service, he called a sort of "church conference," and asked for contributions. He added that he would himself give one-tenth of any amount up to $1000 that was subscribed. That was just like Borders. The subscription was liberal. A finance committee and a building committee were named, and are now at work soliciting contributions from the members only, and the neat sum of $1000 is now about subscribed. We are, therefore, through the direct efforts of Brother Borders, soon to see our elegant old church put on much-needed improvements. Borders is a hustler. He does things. He is now in his third year at this place, and is more popular and loved than at the end of his first year. He is not only popular with his own people, but also with the masses. God has wonderful things laid up for this man to do. Come to see us, Doctor, when our church gets her "new clothes on." Very sincerely,

W. A. BELK.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

At the recent meeting of the Board of Trustees I was instructed to urge the payment of the subscriptions to the Endowment Fund. I was authorized to engage the services of such persons as I could secure to aid me in making these collections.

We now have an unpaid subscription list of $31,300. Of this amount $10,000 is NOW DUE. If we can collect this $10,000 it will secure another $10,000, which will almost complete our ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND we started out to raise three years ago. Surely our friends will not falter or neglect to send in their checks, when so much depends upon prompt action.

I am anxious to engage the services of competent persons at each of the places where we have subscription lists. Such friends as Lee Rogers, of New Albany; Warner Wells, of Greenwood; Sam Berryhill, of Water Valley; H. C. Campbell, of West Point; Mrs. Helen Woodward, of Starkville, and others, are worthy of all praise. Kind friends, send in your checks.

Will the pastors please read the foregoing notice in those churches where we have subscriptions? I will greatly appreciate it.

CLUB RATES.

The club rates for 1909 are as follows:

For clubs of five or more, we will send the "Advocate" for $1.50 each.

In clubs of ten or more we will send the "Advocate" for $1.25 each. In either club we allow a commission of 25 cents on each subscriber, which we expect the person securing the club to retain when making remittance to us. We make no distinction between old and new subscribers in the clubs. The only condition is that you secure enough names to obtain the club rate and that all arrearages be paid. We have made these clubs small enough, that no one should send in a club asking for the club rate until he has the necessary number. After you have once secured your club, you may continue to add to it until the next Annual Conference, at the same rate, sending one at a time if you wish.

Any preacher who so desires, may send the full amount of the club rate, letting his subscribers have "Go Forward," instead of the commission. We will only send "Go Forward" when there is a request for it. To make the matter still more plain, if possible, when we receive five or more names accompanied by $1.50 for each name, we will give a year's subscription to "Go Forward" to each of these persons, if we are asked to do so at the time the names are sent in. When we receive ten or more names, accompanied by $1.25 each, and the request to send "Go Forward," we will do so.

When checks are sent us for $2 or under, add 10 cents to cover cost of collection. A check for $1 is only worth 90 cents to us. When we have to pay the collecting fee, we will give credit on subscription only so far as the balance after paying for collection of check will carry said subscription.

SEASHORE CAMP-MEETING.

ANNUAL CAMP MEETING JULY 7-15.

Special Rates on the Railroads.

NO ADMISSION FEE AT THE GATES OF THE GROUNDS DURING THE CAMP MEETING.

The Seashore Camp Meeting is known over a large part of Methodism to-day. Men have attended it from all parts of the Union. Last year the revival fires burned with old-time vigor and we are hoping and praying for a better meeting this year than last.

The religious services are under the direction of the Presiding Elders of New Orleans, Seashore and Mobile District Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, and these brethren will be assisted by the best preaching talent that can be obtained.

Preaching under the Tabernacle, Grove and Cottage Prayer Meetings, and other religious services, will be held during each day and evening, to which all persons on the grounds are not only cordially invited, but are expected to attend.

Plan to come this year, and bring your unconverted friends with you. All Methodist preachers will be admitted into the grounds and provided with board and lodging free of charge during Camp Meeting.

A DELIGHTFUL SUMMER HOME.

There is not in all the Southland a more delightful place to spend the summer than on the Seashore Camp Ground. There are ample accommodations and good board. A great many families own or rent cottages on the grounds. Electric lights, artesian water and gas for cooking give the essential comforts of the city. The seashore drive and electric street car line extends for thirty miles or more, with comfortable homes on one side and the gulf on the other. The bathing privileges are free to those who make their homes on the camp grounds. The gulf breeze tempers the climate, until it is more delightful than at many Northern resorts. Fresh fish and oysters may be had all the summer through.

A CONGENIAL PLACE FOR CHRISTIANS.

Too often the summer outing has been a time for relaxation of the spiritual life, and even of backsliding on the part of our church members. Many men and women date the beginning of their aggressive service for the Master to a few days spent on the camp grounds. There is a distinctively Christian atmosphere, and the many assemblies as well as the Camp Meeting bring together some of the brightest men and some of the most saintly characters we have. There is no compulsion about attending any of the lectures or sermons, but they are in easy reach and there is a sane and healthy tone, that tends to vigorous thinking and wholesome living. If you spend your vacation on the camp ground, you will not require a month to recover from your "rest;" but you will at once be ready to take your place in your work and your church when you return to your home.

ATTRACTIONS FOR THE SUMMER OF 1909.

Annual Camp Meeting, July 7-15. The Camp Meeting really gives the right to exist to the grounds, and it was for this purpose that Christian men invested their money in this property, in order that men might come away for a season from their other cares and commune with God. We hope for a revival this year.

Summer School for Sunday School Workers, July 16-23. In this day, when every school teacher who is keeping up with his profession attends a summer normal somewhere, it is a mark of the enlarged conception given to the most important teaching that we have, that summer normals are being provided for Sunday School teachers. In the school of methods for Sunday School Workers some of the most experienced teachers of the nation will tell how best to conduct the Sunday School.

Seashore Assembly for Christian Workers, July 24-Aug. 3. This is the successor to the former Seashore Epworth League Assembly. It has simply broadened the scope of its work. While not undertaking to do especially evangelical work, but rather to train the young people how to work, this assembly usually numbers many conversions as an immediate result of its work. Some of the gracious revivals that have blessed some of the churches have had their inception in the new conceptions of service given the young people in this assembly.

CHILDREN'S DAY AT LAMAR, MISS.

The Sunday School at Lamar celebrated Children's Day on Sunday, June 20. Mrs. Fannie D. Leake and daughter, Miss Gracie, were at the organ with Mrs. Hall and Miss Hall, the pastor's wife and sister. Mrs. Tony Oliphant, leader in singing. Mrs. [illegible] Gallamer, Mrs. Maxwell and other ladies assisting in the singing with the different parts carried by the male voices in union, rendering sweet music and in excellent style. This Sunday School consists of about twenty-five children, all denominations. The two churches here united in making a success on this occasion, and all seemed to enjoy the day, and the children acquitted themselves well. All were pleased and delighted. The pastor, Brother A. G. Hall, was well pleased, and satisfied, and preached a good sermon in the evening, at 2:30.

The collection amounted to $2.30 which will be properly appropriated.

FROM WESLEY CHARGE.

Dear Brother Boswell: I would be pleased to write a few lines in regard to our work in this part of the State. We have three Sunday Schools which seem to be doing fine. The interest is generally very good. The churches are holding up splendidly, notwithstanding this country has been greatly damaged by the boll-weevil and the overflow of 1908; and this no doubt has had much to do with many of our good people on the line of giving and helping to support the gospel. We are praying for good meetings this year and fully believe that the Lord will answer our prayers for he has promised to be with them that trust and obey him, however if there is any failure, it is always on the part of man.

Now, just a few words on the gospel and its power. The Bible says that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth, and the Savior says he "came to seek and save that which was lost." Then the entire redemption scheme is of such a character that man alone is the object of its effort. The cattle upon a thousand hills are God's, the countless pearls in ocean-beds go unnoticed and unestimated, the gold in the numberless mines and diamonds in uncounted caverns are all disregarded by our Heavenly Father; but his supreme care and attention are directed toward the lost soul. A human soul then is more valuable in the eyes of the All-Wise One than all the objects of commercial value in the world estimated together. Many men give their utmost efforts to secure only a small portion of this world's goods; and even this small portion is sometimes estimated as a large fortune. When others who are even in need of the comforts of life, may lead many souls to Christ and are rich in treasures laid up in heaven. All Christians who are sound in faith believe this and yet many are afraid to act on it. How rich one ought to feel who has been instrumental in saving a single soul, over against the man who has done nothing for the cause of Christ and yet who has secured an abundance of this world's wealth. May the Lord help, is my prayer. I ask the readers of the dear Advocate to pray for me and my people. Yours in the work,

C. B. POWELL.

THE REVIVAL AT BOONEVILLE.

Dear Advocate: Since my last letter was written we have had a great revival here conducted by Brother McIntosh, which lasted about three weeks. About sixty-five joined the Methodist Church and some thirty-five or forty the other churches. We feel that we had a great meeting. Most of the ladies pledged to quit playing games for prizes, etc. A number of men pledged to quit swearing, gambling, drinking and other bad habits.

Brother McIntosh was at his best. He was assisted by his estimable wife, who is a fine worker. This was a union tent-meeting and one in which all Christians worked together.

Our Sunday School is still growing—has passed the 500 mark and the interest seems to be increasing.

Brother Holder is holding a meeting at New Albany this week. We trust he may accomplish much in the name of his Master. There is no more earnest, faithful and consecrated man anywhere, and we all love and honor him.

Our District Conference will soon be here and we expect you up, Doctor. The district is doing well under the wise leadership of our presiding elder, Ben P. Jaco. HARDY W. REES.

Resolutions of Thanks.

Whitworth College entertained 240 teachers during the State Normal at Brookhaven, Miss., which closed July 2. Prof. Hill, on June 30, offered the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted:

In view of the very pleasant and profitable month spent at Whitworth College, we, the teachers who have boarded at the college beg leave to express our thanks to Dr. Cooper and others for their uniform courtesy and hospitality in attending to our every comfort and pleasure during our stay.

We find Whitworth College an ideal place for a Summer School; the grounds are delightful, the buildings comfortable and convenient, the table-fare all that could be asked, and the health practically perfect. Very respectfully,

Obituaries.

Mrs. SARAH HUGHES KNOX, daughter of Dr. William Edward and Mrs. Mary Gibbs Hughes, was born in Grenada, Miss., Oct. 12, 1844, and from her comfortable and happy home in the town of her birth she departed this life Feb. 24, 1909. Mrs. Knox was converted and joined the Methodist Church in girlhood. She was not only well versed in the doctrines and polity of her church, but found its teachings and fellowship a stay and a comfort throughout her earthly pilgrimage. She had a strong and abiding faith in God, which clothed her with those shining virtues and beautiful graces that adorn the perfect woman. She possessed to an eminent degree, two qualities rarely so strongly marked in the same person—firmness and gentleness. So strong was sbe that tbe bravest about her sought ber counsel; and so gentle that the most timid and shrinking were never embarrassed in her presence. The unselfishness of her nature was clearly seen in her broad and generous charities. Sbe was modest and unassuming, yet there emanated from ber pure life and her strong personality, an influence that blessed and cheered every circle in which sbe moved. A woman more popular, more beloved by the people among whom she had spent her 60 years of unselfish service the writer has never known. Mrs. Knox belonged to one of the oldest and best families of Grenada County, and it may be truly said, the best blood of "the old South" flowed in her veins. In 1871 Miss Sarah Hughes was united in marriage to Mr. James McRee Knox. This happy union, however, she was permitted to enjoy for only a few years, her husband falling in 1878 a victim to tbe terrible scourge of yellow fever, that swept over our fair Southland, almost depopulating the little city of Grenada with many others. This sore bereavement, with other sorrows and afflictions, were borne with becoming fortitude and seemed only to consume the dross and refine the gold of her Christian character. She leaves two heart-broken daughters, a fond brother, a weeping sister, many relatives and almost an innumerable host of friends to mourn a loss this world can never repair. Well do they know where to find her, they must "seek a better country, a city which hath foundations whose maker and builder is God." By faith she lived patiently, wrought wisely and died triumphantly. Having been true in all of life's relations as daughter, sister, wife, mother, friend, she has gone to her reward. "I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, tbat they may rest from their labors."

Her pastor,

W. W. MITCHELL.

TERESE T. HOLLADAY was born Nov. 11, 1821 in Augusta, Ga., and married at 18 years of age to O. F. M. Holladay wbo preceded her to the grave about 26 years. They moved to Lauderdale County, Miss., in 1848 and lived tbere about 22 years. They then moved to Newton County about the year 1870. She was the mother of eleven children, five boys and six girls, of whom there are two boys and three girls still living. She joined tbe M. E. Church at the age of fourteen years, and lived a consistent member of same about seventy-four years. She departed this life Jan. 23, 1909, at the age of eighty-eight years, two months, twelve days. * * *

Mrs. HESTER ANN CURRIE (nee Selser) was born in Jefferson County, Miss., Feb. 2, 1820 and died in Madison Parisb, La., June 10, 1909. She was educated at Clinton, Miss., graduating at the age of fifteen. She was twice married; first in 1837 to Geo. Richard who lived only eleven years. Tbis union was blessed with seven cbildren only one, Mrs. Gregg, of Stuttgart, Ark., survives her. In 1850 she was married to W. C. Currie and after twenty-six years she was again left a widow. This union was blessed with six children, only three of whom are still living, Mrs. Gilfoil, Mrs. Riley and Miss Annie, are left to mourn their loss. But they "sorrow not as those who have no bope." Her life is a precious heritage to them. She gave her heart to God in early childhood and joined the Methodist Church of whicb she remained a faithful and loyal member until the day that her pure spirit took its flight to the Father's home above. For some months before her death she was confined to her bed, but amid all her sufferings sbe was patient, her faith grew stronger and her hope brighter. She was anxious to get home. Her spirit was like a caged bird beating its wings against the walls of its cage in its anxiety to get to that brighter world above. She loved her church with a strong affection and was ever ready to do all in her power for its support. She was the first one to contribute to the pastor's support this year, a few weeks before ber death she said to her pastor that she had never violated one of tbe rules of tbe church. Her life was a benediction to all who knew her. Everybody loved grandma Currie and she will be missed but we will know where to find her. Not in the beautiful cemetery in Vicksburg where we laid her frail body to rest but in the heaven's eternal rest.

Her pastor,

ROBT. O. WIER.

At Port Gibson Female College, $177 pays board, laundry, tuition, medical, library, Gibsonian, lyceum lecture fees, and all expenses of educational trip to New Orleans.

HOME COMFORTS.

Every man and his family wants home comforts, and spends a great deal of money for them. Now that the city is putting in the sewerage system and connecting all property with the water pipes free and the firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co. are doing the same with the sewer pipes, there is no reason that any family in the city owning a home should not have these comforts, especially when they go farther and do all kinds of plumbing work on contract and on the smallest monthly payments, giving the property holders every chance to enjoy these comforts and pay for them while enjoying same. If you are a property holder, see them and get them to tell you the cost, and the liberal terms will cause you to have the work begun at once.

FACILITIES IN WAGON MANUFACTURE COUNT VITALLY IN THE QUALITY OF ARTICLE MANUFACTURED

And our location is a threefold advantage to every farmer who buys a WHITE HICKORY. Situated in the heart of the best Hickory, Oak and Poplar supply of the United States, we get our pick of the choicest wood. Our lumber yards contain the most valuable wood, stick for stick, in the South, and we season it three to four years before use.

Our proximity to the iron and steel markets of Alabama affords us another item in the reduction of price WE pay, and which YOU pay for all the metal work in a WHITE HICKORY WAGON.

Thirdly, the location of our Factories in the heat of the Southern climate insures the building of wagons with an eye to the long, hot season they must withstand. You don't have to wet a WHITE HICKORY Wagon to make the mortices hold;—they are built to stand up firm and rigid, and ARE THE MOST DURABLE WAGONS MADE!

So, from every point of economy in price of purchase, and of lasting qualities in use, the WHITE HICKORY Wagon leads, especially in the South.

Also, it is sold under a guarantee that is definite and to the point, and a surety of perfect satisfaction to the buyer.

Ask your dealer for our catalog. If he is out of them, write us direct.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE OE ALABAMA

LOCATED in the historic City of Montgomery, well known as one of the most beautiful and cultured of all the Southern cities. Genial climate offers finest health conditions. Young ladies from the North, desiring to escape the rigor of long winters would find here an attractive College home. Campus of fifty-seven acres in one of the city's most attractive suburbs. Tennis, basket ball and other outdoor recreations emphasized. Under the auspices of the two Alabama Conferences of the Southern Methodist Church. Annual appropriations from the two Conferences added to other productive funds equivalent to an endowment of $150,000; a substantial nucleus for a continually growing fund. Endowment as above-named enables the College to give, at reasonable rates, the finest advantages in the various departments of study. Music Conservatory, Art, Expresion and Literary departments are in charge of experienced teachers who bring to their work the best training of the Universities of this country and abroad. During the ensuing session, which opens September 30, 1909, only "B-grade" work will be required for graduation, the following session, beginning September 1910, full "A-grade" standards will be maintained, while a Junior Department continues the preparatory courses. WINONA CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The farmers of our section have not had gloomier prospects for years. They have been flooded with rains until large portions of their best soil had to be plowed up and planted over. Much of the corn on the bottom lands, it is now thought cannot make more than a half crop and some of it scarcely anything at all. The cotton is badly in the grass and a month behind in growth. But they have not lost hope. They still believe that the Lord will provide. It is said that when crop prospects are discouraging that people reduce their contributions to the church, but we have not had that experience yet. They are still loyal to Christ and Methodism.

Winona Circuit, in keeping with the district and Conference, as far as I have heard, is making progress. There has been advancement in almost every interest and department of the church. Our parsonage debt, which had reached the point of embarrassment, has been so reduced that we feel encouraged to hope that it can be paid out this year. Our finances are in advance of former years. Three of the churches on the charge, New Hope, Bethlehem and Bluff Springs, have provided for the general collections ordered by the Conference.

There are five Sunday Schools well attended and doing excellent work. Bethlehem and Bluff Springs, Schools have considerably increased attendance and interest. New Hope takes a monthly collection for the Orphans' Home. The Children's Day service at Bethlehem the third Sunday was a great occasion.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate is very popular with all our people who read it. Many say they cannot do without it. The pastor joins them in that sentiment. More anon.

A "SQUARE DEAL"

It is often argued that women do not have an equal chance with men, for enjoyment and usefulness, because women suffer so much from pain and weakness. In a general sense, it is true that women bear more physical pain than men. However, the belief that women must suffer regularly, on account of ailments and weakness peculiar to their sex, has been successfully contradicted by the relief so many women have obtained by the use of Cardui, that great remedy for suffering women.

During the past fifty years, many thousands of women have written us, telling of the immediate relief and permanent benefit they have received from Cardui. These letters cover a great many forms of womanly illness: Mrs. M. E. Allred of Hartford, Wash., writes: "Ever since I was 16 years old, I have suffered from female troubles. I had headache, backache and other troubles, every month. Some two years ago, I began to use Cardui, and since then I have had no backache, my other troubles have stopped, I don't need any medicine, and I am well."

What Cardui has done for Mrs. Allred and other women, it surely can do for you. Try it at once. Give yourself a "square deal." You will never regret it. Sold everywhere.

LESSON FOR JULY 11, 1909.

THE PHILIPPIAN JAILOR.

Acts xvi:16-40.

Golden Text: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." Acts xvi:31.

"Into whatever city or town ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy; and there abide till ye go thence" were the words of Jesus as he was directing the twelve apostles, in the manner in which the work of their ministry should be done. Paul found a worthy one at Philippi; that day in the prayer meeting out by the river side, where Lydia found salvation in Christ, and constrained Paul and Silas to abide at her house. The meetings by the river side must have been the beginning of the church at Philippi, for the preachers went to prayer there many days; and one day a strange thing happened to them as they passed along the street, a young woman began to follow them, calling out "These men are the servants of the Most High, God, which show us the way of salvation." At first glance this would seem a great help for Paul in introducing Christianity among a heathen people; but the apostle did not desire aid from such a source, for this young woman was possessed with a spirit of divination, she was what we would understand to be a clairvoyant, or a fortune teller; any way the spirit that possessed her was not in accord with the gospel of Christ as preached by Paul, so he said to the spirit, "I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her." And the spirit came out of her at once. Thus the young slave-woman lost her power by which her masters had made much money, who on seeing their loss, were filled with a desire of revenge in furtherance of which they caught Paul and Silas and took them before the rulers in the market place. This court at the market place must have corresponded to the mayor's or the recorder's court of modern times. Formal charge was made against the prisoners; it was in three sections, and the only one of the three that was true was the first, they were Jews. The charge also was that they "do exceedingly trouble our city," also "teach customs, which are not lawful for us to receive, being Romans," the apostles had been guilty of no disturbance, and as for the influence of the gospel among them, they were following the rule as laid down by Jesus when he told his disciples and the assembled scribes and Pharisees, "render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." However it is found, on examination, that the old Roman law opposed the introduction into the Empire of any foreign religions; so there was only a certain amount of truth in the last clause of the indictment. The complainants did not state the true cause of their complaint; they must have known there was no remedy at law where a value was depreciated by occult causes. They were not loyal citizens themselves for by the means of this poor friendless slave, they had been duping all the people. They were men of influence, for the whole multitude of citizens sided with them, and the magistrates also yielded to the majority, so by the command of the dispensers of Roman justice, without a trial, they were stripped of their clothes, publicly beaten, and thrown into prison.

This was a battle of the same war that has ever waged between good and evil, and will continue until "the Captain of our Salvation" will destroy the powers of evil with the "brightness of his coming." The evil spirit that had been cast out of the woman, and thus deprived of his power aroused kindred spirits in the idolatrous mind of the populace to allude to the Jews, being a hated, suspected and despised people. The Jews had lately been driven out of Rome, and the fact was used in alluding to themselves as Romans. They could not conceive the idea that a Roman could preach the gospel of Christ and retain the rights of citizenship. So fierce were they in vengence, they gave a special charge to the jailor to keep them safely. Not knowing the degree of atrociousness of the charge against the prisoners, and having only to obey orders, the jailer put the apostles in the inner prison, which must have been the dungeon, and to make more sure, they were put in the stocks. The stocks was a frame so constructed as to confine the feet, the hands and sometimes the head, in an immovable position, throwing the entire body into a continued painful attitude.

In the condition left by the cruel scourging, and being dragged hurriedly through the dusty streets, the prisoners were left suffering in the dungeon until mid-night, the seemingly victorious hour for the powers of evil; but really it was their hour of defeat, for instead of succumbing to the cruel treatment and being silenced by despair, Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises to God. The two godly men must have called to mind the many times that the servants of God passed through great suffering, and emerged therefrom in glorious triumph: Joseph, Daniel, and Jeremiah had been deemed worthy; and more recently Peter and John had their prison door opened by an angel; and another time, after Paul was converted Peter was delivered from prison by an angel, even while the keepers of the prison stood on guard at the door. So at the hour of mid-night, while Paul and Silas were singing so loudly that the other prisoners in the outer-prison heard them, there came a great earthquake shaking the foundations of the prison and loosening the bonds of all the prisoners, and throwing open the doors of the prison. The jailor being awakened out of his sleep, and seeing the doors all opened, supposed the prisoners were escaped and knowing that his life would be required for apparent careless exercise of duty, drew out his sword to kill himself. Paul saw this and called to him loudly, "Do thyself no harm, for we are all here." He called for a light and came in trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas. When he spoke he asked a question that leads us to believe that he knew more of the cause of the two minister's arrest and committment than is told, for his salvation was his chief concern at an hour when material things were most manifest. "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" The answer came at once, in a few words, and embracing everything fundamental in the gospel, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." He believed at once, and his faith was shown in kindness to those who brought the message of salvation. The magistrates must have passed a sleepless night, for when it was day, or early in the morning, they sent a message to the jailer, a short message considering the treatment they had given to Paul and Silas in the market place the day before. "Let these men go." He took the message to Paul and told him to go in peace. O No, Mr. Jailer, this is a more serious case than you or the rulers think: said Paul, "We are Romans ourselves, and without due process of law, we have been publicly beaten and thrown into prison uncondemned." "Let them come themselves and fetch us out." When the magistrates heard that they came with fear and took them out of prison, and begged them to leave the town. Being set at liberty, they went to Lydia's house and, after a short time in which they had seen and comforted the brethren, they set out on their journey, through Amphipolis and Apollonia to Thessalonica. Let this midnight prison-scene remain in our memory. These blessed songs in the night; this making melody in the heart to the Lord, when all around is so dark that we wonder if it will ever again be light. In the night of dark affliction, of sorrow, of bereavement, blessed is he who can sing of the mercies of the heavenly Father. It is true in this life that glory for Christ follows suffering for his sake. Read Paul's letter to the Philippians, written from Rome, many years after the mid-night deliverance from the Philippian prison, and after much suffering; the whole Epistle is a song of joy in assuring the faith of Christ as "the excellency of knowledge." Beginning with: "I thank my God with every remembrance of you;" and ending with "I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the last, your care of me hath flourished. * * * For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all."

TOPIC FOR JULY [illegible]

TRANSFORMED [illegible] THINGS

[illegible]

All the world loves a lover, hence everybody is interested in a wedding; but that the Christ, fresh from his baptism and his [illegible] face to face with his supreme and awful mission, should attend a wedding and become a part of its merry-making is a very remarkable fact. It places the highest sanction upon the marriage relation, which holy estate Christ adorned and beautified with his presence, and first miracle that he wrought." It also sanctions innocent social festivities, and tells us clearly that our Lord would have the young people be glad. Gladder than anybody were the couple, if they understood at all what it meant to have the Christ at their wedding.

The wine at the wedding gave out and Jesus supplied the need by miracle—

"The conscious water saw its God and blushed."

He, who but a few days before had refused to turn stones into bread to stay his own hunger in a forty-days' fast, now turns water to wine to refresh a wedding party and relieve the embarrassment of the man who gave the feast. There is something strikingly beautiful in this.

Does our Lord's creation of wine for this feast in any way give sanction to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors? Most assuredly not. Although some learned men say that the wine he made was of the intoxicating kind, other learned men as confidently affirm that it was not. The judgment to this effect of such men as Dr. Moses Stuart the learned orientalist, Dr. Taylor Lewis, and Dr. Jacobus cannot be readily set aside. Neither the Hebrew word translated wine, nor its Greek equivalent means fermented grape juice, as is often supposed. The word in either language indicates nothing more than expressed juice of grapes, just as our word cider means the expressed juice of apples whether fermented or not. The liquor dealer or maker of to-day who tries to defend his infamous business of human ruin for gain, citing our Lord's example here, is not only far afield in his logic, but is wide open to the charge of blasphemy.

The little colloquy here recorded between Jesus and his mother is frequently misunderstood. In our English versions his words sound harsh. Properly, though somewhat freely rendered, they would read: "Mother, the matter is not in our hands—anyway my time has not yet come"—intimating that by and by he would probably intervene and relieve the situation. She evidently so understood his words, for she went at once to the servants, and directed them: "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." No son was ever tenderer toward his mother than was Jesus.

John tells us that by this miracle Jesus manifested his glory; and his disciples believed on him. This means very evidently that this, his first miracle, proved to them that he was all that he claimed to be. All of this is very true; and this was doubtless the chief purpose of the miracle; but in a sense that John did not indicate this miracle with its sweet home-like setting was a manifestation of Christ's glory. In it we see the Christ of all worlds sanctified and ennobling the [illegible] and duties of daily life—are the diversions and innocent frolics of the common people. In it we see also the tender care and marvelous kindness of the Christ. And all of these are his glory. Dean Trench beautifully says: "The gracious Lord has sympathy with all needs, with the finer as well as with the common needs of our life." For all the grace and beauty and courtesy of life are taken account of in Christianity, as well as life's sterner [illegible].

Mr. Ruskin once taught us that the foul mud of the street may be transformed to resplendent beauty—the clay becoming sapphire, the sand an opal, the soot a diamond, and the water a dew-drop, or a crystalline star of snow. Christ has beautified and glorified common folks and their common affairs of life. Christianity transforms the world and all the things of the world and all the peoples of the world; and Christianity is only the Christ in the world.

The U. S. Senate, on July 5, adopted a resolution recommending to the several States of the Union a constitutional amendment by which the individual incomes of citizens may be taxed. It passed unanimously. Those who think they know say it will pass the lower house, but that "when it strikes the State Legislatures, three-fourths of which are necessary to ratify, the story will be different." Twelve States voting in the negative will defeat the measure. A like measure was passed by Congress some years ago but was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, hence the effort to pass this amendment. This, as we are informed, is not a measure to tax only the incomes of corporations, but the incomes of individuals. It will hit all alike—the farmer, the merchant, the mechanic, the real estate man, the lawyer, the doctor, school teacher, and, if a preacher happens to have an income, it will hit him. The Picayune's Washington correspondent says: "When these realizations begin to soak in the men who will have to fight ratification will probably receive some silent help."

The baseless claim to the effect that "prohibition does does not prohibit," that "more liquor is consumed in dry territory than in wet," is being continually put forth by the brewers and distillers and their political allies. The claim is put forth purely for effect. Some good, honest people are deceived by the tales told, all because the number of the drunks are magnified and made more prominent before the public. One drunk, or one blind tiger in prohibition territory counts more against prohibition than ten or twenty drunks in towns or villages where saloons are licensed. It does not stand to reason that in Louisiana, where two-thirds of the territory, embracing nearly half the population, is under prohibition, more liquor is drunk than if the whole State were covered with saloons. If the receipts for revenue are to the contrary, it is because blind tigers prevail, and the consumption of liquor is on the increase in New Orleans. In Milwaukee alone the internal revenue receipts showed a decrease at the close of the fiscal year, June 30, of $322,000.92. With few exceptions, if we read aright, the beer producing cities report a decrease in the manufacture of beer, and of course a decrease in the yield of revenue. So it must follow, if more liquor is consumed in dry territory than before the saloons were closed, less liquor is consumed in territory where saloons are still running, nobody believes such a state of things is possible, let alone in actual existence. It is absurd.

Flying machines are coming into market. They are being advertised "as commodities of the day in the New York papers." It is said that "in the country at large over 8000 inventors have flying machine designs in hand and machines of several hundred types are actually in process of building. Plans for the first airship garage in New York have already been filed." It is also said that the machines are "practical." A man at Morris Park, N. Y., "circled the grounds on a machine that rose and fell as lightly as a bird and rode the air as steadily as a boat rides smooth water. At Fort Meyer the Wright Brothers have duplicated their own wonders of flight previously demonstrated at home and abroad." Says the New York World: "Perhaps there will be no immediate rush for aeroplanes. Flying is an art which most men will continue for a long time to regard from the standpoint of nerves. But devices of an ultimate utility do not wait on apprehension in their development. A generation still in its early twenties remembers when folk rushed to windows and curbs in timid wonder to watch the passing of the early automobile. It may be that in a little while people will be as willing to risk themselves in the air as they are to-day on wheels or over stream on the water. It is all in getting accustomed to things. Old friend Crawford, in Tennessee, used to say: 'I believe in my heart if somebody invented a great gun to shoot people from place to place and killed nine out of every ten, there would be a full load every time.'"

Perhaps a few persons are living to-day who once made the trip by wagon or "carryall" from North Carolina to Mississippi and Louisiana, which trip required about six weeks. It can be made now by rail in less than two days. A sail from Savannah, Ga., to San Francisco took six months more or less. At that rate of sailing it would have required about two years to make the circuit of the globe. In in a little while it will be possible to go around the world in less than forty days. The Boston Post thus sketches the itinerary: "With a five-day steamer from New York to Plymouth, starting on Saturday, we could connect with the train for Berlin via Flushing, arriving Friday at 6:49 o'clock in the afternoon. Catching the slow express to Moscow, we reach there at 1:20 on Sunday afternoon. At 7 o'clock in the evening we start over the new Trans-Siberian roadbed, making Harbin in five and one-half days. We then take the Japanese express to Fusan, arriving Sunday morning. We reach Yokohama by steamer Monday morning. With the new gas engine boats of the Canadian Pacific line we reach Vancoover on the 24th day out, and the 96-hour schedule from Puget Sound to New York lands us home on the 28th day. But the trans-Siberian is still building, and the Korean express is not yet in operation. Nevertheless, this schedule is not a dream of madness, but a practical possibility that will be carried out within five years. Verily, the time has come when the term "brotherhood of man" has a significance that the thoughtful cannot fail to recognize. The quicker we can circumnavigate the globe the more impossible is an international war."

The night riders of Reel Foot lake who several months age killed Capt. Rankin, of Trenton, Tenn., and were found guilty of murder and sentenced, have been granted a new trial by the Supreme Court of the State. The court did not pass upon the merits of the case in a single particular but granted a new trial purely on technical grounds. The decision is a severe blow to justice in Tennessee and has given expression to the fear that the convicted night riders, together with others not yet tried, will escape punishment altogether. Fifty or more are yet to be tried. Their cases were set, but when the Supreme Court's decision was made public the prosecuting attorney asked for a continuance, which was granted, thus lessening the chances for conviction, if not destroying the probability of a trial altogether. The prosecuting attorney has severely criticized the court's decision—an unusual thing for a State's officer to do. He said: "I would not complain if they had gone into the facts of the case and had seen proper to say that the facts did not warrant a conviction, but for them to reverse so important a case on mere technicalities, occurs to me as being a travesty on justice. They had a complete record before them. Were the defendants guilty? If not, go into the facts and say so, and I would be the last one to complain; but in the name of justice, let no guilty one escape because of fly-specks. I may be wrong, but in my opinion, these three judges have committed a judicial blunder such as has not occurred for a hundred years in Tennessee jurisprudence. Of course, I accord them honesty and sincerity, but the God of justice pities their judgment. None but those who are in a position to know can realize the full meaning of the decision. According to it, I see no way to ever have a trial of the case again. Retributive justice must be left to an avenging God."

The coming fight of the country is to be over the question of Home rule for the cities. There is a growing sentiment in favor of relegating all that pertains to municipal government to the cities; that is, to allow every city to make its own laws. Those who favor this say that country voters, who elect the majority of the State legislators, are out of sympathy with the cities and know nothing of the city's needs, and are wholly incapable of properly legislating in the interest of the cities. But what would our large cities come to were they left entirely to govern themselves? That there are in all cities men enough to frame and enforce good government—men of the very highest character and intelligence, goes without saying. It is a fact, though, that these good men are largely outnumbered by voters of just the opposite character—bad men led by bad men of great intelligence. These men are to-day in favor of the liquor traffic, many of them favor race-track gambling, and gambling of every sort. They favor what is called "the wide-open city" without any regard to the holy Sabbath. The majority of these bad men are wholly incapable of good self-government, much less are they capable of governing the wealth and intelligence of others, or of protecting the good morals of a community. It seems to us bad enough to make the passage of laws for the city depend on the approval of the mayor, as it is in New York. It would be infinitely worse to turn the law making over to ignorant and vicious hudlums led by a ward boss who possesses no good moral character. The country at large must still keep its eyes and hands on the helm of State, and make the cities as well as the towns and villages, subject to the law of the land. Only upon the country can the city depend for safety, so far at least as concerns its morals.

THE GALLOWAY MEMORIALS.

By Rev. W. L. Duren.

The proposed memorials to Bishop Galloway strike me as being more than so many fitting acknowledgments of a great service. They are opportunities through which we may render service ourselves, in that through them we may teach lessons that future generations shall be richer and better for knowing. They are opportunities which, failing to use, should make us poorer in the estimate which posterity shall place upon our merit. For future generations have a right to expect a faithful transmission of their heritage. Surely no small part of that heritage shall be found in the records of the good and great men whose unselfish devotion to the highest ideals and unflinching fidelity to duty have made them part of every significant movement of their times.

With reference to Bishop Galloway, we have hardly been able to realize that he is gone; but how we do miss him already! We miss his leadership. In our widespread discussion of law enforcement, and in the crusade against the pistol which is doing more than any other one thing, perhaps, to make our civilization infamous, we instinctively look for him, but we look in vain. For more than a quarter of a century his great voice was heard in every part of the land, and his sword was never brandished in vain. He was the leader of the hosts against the saloon, and the saloon is gone—may it please God, forever! And other forms of vice entrenched behind statutes have felt the force of his opposition. We miss his leadership not more because it was effective than because it was intelligent. He was no reckless crusader who rushed out into the twilight and spent himself in fruitless combat with the shadows of vice. But he saw clearly first, and then he was ready to strike.

As a leader he sought, I think, to establish a sense of responsibility rather than to cure specific ills. Hence, to assume that the end of his leadership was attained in the suppression of vice, is wide of the truth. Such an assumption is a misinterpretation of the very passion of his soul. He was never an iconoclast except as a means to an end, and that end was constructive. His soul was aflame with the passion for personality. He was consumed by his zeal for the development of manhood and womanhood of imperial proportions. I can see him now as, on Sunday night, March 3, 1901, I heard him preach on "Christian Manhood." After touching upon the principles which underlie social order and constitute the undergirding of national stability, he took up the consideration of the duties and responsibilities of manhood "facing a wonderful to-morrow." He introduced this part of the discourse by a quotation from Hon. C. H. Alexander: "The time has come when we should boast less of our liberties and think more of our laws; when we should talk less of our rights and ponder more our duties."

The searching words with which he appealed to the true and the manly in man were such as I can never forget: "I most devoutly wish that it could be said of every young American patriot to-day that he knew his opportunity and his power. That alone would be an all-sufficient guarantee against any peril to national institutions—an impenetrable shield against any possible danger. But that unhappily is not the case. And it becomes every awakened soul to arouse his neighbor out of his sleep and to kindle within him the patriotic fires of a holy self-sacrifice and service." Who, with the consciousness of the reality of life, could fail to be sprung by such an appeal?

So his commendation of intelligent conviction of right, conviction rock-ribbed and strong, sticks in my memory to this hour: "Young men of my country, dare if need be, to stand alone. Have faith in God and the future; stand by the underlying principles of our great republic, and the coming years will vindicate your manly independence and uncorrupted patriotism." How tame the inveighing against classes by political mountebanks, as compared with that great mesage?

Next the demagogue passed in review. How fiercely and uncompromisingly he did arraign the man who, for the sake of gratifying a fiendish passion for power, would build up an "aristocracy" among criminals—who could get his consent to betray justice, and to abdicate his own manhood!

The message was concluded with an appeal for the fullest participation in the affairs of government; and a vigorous protest against the disposition to slink away because of that maudlin sentiment, that fanaticism that would place a chasm between politics and religion. Last, but not least, a protest against burying convictions of right beneath a slavish adherence to tradition: "But while party platforms may be adopted, and party shibboleths repeated, let it never be said of the Christian patriots of America, as was the sad lament of the Roman Empire, that 'there was a party for Caesar, a party for Pompey and a party for Brutus, but no party for Rome.' And I am sure that such a calamity will never befall our beloved country.

'The pedestal on which her glory stands
Is built of our hearts and all our hands.'"

Now, can we fail to miss this opportunity for the propogation of the truth of which he was the embodiment? Motley, in his history of the Dutch Republic, says of the Prince of Orange: "The character of a great and good man is too precious a possession of history to be lightly abandoned." This he said by way of justifying a somewhat tedious delineation of a trifling event which had been used in an effort to destroy the character of the Prince. But to limit this splendid thought to operations for defending the characters of those whose lives and deeds have become the heritage of all the ages is to cheat the world out of its truest meaning. Behind the assault made upon the character of the Prince of Orange is the supreme fact that he was "a great and good man," and the world had a right to know it.

Our courageous and spotless leader is gone, and in the hush of our sorrow his name is whispered by every hearthstone in the commonwealth, every Methodist heart in our Southland has a personal sorrow, and in the wake of his travels beyond the sea the shadows go. What he is to us by reason of his work and his worth, the world has a right to know and ours is the privilege to tell it. As was observed of Louis of Nassau, if we regard the hands upon the dial as they mark the flight of the years, he is fallen and oh, how soon, how soon! But if we open the volume of his achievements, that span becomes a patriarch's life in its length. The world has a right to know what is possible to a life even before the flower falls—before the time of the "sear and yellow leaf." They have a right to know it that they may be inspired, and inspired now to greater and better things. Let us tell the story of his great life that the men and women of to-morrow may not be content to put off the day of fruition until they are ready to lay down their tasks—until they feel the reins of life slipping from their grasp. Let us build a great church to bear his name, and through that medium proclaim anew the golden message: "The character of a great and good man is too precious a possession of history to be lightly abandoned."

CHURCH OWNERSHIP.

By Dr. G. B. Winton.

Dr. DuBose's communication on "Church Ownership" was declined by me on the ground which he gives and for the further reason that it erroneously assumes that what I had written was with special reference to Vanderbilt University. This wrong assumption misleads him throughout his whole argument, which is therefore so far astray as to render unnecessary any extended reply upon my part. It is true that I am a member of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University. But it would argue a very slight power of detachment upon my part, and a very narrow conception of my duty as editor, if I could not discuss editorially, an important question in its general bearings without injecting into the discussion my supposed partisan views of a local situation. I may say, however, that since Vanderbilt University is a church institution and the Christian Advocate is also an agency of the church, I see no impropriety in using the columns of the Advocate to promote the interests of the University

The whole matter would have been more intelligible to the readers of this paper if the editor had seen fit to insert along with Dr. DuBose's article the editorial which he criticises. The positions therein taken are only partially intelligible from the quotations which he makes. As he insists on discussing Vanderbilt University, it may be worth while to say in passing that the present relations between that University and the Church are as follows: (1) The General Board of Education is charged with confirming the election of all new members of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust before they can take their places. (2) Besides this, the Commission appointed by the last General Conference gave out opinion that the College of Bishops could at their discretion act as a Board of Visitors for the University. Both these arrangements are entirely satisfactory to the Board of Trust, the first having been made at their request and the second formally declared by them to be "welcome." It will be seen, therefore, how little occasion there is for alarums about "the relation of the Church to Vanderbilt University."

Concerning the editorial objected to by Dr. DuBose, I have already said in the Christian Advocate: "The discussion of mortmain laws, etc., was intended to account for the seemingly hostile attitude of certain State constitutions, that of Virginia, for example, and those of California, and of other States where the Civil Law has effected constitutions and legislation." That is all that was meant by that paragraph. It seems not to be generally known that European public sentiment at the end of the eighteenth century, and the Napoleonic Code, coming soon after, did effect the constitutions of a number of American States.

My treatment of "Church Ownership" in the remainder of the editorial was in general terms, and had reference primarily to the holding of other properties than churches and parsonages. The rule is, as I said, that church property is held by trustees. There are occasional exceptions, of course. Dr. DuBose, however, as it appears, is not willing to trust trustees, nor satisfied to have the Church elect or confirm them. I am. Which is merely a difference of opinion.

Trustees should, of course, be ready to bear with reasonable criticism of their judgment. They should also resent with vigor charges that they are false to their trust or to their Church. Because of a difference of opinion about some matter of procedure no man has the right to charge another with betraying a trust. And I stick to it that it is poor policy for those who constitute boards of trust to annoy them with "interference, questionings and public criticism." Dr. DuBose "regrets" that I should say such things. I regret quite as heartily that he should be at pains to disseminate throughout the whole Church his distrust of gentlemen whose loyalty to the Church's interests is no more open to question than his own.

NEXT SESSION OPENS SEPT. 15.

Fourteen Good Reasons for Patronizing Grenada College

First—The unexcelled Home Comforts, unequaled anywhere else in the State.

Second—The Health Conditions; we rarely require the service of a physician.

Third—Our unusually skilled corps of teachers, whom we were able to secure only by paying a salary much above that paid by other girls' schools of the State.

Fourth—The Fine Arts Department, unequaled in the State and unexcelled in the South. Our teacher of Art studied in Germany and France, and our teachers of Music are graduated from the best Conservatories of America.

Fifth—See Descriptive Course of Study, which is conscientiously carried out as indicated.

Sixth—The Lyceum Course, which is superior even to that sustained in the University of Mississippi.

Seventh—The Library, which is fuller and better adapted than that of most girls' schools of the South.

Eighth—Strong Christian Influence dominating all instruction.

Ninth—Personal Attention to the Individual Pupil, with a view to develop the best even out of peculiarities of character.

Tenth—A superior Student Body as Associates, since most of the indifferent have been eliminated.

Eleventh—The Rates are lower than those of any other school doing the same grade of work, owing to the Conference Assessment, which gives us an income not possessed by other schools; further, we have no stockholders to whom we are forced to pay dividends, as are some private schools. Our patrons receive back in excellence of service more than they pay in.

Twelfth—We place but two girls in a room, while most schools put from two to six.

Thirteenth—We require our teachers to continue study. Two are in Europe, two in Chicago, others at other schools in North and East.

Fourteenth—All these superior features enable us to turn out a larger percentage of graduates, who take high stand in the educational world, than any other school in the State. It means something to hold a diploma of the Grenada College.

RUSTON DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Ruston District Conference met at [illegible] [illegible] Rev. R. V. [illegible] sermon [illegible] Methodist handshaking, while there was [illegible] and many voices lifted the strain of happy praise.

Rev. [illegible] Baker and President [illegible] represented the educational work of the Conference. Rev. Herman Knickerbocker the American Bible Society, Rev. W. H. Coleman the Sunday School work, Rev. Robert Vaughan the Orphans' Home. The New Orleans Christian Advocate was represented by one of the members of the District Conference.

The preaching was done by Revs. R. L. Davis, H. W. Bowman, H. W. Knickerbocker, W. Wooten, C. B. Carter and R. W. Meade. The preaching was in the power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit and was a blessing to delegates and townspeople alike.

R. C. McClendon, N. R. Grigsby, J. D. Smith and Walter G. Harbin were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, with J. C. Tate and A. Hoffpauir alternates.

On nomination of the presiding elder the Conference elected Revs. Robert Randle, I. B. Williams, W. Wooten, A. G. Hankins, W. P. Henderson and J. O. Bennett a licensing committee to serve ad interim as provided in Par. 77 of the Discipline.

By unanimous consent Arcadia was fixed as the next meeting place of the District Conference.

At the close of the Conference resolutions expressive of the appreciation of the visiting delegates of the hospitality of the people of Haynesville were adopted. The Haynesville Church presented a resolution expressive of appreciation of the spiritual uplift and blessings brought to the community by the Conference, which resolution was received by a rising vote and ordered spread on the minutes.

The Conference adopted unanimously a resolution expressive of its appreciation of the earnest and spiritual conduct of the entire session by its presiding officer.

The first day of the Conference was occupied by the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Earnest addresses by distinguished laymen were heard. N. R. Grigsby was elected District Leader, and K. Able, secretary-treasurer.

At 4 p. m. of the second day the Conference adjourned for a memorial service for our beloved and lamented chief pastor, Bishop Charles B. Galloway. After eloquent addresses by the presiding elder, Rev. W. T. Woodward, Rev. W. H. Coleman, Dr. Weber, and others, the following resolutions were adopted:

In the death of Bishop Charles B. Galloway, the Church sustained an irreparable loss. Other leaders as talented, and with devotion to the Church as lofty and as pure, may in the course of time arise. None will ever fill the place he has left vacant. It is a niche to be occupied by his sacred memory and by our own sad recollections.

Bishop Galloway was a man of affairs. No one doubts that his close attention to the infinite details of his vast work, and his painstaking and ceaseless labor to render perfect service amidst all the intricate demands upon him shortened his life. He wore himself out in our service. Upon the altar of the Church he burned out his life in the flames of a quenchless zeal.

Bishop Galloway was a patriot. He loved the South with all the ardor of a boy when the snows of later manhood were white upon his brow. Her holy memories, her sacred traditions, her heroic histories, her majestic characters were forevermore before his mind. When forces he considered inimicable to the best interests of his own State, because at war with her holiest traditions, threatened to control her destinies, he stemmed the rising tide of demagoguery with his lecture on Lamar. This lofty appeal to the youth of Mississipi was among his most classic utterances. Nothing could be more dramatic than the picture it recalls of that great moment in Lamar's life when he stood across a chasm still wet and warm with blood [illegible] and we shall love each other more. [illegible] Lamar [illegible] a great man [illegible] another [illegible] generation [illegible] the most significant [illegible] among all his public utterances was his address to the young men of his own State [illegible] the highest [illegible]

Bishop Galloway was a statesman. He [illegible] the South better than any other part of the Union, but he loved men [illegible] more than any section. He loved his country. With breadth of vision [illegible] qualities of statesmanship which distinguished him. One of the leading journals of his own State repeatedly urged him to stand for the United States Senate. Though differing with him widely in opinion on many subjects, and uncompromisingly holding to his own convictions when occasion demanded, he won the unstinted and outspoken admiration of the President of the United States.

Bishop Galloway was a missionary. His ministry was worldwide. His charity was as broad as the race. The noon-day vision of the Damascus road was his. The Master who said to Paul, "I send thee far hence unto the Gentiles," commissioned him with a ministry as wide as Paul's, as the missionary apostle of the Church in his generation. His intimate acquaintance with the civic, economic, social and moral forces at work in China, Corea, Japan, Cuba, Brazil and indeed in the whole world was astounding. More wonderful was that matchless sympathy that enabled him to make the problems of alien and far-off peoples his, while beneath their burdens his own great heart bowed down and bled.

Bishop Galloway was a Christian. No one ever doubted that he was God's man. His passion for his Master was of a pathetic and passionate intensity. He stood forth for Christ a blazing light—a man of God in a world of men.

Bishop Galloway is with God. With us his life lives on in widening circles of deeper influences as the slow years grow. Other ages will feel the expanding sweep of forces for good that his life set in motion long after all trace of their source is sunk in the past. God will keep track of it and he will make no mistake. Eternity will exhibit at length all that such a life has meant in time.

Wherefore, be it resolved, That the Ruston District Conference, of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, hereby expresses profound sorrow at the death of our great leader in the hosts of God, and a lofty determination to emulate his example, and strive faithfully toward the high ideals he left us. And be it further

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the Journal of the Ruston District Conference, and that they be published in the official organ of the Louisiana Annual Conference.

WALTER G. HARBIN, Secretary.

CROWLEY DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Crowley District Conference met in the hospitable town of Jennings.

The presiding elder, Rev. J. E. Denson, presided with ease and dignity.

There was a good attendance of the preachers but a small attendance of laymen, probably due to the fact that it was a very busy season of the year for the planters.

The reports from all over the district were encouraging. While there are many obstacles to be overcome, yet slowly, but surely, Protestantism is gaining a firm foothold and exerts a large influence in this part of the State. The preachers are zealous, earnest and optimistic. Perhaps the most inviting field is that occupied by Brothers Hebert, Breithaupt and Martin, who reported fields white unto the harvest among the French people. They are spreading themselves trying to cover a large territory.

THE REILY-TAYLOR CO., New Orleans, U. S. A.

In this District the relation between the M. E. Church and the M. E. Church, South, is a burning question and the following resolution was passed by the Conference.

MEMORIAL TO THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Resolved, By the Preachers and Delegates of the Crowley District, Louisiana Conference of the M. E. Church, South, in District Conference Assembled:

That the following memorial to the next session of the General Conference be and is hereby recommended to the Annual Conference for passage by that body and to be presented by it to the General Conference. And that the secretary of the District Conference be instructed to forward a copy of the same to the secretary of the Louisiana Conference, and that copies of said memorial be offered for publication in our Conference and general organs.

Memorial of the Crowley District Conference, through the Louisiana Annual Conference, to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to convene at Asheville, N. C., May, 1910, on the subject of the relations between the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Episcopal Church:

Dear Fathers and Brethren: The mutual relations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South and the Methodist Episcopal Church are of vital importance, not only to these bodies themselves, but likewise to the cause of Christ in North America. That the present status of these relations is not entirely satisfactory, is sufficiently evident to every thoughtful and well informed member of either connection. In order to offer suitable suggestions in reference to the improvement of these relations, we beg leave to refer briefly to the history which has given rise to the present conditions.

The divisions through which, by the action of the General Conference of 1844, the original Episcopal Methodism in the United States was separated into the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South as now constituted, was a carefully devised plan, adopted by an overwhelming majority of the delegates from all sections of the Church, and declared valid by the highest judicial authority of the land, which limited the territory to be occupied by each division of Methodists within a definite boundary, viz: the line separating the then slave States from the Free States.

This amicable separation, to which the representatives of both sections were parties and which could not therefore be abrogated except by mutual agreement constituted two co-ordinate branches of Episcopal Methodism, cultivating separate fields.

Without tracing in detail the unfortunate developments in which this agreement has been ignored, it is only needful to call attention to the fact that within the territory assigned to one or the other of the two churches by the original agreement, we behold the unedifying spectacle frequently presented of altar against altar being erected, and sometimes of a struggling Church of one branch of Methodism, supported by missionary money within the territory originally assigned to the other branch, and within a stone's throw of a self-supporting church already established by that other branch.

Another unfortunate feature of the situation grows out of the development, subsequent to the separation, of the great Western section of our country, a section not within the purview of the original agreement. In that section we frequently see the picture of these two sister churches competing for the same territory, and sometimes maintaining struggling churches of each organization in a community where one united church might be useful and influential.

Such wasteful and unbecoming rivalries between two branches of the Methodist family cannot but prove hurtful to the cause of Christ, and presents a serious hindrance to any attempt toward real and substantial union of Methodist forces.

Without committing ourselves to any opinion as to the desirability of organic union we wish to put ourselves on record as desiring that real unity which is based on mutual respect, forbearance and confidence.

In view of the situation herein set forth, the force of which is felt within the territory of this District Conference as well as in other parts of the Church, we respectfully memorialize your Honorable Body that our Commissioners on Federation be instructed to use all possible efforts in their work on the Joint Commission on Federation to abate these deplorable conditions, and particularly to propose to the said Commission:

1. The enactment of an agreement that neither the Methodist Episcopal Church nor the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, shall appropriate missionary money toward the support of any church that may be or may have been established within the territory allotted to the other in the original plan of separation.

2. The arrangement of the territory in the West by mutual agreement so that the two churches shall occupy separate sections or communities in that territory instead of dividing the Methodist forces between rival altars in the same community. Such arrangement already has precedents in our mission fields, as in Cuba and Porto Rico, and should be just as practicable in our own country.

This memorial is suggested by the presenece of a real problem of Methodism, and is presented in the interest of a real union of Methodism, for your careful consideration.

A. M. Mayo, Crow Girard, H. N. Pharr, and R. P. Harvell were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, with W. L. Doss and F. N. Ney, alternates.

Rev. Briscoe Carter was present, representing the cause of education; Rev. R. W. Vaughan looked after the interests of the Orphanage.

Prominence was given to the devotional and preaching services and all felt a spiritual uplift.

Brother Denson pleased both people and preachers. While he is a new man on the District, yet he knows its problems and needs. He makes an excellent presiding officer.

The Conference will meet next year at Eunice.

M. C. HOLT, Secretary.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Meridian District Conference which was in session at Shubuta, Miss., June 21-24 inclusive, was the most successful in years. The attendance by the preachers and delegates was good, and at night the local patronage filled the house.

Rev. W. H. Lewis, the presiding officer, proved his efficiency, and before the Conference closed, resolutions were passed commending the same.

The preachers and delegates were met at the trains by a bevy of Shubuta's charming Christian young women (some of Dr. Weem's Epworth Leaguers) who acted as a reception committee, and conducted them to the homes where they were entertained. If such acts of cordiality from such fair creatures were repeated at all the District Conferences, there would be no trouble in getting the young, unmarried preachers to attend. If, after the Conference adjourned, they failed to dissemble somewhat, by pretending that they did not know the way back to the depot, then their taste would be poor indeed.

The presiding elder appointed the usual committees who looked well after the matters intrusted to their care.

One young man was licensed to preach, viz.: Wade Hamilton Young. The local preachers of the district were either present, or sent written reports of their work. The Conference refused to renew the license of one local preacher who had failed to attend upon the public means of grace, and to exercise the functions of his office.

The reports by pastors of their charges were very good, and in the main, encouraging.

Dr. LaPrade, of First Church, Meridian, reported that his Sunday School was "suffering from its success." The school is full and running over, and a greater seating capacity is needed.

One whole afternoon of the Conference was devoted to the discussion of the work of the Church in the Sunday School. In fact, almost every interest of the Church was looked into, both pastors and laymen taking part in the discussions.

At times the Conference was spirited, particularly when a resolution was offered by the Committee on Education, in substance as follows:

"Resolved, That we commend our schools in all reasonable sports and amusements, noting with approval the moral force that comes from them. We also assure them our sympathy in dealing with young life, but we must protest against inter-collegiate ball-games in our Church schools."

The resolution also requested the Board of Education of the Annual Conference to require of our schools that inter-collegiate games be not allowed, or participated in by any of the scholars.

Some thought that the resolutions were inexpedient, others that they were unnecessary since the Annual Conference has already taken action, but a majority thought differently, and the resolutions were adopted.

A resolution was also adopted asking the Annual Conference to memorialize the General Conference to enact such laws as will bring all of our schools and colleges, and universities more thoroughly under the control of the Church.

The following resolution was also adopted:

"That we request the Board of Education to use its influence to get the State Legislature to enact a law that shall have the Bible read, without comment, in our public schools.

The Conference met in one session memorial to the late Bishop Charles B. Galloway. The leading speakers were W. H. LaPrade and W. C. Black, who paid just and well-worded tributes to his character and ministry. Touching tributes were also paid by L. P. Brown, and W. M. Estes.

The following resolutions passed unanimously, the entire congregation rising:

"Inasmuch as Charles Betts Galloway, formerly a member of the Mississippi Conference, and for twenty-three years a Bishop of the M. E. Church, South, passed from labor to rest on the 12th day of May, 1909, leaving his Church and State sorely bereaved, therefore, be it resolved

First. That with deep gratitude for the gift of this choice spirit, this master-workman, this humble Christian and great Bishop, we bow submissively to the will of our Father, and his Father, who has called his child home.

Second. That in the life and labors of Bishop Galloway our Church and our country have rejoiced and profited exceedingly. With them the influence of his lofty character, and the fruit of his busy life will abide always—for the charm of his personality, the lesson of his unceasing and unselfish labors, and the helping force of his generous and tender sympathy remain with us yet, though his eloquent voice is hushed, and his manly form is stilled.

Third. That we earnestly invoke the blessings of our Lord upon the Church of which he was the greatest member; the State of which he was the most distinguished citizen; and the grief-stricken home where, as husband and father, he loved and was beloved with so deep, and so constant, and so unselfish devotion."

The Conference was addressed at different times by the following:

W. H. LaPrade, representing the Annual Conference Board of Education. W. M. Williams, representing the Orphans' Home. W. A. Betts, representing the Mississippi Conference Training School, at Montrose. T. J. O'Neil, representing the Conference Endowment Fund. Mrs. Dr. Hands, District Secretary of the W. F. M. Society. Dr. F. L. Walton, president of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League.

W. D. Hawkins was elected Leader of the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the District.

The following delegates were elected to the Annual Conference: L. P. Brown, D. W. Heidelburg, D. S. Harmon, and J. B. Holland. Alternates: W. N. Ethridge, and W. H. Curtis.

Fifth Street, Meridian Methodist Church was chosen as the place of meeting for the next District Conference.

The last session of the Conference was devoted to the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Speeches were made by three matchless laymen: L. P. Brown, D. W. Heidelberg, and W. D. Hawkins.

The presiding elder appointed the following as a licensing committee: W. H. LaPrade, J. W. Ramsey, F. B. Ormond, and C. M. Chapman.

The District Conference gave prominence to religious exercises, and sermons were delivered by the following brethren: S. N. Young, F. B. Ormond, W. C. Black, W. H. LaPrade, and J. W. Ramsey.

Resolutions were passed thanking the people of Shubuta for their hospitality. Dr. Weems, the pastor, who is in great favor with his flock, looked well after the comfort of the preachers and delegates. He and his members are building a new parsonage, which, when completed will make Shubuta about the best appointment in the Conference.

"Lots and cords" of preachers wouldn't mind going to Shubuta. The people are cultured and prosperous, the town is lighted by electricity, and artesian wells flow in almost every yard.

SEASHORE CAMP-MEETING.

A DELIGHTFUL SUMMER HOME.

There is not in all the Southland a more delightful place to spend the summer than on the Seashore Camp Ground. There are ample accommodations and good board. A great many families own or rent cottages on the grounds. Electric lights, artesian water and gas for cooking give the essential comforts of the city. The seashore drive and electric street car line extends for thirty miles or more, with comfortable homes on one side and the gulf on the other. The bathing privileges are free to those who make their homes on the camp grounds. The gulf breeze tempers the climate, until it is more delightful than at many Northern resorts. Fresh fish and oysters may be had all the summer through.

ATTRACTIONS FOR THE SUMMER OF 1909.

Annual Camp Meeting, July 7-15. The Camp Meeting really gives the right to exist to the grounds, and it was for this purpose that Christian men invested their money in this property, in order that men might come away for a season from their other cares and commune with God. We hope for a revival this year.

Summer School for Sunday School Workers, July 16-23. In this day, when every school teacher who is keeping up with his profession attends a summer normal somewhere, it is a mark of the enlarged conception given to the most important teaching that we have, that summer normals are being provided for Sunday School teachers. In the school of methods for Sunday School Workers some of the most experienced teachers of the nation will tell how best to conduct the Sunday School.

Seashore Assembly for Christian Workers, July 21-Aug. 3. This is the successor to the former Seashore Epworth League Assembly. It has simply broadened the scope of its work. While not undertaking to do especially evangelical work, but rather to train the young people how to work, this assembly usually numbers many conversions as an immediate result of its work. Some of the gracious revivals that have blessed some of the churches have had their inception in the new conceptions of service given the young people in this assembly.

For full particulars, address as follows:

In regard to accommodations: R. G. Price, Biloxi, Miss.; or S. G. Meyer, 116 St. Charles St., New Orleans; or Dr. E. L. McGehee, 1502 Webster [illegible] Orleans, La.

Sunday School Institute: T. V. Ellzey, Canal-[illegible] Bank Bldg., New Orleans, La.

Christian Workers' Assembly: Rev. F. S. Parker, D.D., Nashville, Tenn.

SEASHORE PREACHER'S INSTITUTE.

The initial session of the Seashore Preacher's Institute was in every respect a success. The weather was good, the programme was excellent and the speakers were at their best. A full account of the Institute is not desired here since it has already appeared in the columns of the daily press. So our purpose is to give only a few impressions and expressions. To discuss each course of lectures in detail is impossible in these lines.

Dr. Franklin N. Parker's lectures on "Ephesians." was equal to any we ever heard on that great Epistle. He gave the mountain-peaks of truth that tower through this rich revelation. Here Paul is shown to be the "practical mystic." While he soars to the third heaven, yet he never forgets that he is living with sinful men. One great idea is clearly revealed: One Church in Christ Jesus, the real and eternal purpose of the Father. In these searching studies by Dr. Parker there was much soul-food as well as intellectual illumination given to the preachers.

Dr. Shailer Mathews of the Chicago University, knows how to think and to make others think. With a wink of the eye or with a sweep of the hand he can throw a flood of light on obscure and difficult passages of the Scripture. His two series of studies were on "The Social Teachings of Jesus" and "Studies in the Parables." He deals in only the vital things and goes at the heart of matters in such an honest, straightforward and frank fashion that one cannot help but listen to him and, for the most part agree with him. His style is conversational and easy, his language is simple and terse, strong and forceful. Moreover, his delicate and refined humor is of the spontaneous type and always illustrative and illuminating. The Commissioners and preachers were so well pleased with Dr. Mathews that he has already been engaged for next year.

President Wm. L. Weber, of Centenary College gave a course of lectures on "Death and the Future Life" as taught in the poems of Wordsworth, Milton, Shelly and Tennyson. Professor Weber is one of the first teachers of our Southland and he more than sustained his reputation in these studies. He grasps the truth with ease and gives it to his pupils and hearers in such a forceful manner as to make it stick and enlarge the vision.

Dr. John M. Moore, managing-editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, gave four inspiring lectures on "The Preacher" and one on "The Chinese—The Ceremonial." Dr. Moore won all hearts. He held up a high and noble standard for the preacher. His lectures were practical, pointed and powerful. Of course, in his description of the preacher he expressed himself very clearly on his views of the presiding elder and the Bishop. Dr. Moore, after traveling in our mission fields in the Orient, is convinced that we need a resident Bishop in that country if we would save men and money. No pastor heard his soul-inspiring messages without feeling the need of a better equipment for his high calling and longing to render a more unselfish service.

Dr. Joel T. Daves, of Atlanta, Ga., took the place of Dr. McMurry and delighted all with his helpful messages on different phases of the pastor's work. In this course of lectures were discourses on "The Pastor As An Evangelist," "The Fruits of Evangelism," "The Pastor As a Maker of the Future," "The Preacher As a Missionary," and other similar themes. These lectures were of a popular character and appealed to both laymen and clergyman. Dr. Daves is a polished public speaker with all the grace of gesture and voice that makes the message attractive. His series of studies gave the preachers a larger vision of self and service and inspired them with the greatness of their divine calling.

Dr. Gross Alexander (the great) book editor and editor of the Methodist Review, brought things both old and new out of the Scriptures. He is inimitable and unique, but better still he is strikingly original and profoundly spiritual in his interpretation. His exegesis is always searching, stirring and satisfying. Indeed, one is almost overwhelmed with some of his great expositions and interpretations. He is easily equal if not superior to any we have known. His "Exposition of The Sermon on the Mount" was bristling with deep spiritual ideas and profound scholarly insight. If now and then you were led aside in your way into the heart of this great discourse, you were only being prepared for the reception of some mighty truth that might be the very anchor of the soul. His analysis of "Romans" was about the best we have seen of that greatest of Epistles. He knows how to master his subject and then to present it to you. You are at once surprised and delighted as new fields of thought are opened to you.

So much for the series of lectures. But what about the financial end of it? If we are correctly informed, all the expenses were met in full by the admission fees from the preachers and by the funds raised by the preachers and generous laymen of the patronizing Annual Conferences. Congratulations to the commisioners and brethren! They have done nobly. This Preacher's Institute fills a great need in our Zion. Our preachers must be better prepared for service. We must have stronger leaders if we would have the largest measure of success. We are sure that the congregations of the pastors who attended will see a marked enrichment in the preaching and pastoral work of their undershepherds. And we predict that the laymen will be glad to send their pastor next year.

The name of the institute has been changed from from "Preacher's Institute" to "Seashore Divinity School." Dr. W. B. Murrah is elected Dean. Rev. Robt. Selby, of Natchez, Miss., is president of the directors; Rev. Ellison, of Alabama, secretary, and Rev. W. W. Holmes, of New Orleans, treasurer. Rev. H. M. Ellis, of Brookhaven is chairman of the publishing committee. The entertainment committee is composed of Rev. Dr. H. H. McNeil, Rev. W. W. Holmes, and Rev. E. W. Lipscomb.

We understand that extensive plans have been formed for the Institute of next year. The programme will vary a little and a course in Psychology will be given, also other under-graduate work. Let the good work go on to perfection. A DISCIPLE.

THE ENOCHS FAMILY.

Dear Editor: In your issue of July 1, Rev. R. B. Downer, in writing of the "History of Methodism," by Rev. J. G. Jones, says: "In Vol. II, mention is made of Rev. Isaac V. Enochs. I wonder if he was not the father of Fletcher, Isaac V. Jr., and Capt. Jas. Enochs—a noble band of stalwart Methodist laymen of Copiah and Hinds Counties, known by many of my co-adjutors in the ministry." As a son of one of the three mentioned above, I would say that my grandfather was the Honorable John R. Enochs, of Rankin County. He was not a preacher, though a most devout Christian and loyal Methodist. I have not read the book, but think there is some mistake, as I have no recollection of the Rev. Isaac V. Enochs. So far as my information goes, there was not a Levite in the family. The prophetic element seems to have been lacking. Of ten sons, my father gave to four the names of great preachers and churchmen, but, whether wanting in grace or gifts, the ministerial call fell on none of them.

I think I never knew a more ardent lover of the preacher than was my father; and the same may be said of the two brothers mentioned in Brother Downer's article. Well do I remember with what ardent attention they received the preached Word. It was exceeded only by their zest in entertaining the preacher. No guest was so welcome, none so honored. Nor did any more highly esteem the pastoral relation, or receive more profit from its helpful influence. Much of their strength was derived from this association.

I want to thank dear Brother Downer for the use of the term "stalwart" in speaking of these men. They loved a stalwart preacher. Dr. Winans and Samuel S. L. Scott in their younger days and Drs. Linfield, Watkins, Harvey F. Johnson and J. B. McFerrin in later years, were their ideals. They were men of conviction, men of purpose, with whom to resolve was to do. They served their day and time faithfully and conscientiously and though not called to proclaim the Word they exemplified its truths in their lives and thus served and taught others to honor and worship God.

This article, though a slight diversion from its original purpose, is written to commemorate these, to me, excellent traits of these faithful and God-fearing men. E. A. ENOCHS.

GLOOM CASTERS.

They were in a reminiscent mood, the friends who reumited after the lapse of a quarter of a century, were laughing merrily over their girlhood pranks, when a change came over the face of the hostess, as, glancing out of the window, she exclaimed in a distressed tone:

"Here comes the gloom-caster! I do not want you to make her acquaintance, however, so I will not invite her into this room."

"Well, well, and so you do not care to introduce me to all your friends!" exclaimed the guest, in a make-believe injured tone, when Mrs. Raymond re-entered the room an hour later, and sank wearily into a chair.

"No, I do not!" was the emphatic reply, "for to my way of thinking, one is far better off without such frends as she. Why, I feel as if I never could smile again after one of Mrs. Gorham's too frequent calls, she is such a gloom-caster."

"Is she gloomy by nature, or has she had more than her share of trouble?" queried the one who had herself borne much.

"Your first question I cannot answer, but one would think to hear Mrs. Gorham talk that Job's trials were trivial in comparison to hers, when the truth is she has more to live for than most of us—a kind husband and three devoted children, yet because one daughter is not, she overlooks her manifold blessings and mourns continually. Had it not been for sparing you I would have been glad to have her look into your sunny face and then afterwards tell her how sorely you have been tried."

"Oh, she might think me heartless and say, as did a woman I once met, who failed to understand that it is possible for one to triumph over grief: 'Oh, you could not have loved as I love.'"

"Doubtless," rejoined the hostess, "for many are so selfish in their grief that they do not seem to realize that others suffer as well as they. But, my friend of auld lang syne, now that we are talking along that line, I venture to ask a question that has many times well-nigh slipped from my lips since you came to me, and that is, how is it possible for you to wear so brave a front when you have been stripped of nearly all that you hold dear? For I confess that I shrank from meeting you, knowing what you have passed through, hence you are a constant puzzle to me."

The guest was silent for a little space, and then laughingly replied:

"I might have been a gloom-caster, like your caller, to the end of the chapter, had my eyes not been opened to the folly of wearing my heart on my sleeve years ago. Yes, I have been sorely tested, and there was a time when I, too, felt as if I could never smile again. My anguish seemed too great to be borne without human sympathy, so I often left the solitude of my lovely home, never thinking what my friends were made to suffer in consequence, until one day I went to the home of one whose sympathy had seemed unfailing, and as I ascended the steps I heard merry laughter and through the open window floated the words:

'Pity me! for I must listen to the same old tale of woe.'"

"She referred to you!" cried the astonished hostess, "and pretended to be your friend!"

"Yes, and I am glad I heard her say it, too," was the laughing retort, "though at the time I was so crushed that when the patience-tried woman met me at the door I merely handed her a loaned book, and facing about, hastened back to my desolate home, and with a plea for Divine aid, took myself in hand, but I assure you, old teacher as I am, that I never had so refractory a person to deal with as my tear-blinded self on that memorable day. But after looking from every view point. I was forced to admit that patience on the part of my friends had ceased to be a virtue, and that they were deserving of 'pity' as well as myself.

"So, little by little, I schooled myself to hide my grief from the world and to smile when my heart seemed breaking, and that is what all sorrowing ones should strive to do, for even friends soon weary of an oft-repeated 'tale of woe,' though to the bereft one it may be ever new."

"If my caller could have an eye-opener similar to yours," rejoined Mrs. Raymond, "it would mean much to her friends, for there is a limit to endurance, and Mrs. Gorham is such a universal gloom-caster that many who really sympathize with her avoid meeting her if possible."—Helena H. Thomas, in Christian Intelligencer.

THE CONDUCTOR'S BUSINESS.

One night on our way from Dubuque, Iowa, to Cedar Rapids, on the Illinois Central Railroad, our attention was called to two young ladies who seemed to have come from rural regions. Another woman entered about whose face there was something sinister and deceitful. From their conversation we gathered that the girls were going to Gedar Rapids to work. The woman directed them to a boarding place.

After a while we looked back and saw the conductor in conversation with them. They were crying. When he came for our tickets I said, "What is the trouble back there, Mr. Hart?" He and I had been good friends for a number of years—ever since I first boarded his train and, with a smile, he had said cheerily: "Good morning, sir! May I see your ticket?" I remember that I looked up to see from whence the sunshine emanated and gazed into a face round and clean and as smiling as a May morning. Then I noticed also that on his sleeve he wore a number of gold stripes, marking him as one of the oldest and most faithful of employes. On the lapel of his coat was a little button with a pitcher on it, telling me that he belonged to that splendid corps of traveling men, "Gideon's Band," who have done so much to lift the traveling men to a place of honor and respect. That button became the link which bound us and our hands clasped in real brotherhood.

In reply to my question he said: "I found that those girls were going to work in the Cedar Rapids factory and had been directed by some woman to a boarding-house which has an evil reputation. I knew if they ever went there they would be lost before morning. My wife is with me on the train, and we will take them home with us over-night and find them a safe home." I said: "That is a fine thing for you to do, and rather exceptional for a man in your busy life." He replied, as he put his hand on my shoulder: "That is my business. I feel that I am not only responsible to the Illinois Central for the fares of my passengers, but I am responsible to Jesus Christ for their souls. My business is to serve Jesus Christ—I am working for the Illinois Central to cover expenses."

A few months after I again boarded the train of my friend and asked him about the fate of the girls. There came a light of a greater joy than I had seen in his face before as he said: "We took the girls home, and the next day found them a safe boarding place. We took them to our church and last Sunday they were baptized into our communion as members. They belong now to Him." I was not surprised a little later to find that his first name was "Andrew," for I remembered: "And Andrew first findeth his own brother Simon and saith to him, We have found the Christ. And he brought him to Jesus."—Congregationalist.

This is a book of 261 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It is from the press of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

ENCOURAGING DOUBT.

We do not remember that Mr. Bolce, in his exposure of college teaching, named Union Theological Seminary as one of the offending institutions, but as a matter of fact three young men, graduates of that school, applied to the Presbytery of New York as candidates for the ministry. According to the custom, they were examined before the Presbytery. The examination disclosed the fact that the young men were not sound in the faith. The Presbytery promptly, and by a decisive vote, declined to accept and send them forth as Presbyterian ministers. A correspondent of the Philadelphia Presbyterian says they were rejected "partly on the ground that they did not know, but chiefly that they did not believe the things most surely believed among us."

These young men "distinctly repudiated the virgin birth of Christ, the raising of Lazarus from the dead and the resurrection of Christ's body." The history of the fall of man they accepted only as an allegory. They declined to affirm "faith in the deity of Christ," had no clear faith in the Trinity, and "their views of the atonement were in hopeless disaccord, not only with the Confession of Faith, but with ordinary evangelical belief, and they appeared to have no knowledge of what 'justification by faith' is." Surely these were grounds sufficient to decline any set of candidates for the ministry, no matter how high their personal and family standing, or how great their attainments in literature. In theology they seemed not to have attained to the "first principles."

Notwithstanding the decisive vote by which these young men were rejected, the Presbytery was indulgent, and decided to give them another chance. Accordingly a special committee, after full conference, reported to the Presbytery in June, "recommending that they be re-examined, expressing some confidence that their examinations would reveal a better knowledge in theology, but promising nothing as to their soundness in the faith." The second examination showed some clearing up of their views on theological points, but as to the principal facts of the gospel they were agnostic—they did not know and would neither deny nor affirm. Dr. John Fox, who gave the facts to the Presbyterian, says: "All these things clearly showed that their attitude to the Scriptures is the characteristic 'higher critical' attitude. They did not recognize the facts alleged in the Scriptures to be facts, nor the paramount authority of the Bible as binding their faith. This was plain beyond peradventure." But the Presbytery reversed its former action, and sent the young men out to preach, "mainly due to the fact" that there was "a somewhat nearer approach to orthodoxy in the second examination" than in the first. Probably the Presbytery hoped that time would bring them into full touch with evangelical truth.

How did it happen that these men became thus [illegible] so early in life? They were students and graduates of a Presbyterian theological seminary. We do not undertake to say that the professors in that school hold and teach the views put before the New York Presbytery by these graduates. But is it unfair to presume that either text-books or reference books which maintain the higher destructive critical theories of the Bible are used in this institution, and that the teachers either did not or could not counteract [illegible]? Whether so or not, the fact remains: these young men came from the seminary [illegible] poisoned in mind as to the [illegible] of the gospel which they propose to preach. We hope this time-honored seminary is not culpable.

What sort of preachers will these young men make? Who can tell? It is sometimes the case that a young man of [illegible] faith and zeal for souls, and at the same time anxious to learn, allows himself to be carried away by the specious higher criticism, and imbibes notions utterly at variance with evangelical truth, but he does not forget the old way of preaching, and when fully fired with the love of souls he preaches as though he never heard of the higher criticism. But this cannot be said of the man who begins his ministry in the cold regions of intellectual criticism. Whatever else he may be, he is not and never can be a gospel preacher. And to deny outright the deity of Christ and his resurrection places a man outside the pale of evangelical religion. Such a man has no right to the standing of any Christian church on his credentials.

THE PREACHING OF TO-DAY.

We have no reason to doubt some of the preaching of the day is utterly destitute of evangelical sound. There are a few even in our Southern Methodism who hold that the standards of the Church by which Methodist preaching has all along been shaped "are for our time practically worthless save as historical monuments," and have "no message for the people." It has not been our misfortune recently to hear men who kick against the things which above all else have kept Methodist preachers in the way of truth and made Methodism great.

It is our fortune to hear only a pure gospel interpreted as it was by Mr. Wesley and the fathers of the Church. True, much of what we hear is rather weak as specimens of sermonizing, lacking in polish, and sometimes showing the absence of the schoolmaster, but what it lacks in these things is fully made up by zeal, clearness of statement and directness of appeal to the hearts of the people. This is the character of the preaching that brings men and women to Christ. No other kind can accomplish that result, no matter how intellectual or polished or learned it may be. Even Christians starve on such preaching.

Much of the preaching that we do not hear is reported to us. Some reports come to us through contributors to the ADVOCATE. Other reports come through friends who have heard it. With scarcely an exception, the reports are all good. It is specially gratifying that in the great meetings recently held in our immediate territory the dominant note was evangelistic—stress having been laid on the settled and vital principles of the gospel. The revival spirit is abroad—souls are being saved and added to the Church. Not one revival has been reported to the ADVOCATE, nor have we heard of one incidentally, effected through the preaching of Campbell's new theology, whatever that may be, or Crapsey's denials, or the agnosticism of the brilliant young men just turned out of school, nor by the preaching of men who decline to "build up their theology, not on the technical authority of Scripture or Creed, but on the social convictions of men."

The old gospel is still "the power of God unto salvation." Nothing else is. It will never lose its charm, nor can we ever outgrow it. New light may be thrown on the Word and give it an added charm, but be sure it will be discerned by those who know it best, not by those who have never felt the life and power of grace.

PERSONAL.

Rev. T. J. O'Neil, of the Newton (Miss.) District, is a man of few words—so we judge by his short letters—but to the point. He finds his preachers everywhere pushing the battle, determined to succeed.

We acknowledge with thanks a complimentary season ticket to the State Fair of Louisiana, to be held at Shreveport, Nov. 1 to [illegible]. This kind invitation to the editor and wife comes from the Board of Directors, and is fully appreciated.

Rev. R. T. [illegible] never tires in his work as a [illegible] and never fails to put in an effective word for the Advocate. He is doing well in his charge, the [illegible] Circuit—will begin his revival services soon, and expects great things of God.

Rev. J. A. Parker, D.D., is resting a while on the Gulf coast in the hope of storing up strength for the fall campaign. Correspondents are requested to address him at Gulfport, Miss., care of L. G. Parker, Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Building.

Mr. James S. Purcell, father of Rev. G. D. Purcell, of the Louisiana Conference, and Rev. J. S. Purcell, of the Mississippi Conference, passed to his reward from his home in Bossier Parish, near Plain Dealing, La., July 1, 1909. We sympathize with our brethren in the great loss they have sustained.

If any of our readers desire to know all about the work of the Anti-Saloon League, together with knowledge of the whole liquor traffic, send 35 cents to the Anti-Saloon League of America, 110 La Salle Ave., Chicago, Ill. To anyone interested in the temperance reform of the country the book will prove to be invaluable. One who has not studied the matter will be amazed.

Mrs. L. E. Alford, wife of our pastor at Long Beach, Miss., is at the Touro Infirmary, in this city, undergoing treatment. She is improving steadily, and, without a setback, will be able to return to her home in a short time. Brother Alford spends much of his time here looking after her comfort. He has paid our office several visits.

Rev. W. G. Harris, of New Albany, Miss., is taking a much-needed rest somewhere on the other side of the Mississippi river. He had a long and tedious spell of sickness last winter, which greatly enfeebled him. Nothing but his love for the Master has sustained him in his labors, which he resumed before full recovery. We hope his western trip will do him great good.

The little note in the Advocate from Rev. R. B. Downer, asking the restoration of a lost copy of "Zion's Harp," has not resulted in securing the lost copy, but it brought him another copy, and he is now happy, singing the old songs—"getting in tune to sing by and by with loved ones gone before." He is indebted to Dr. J. A. B. Jones for the book, and hereby renders his thanks for the courtesy.

The annex to the First Church, Tupelo, Miss., is nearing completion. One class was scheduled to occupy it last Sunday. And the church is extending its work—holding successful meetings at the cotton factory and conducting a good Sunday school. The pastor, Rev. W. W. Woollard, says: "everything here is happy and the church is really doing a great work. I never knew a more active church."

The Gulf Coast Mission, under the supervision of Rev. W. T. Griffin, with headquarters at Gulfport, is very prosperous. Brother Griffin is trying hard to help the sailors, many of whom are always at the port. His Seamen's Bethel is doing good. A concert at the Bethel on July 5, in the evening, was largely attended, and of a most interesting character. The Gulfport Record speaks in high terms of Brother Griffin's fitness for the position he occupies.

In the death of Mrs. Hester Ann Currie, whose obituary appeared in last week's issue, the Advocate lost one of its oldest and most faithful friends. Many years ago, on account of a large gift to the Advocate by her husband, the particulars of which we never knew, the paper was put on the mailing list to Mother Currie "for life." Such friends have been worth more to the paper than the subscription price. The names of such friends should be held in everlasting remembrance.

Dr. McMurry has sent us a copy of the "Church Extension Hand Book for 1909." We thank him. It is full of facts and figures worth studying. We like it, especially the pictures, not the least striking of which is that of Dr. McMurry's Texas friend. We suppose it is a friend of the doctor's boyhood, as he and his like have passed away. This Hand Book has been mailed to every preacher in the church. As long as the supply lasts, it will be sent to others interested in Church Extension. Requests may be made on the office at Louisville, Ky.

We thank the Secretaries of the Board of Missions for sending us a copy of the Sixty-third Annual Report of the Board. It is a volume of 220 pages, and full of information concerning the mission work of our church, including the Constitution and By-Laws of the Board, and a Missionary Manual. The work of the Annual Conference Boards is itemized, as well as that of the General Board. We do not know whether this report is for sale or free distribution. Readers can find out this for themselves by application to Dr. W. R. Lambuth, Nashville, Tenn. It is well worth paying for.

All veterans who enlisted from Louisiana in the Confederate army are earnestly requested to forward their names and postoffice address to Mr. T. W. Castleman, with the view of furnishing them blanks to be filled out, and thus assist in compiling a correct list of all who served in the Confederate army from Louisiana. Any veteran, or any member of a veteran's family, whether living now in Louisiana or elsewhere, having in his or their possession, or know of any muster roll of any company organized in 1861-65 from Louisiana, the loan or donation of the same will be highly appreciated. Address T. W. Castleman, 604 Canal La. Bk. Bld'g, New Orleans, La.

A note from E. L. Fontenot, of Pine Prairie, La., to the Opelousas Clarion, under date of July 7, says: "We have just been blessed with the presence of Rev. A. W. Turner, of Opelousas. He was with us eight days, and such a glorious meeting I have never known. Twenty-three in all joined the church. Nine were baptized. While here he organized a church for Pine Prairie. Mr. Eloi Campbell donated two lots to the church. The work was at once commenced for the building of a house of worship. We have already $150 and five thousand feet of lumber donated, and the work will be pushed with the utmost rapidity." We congratulate Brother Turner on his great success.

A WORD OF GREETING.

On July 14th, I am to leave Houston and on the 22nd, a gracious Providence favoring, I will sail from San Francisco on a visit to our missions in the Far East. Before starting on this long journey, I desire to send affectionate greeting to the brethren of the Louisiana Conference. My love will be with you and my prayers for you everyday of my absence. I trust the year may be one of great growth in the Church and that revival power may prevail in all the borders of the Conference. Our first great work is the proclamation of the gospel of God's grace for the salvation of those committed to our charge. In this, our high calling, let us be diligent and faithful. Let me also urge diligence in prayer and liberality in contributions for the cause of missions. The need was never greater than it is to-day, nor were opportunities ever more inviting. My heart is heavy as I think of the needs that are not being met and of the urgent requests to which I shall be compelled to say "no." The struggling missions and burdened workers in the East cannot understand why we are so slow in giving needed assistance. Brethren, let us make this a great year for missions.

Bishop Key has kindly consented to take official oversight of the Louisiana Conference during my absence. Any matters requiring Episcopal attention may be referred to him. He may be addressed at Sherman, Texas.

I hope to return to America early in November, and if it please God, to meet the Louisiana Conference at Alexandria, Dec. 15.

GALLOWAY MEMORIAL CHURCH.

Cash Receipts—Reid Bingham Lipscomb, Columbus, Miss., $5; Ed M. Hendry, Tampa, Fla., $25; Jno. Trice, Tampa, Fla., $100.

On one of his visits to Carrollton, Bishop Galloway baptized Reid Bingham Lipscomb, son of Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, our pastor then, now presiding elder of Columbus District. Now this dear boy sends five dollars for the Memorial Church. If all who were blessed by the Bishop and intend to join in this memorial will remit at once we will soon see our fondest hopes realized.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

The Wingate Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which was recently completed is to be dedicated on the first Sunday in August. Rev. M. L. Burton will preach the dedication sermon. All are invited to attend, especially those who contributed to its erection.

The name chosen, is Catherine, after the late Mrs. J. J. Bradford, who took the most active part in its erection.

R. E. BRADFORD.

A VETERAN CALLS FOR HELP.

Dear Brother Boswell: The Coahoma Charge is moving forward on good lines. We have refitted the church in Coahoma and it is one of beauty. We have built and paid for a handsome church in Dundee. We are now building one at Dubbs to cost $1600. Some kind friends have helped us nobly. We need much more in the next three weeks. The building will be completed by the first of September. Help us, brethren.

BLUFF CREEK CAMP MEETING.

July 30 to Aug. 8.

This place of worship is known as a feast of good things, such as a Christian longs for and a sinner needs. We have here witnessed many revivals and conversions. All preachers are invited and will be entertained free. There will be accommodation for man and beast. There will be daily hacks from Clinton, La.

SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The old historic Seashore Camp Ground is having a season of spiritual refreshing and awakening. While some of the tents usually in use at this time each year are vacant and other protracted services and attractions are detracting from a large attendance, those who are providentially blessed in being here, are being greatly blessed.

The 11 o'clock service in the morning and the vesper and 8 o'clock service in the evening are the popular services of the day. The 6:30 o'clock prayer meetings and the 8 o'clock preaching services in the mornings are seasons of refreshing and strength from the Lord for the preachers and lay workers. No meetings were held during the afternoon until Sunday, when a 3:30 o'clock service was held. An estimate of 1500 persons was attendant upon the services at each service Sunday.

The responsibility of the services in the early part of the meeting devolved upon Rev. F. N. Parker, presiding elder of the New Orleans District; Rev. W. M. Cox, presiding elder of the Mobile District, Alabama Conference, being called away by the sickness of his daughter; Rev. W. B. Jones only arrived Saturday afternoon, having been detained at home by illness. He however came to the meeting feeling much improved and entering heartily into the work.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, recently of the North Mississippi Conference and now serving the North Alabama Conference at Huntsville, and Rev. I. W. Chalker, of Jackson, Ala., are among the "leading lights" of the meeting. Brother Bowen, with his thirty-two years experience and consecration in the itinerary, is giving the people undeniable, unchallengeable arguments in favor of a better life for the professed Christian, and persuasive, convincing reasons for the sinner to leave the old life and cling to Christ. Brother Chalker, a young man gifted with the possibilities of a great preacher and a leader in the great Church of God, with his earnestness and quotations of the Holy Book, awakens the desire in the heart of the sinner to turn from evil and follow the ways of righteousness—the church member and avowed follower of the lowly Christ is made ashamed of his profession by his utter lack of measuring up to the Bible standard of Christianity.

Rev. H. R. Singleton, of Alexandria, La., Rev. A. F. Vaughan, of Lafayette, La., Rev. N. B. Joyner, of New Orleans; dear old Brother Geo. Jackson, of Lamourie, La.; Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, of Biloxi, Miss.; Rev. W. W. Cammack, superannuate, of Mammoth Springs, Miss.; Rev. J. W. Akin, of Birmingham, Ala., and many others are here and helping the meeting along in many ways.

It is impossible to say at this time just how many conversions there have been, or to what extent the church has been aroused. The meeting, at this time of writing, is only about half over, and the larger results are yet expected.

T. V. Ellzey, the live Sunday school worker, and his band of noble volunteers, have done much by house to house canvassing in and outside of the grounds, towards getting the people to attend the services. May the church be praying and keep on praying for the success and the "stickability" of the work done here at this meeting.

L. E. WICHT.

TO THE FRIENDS OF BISHOP CHARLES BETTS GALLOWAY.

It is in the hearts of thousands to do something to honor the memory of Bishop Galloway. A number of things have been suggested as appropriate: A marble monument, a memorial building on the campus of Millsaps College, or a Memorial Educational, or Church Extension Loan Fund.

At a meeting of representative preachers and laymen held in the city of Jackson on June 7th, these various proposals were carefully considered, and the conclusion was reached that the wisest and most feasible thing to do now is to co-operate with the members of the First Church, Jackson, Miss., in building a memorial church.

The house in which that congregation at present worships was constructed in 1883, during the pastorate of Bishop Galloway, and largely through his efforts. It has long been outgrown and inadequate. Some months ago a movement was started to procure a larger and more modern structure, and the last utterance of the Bishop in that church was in advocacy of that needed enterprise, which was much upon his heart. The plan then proposed contemplated the erection of an edifice to cost only from $35,000 to $50,000. But profoundly touched by the going away of their former pastor and beloved friend, the congregation on June 6th, decided to enlarge the scope of their plan and erect a building to cost $75,000, to be known as "The Charles B. Galloway Memorial Church." This it was their purpose to do without any outside assistance.

It is to this noble enterprise that the meeting of representative preachers and laymen, referred to above, decided to lend their aid. Accordingly, the official board of First Church was requested to permit connectional Methodism to add at least $25,000 to their building fund in order to make the church cost not less than $100,000. This permission was readily granted, and Rev. W. H. LaPrade, D.D., Rev. R. A. Meek, Mr. H. S. Stevens, Mr. J. D. Barbee, and the writer were given charge of the movement to raise the $25,000. J. R. Bingham was authorized to receive and receipt for gifts to this connectional fund.

Surely every congregation and every Methodist will count it a privilege to contribute. Let us immediately see that all have the opportunity. Proceed in your own way. Only a single suggestion is offered: see personally, individuals who will give $5, or $10, or larger amounts, and then give everybody a chance to contribute something.

Only one thing is insisted on: ACT PROMPTLY. The brethren in Jackson will soon want to perfect their plans and specifications, and are entitled to know how much more than $25,000 we will raise. Let us make it a $150,000 church.

Have your subscriptions to be in cash. All amounts paid to me will bear interest from the day received to the day used by the building committee. Thus our funds will increase themselves, and the sooner they are put in my hands the faster they will accumulate. The first $100 is already bearing interest.

The church will stand immediately in front of Bishop Galloway's residence, whence radiated the manifold and far-reaching influence that so greatly blessed our Methodism and the whole country.

No argument is attempted because none is needed.

Yours truly,
J. R. BINGHAM, Treasurer.

TOPIC FOR [illegible]

[illegible]

1. Love Pities Him Who Suffers.

Jesus was moved with compassion. [illegible]

[illegible]

Among the suffering millions of the earth there is now some one who is reaching out for love and crying for help. [illegible]

2. Love Touches Whom It Pities.

Though leprosy was the most loathsome of all diseases, and the leper repulsive in every sense, yet Jesus put forth his hand and touched him. No one knows the tenderness and the humanness of touching the [illegible] of suffering and wretchedness [illegible] not from rags, nor from deformity, nor from moral uncleanness [illegible] does not help from a long range of distance, nor from a superior height of virtue, but at the side. When Launfal left his castle he saw only the leper, whom he disdainfully tossed an alms, but on his return as he shared with him his crust

"The leper no longer crouched at his side,
But stood before him glorified."

A dignitary of one of the religious orders of Syria was passing along the street and many people pressed to salute him and kiss his hand. Looking over the crowd he said: "I know most of you, but who is this lady? What is her name?" He was told her name and occupation. That was enough for him; she was a sinner. He skipped and jumped as if the earth under his feet were red-hot iron, and whether he meant it or not, he asked, "Who has a knife? Please cut off the part of my hand that the woman kissed. Cut it off! Cut it off!" There were those in the company who sympathized with him and were impressed with his extreme piety and jealousy over his purity. What would Christ have thought?—From Sunday School Times.

3. Love Heals Whom It Touches.

"Immediately the leprosy departed from him."

Omitting reference to the question of divine healing of body, Christian love, or human love at its best, has often restored health by the warmth of its presence. It has successfully consecrated itself to the medical and surgical healing of repulsive heathen. It is the human agency by which thousands of lives have been morally transformed. Judge Lindsay touched a chronic little criminal in the jail, and he sticks forever to his resolution, "I'll stay wid yer, Judge."

Mrs. Booth touches a man in prison whom the magistrate classes as a brute-beast, he says, "I will try, little mother," and he becomes a Christian.

There is a restoring power in love. Human love makes possible faith in Christ's saving love—the human touch makes possible the divine touch.

FROM TOPISAW.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We observed June 20 and 27 as Children's Day on the Topisaw charge. These were delightful services to me and very profitable to the children.

In the afternoon of the 20th I talked to the children at Sartinville Church and a large number of them gave their hearts to God. In the afternoon of the 27th Rev. Oliver Felder, a boy of 17, preached to the children at Topisaw. Eight joined the church and many more gave their hearts to God. We were all made happy.

Next Sunday, July 4, we will begin our meeting at Sartinville. Brother J. T. Leggett, our presiding elder, will do the preaching. We are expecting a great revival there, for it has already begun. Almost every service is like a revival. The walls of Jericho are crumbling and we expect them to fall before this is published.

The Camp Meeting at Topisaw (Felder's Camp Ground) will begin the 6th of August and continue a week or longer. We are expecting a glorious meeting this year for we are praying for it and trusting God to make it so. We are trying to get ourselves ready for the Lord to use us to that end. We are having revivals all the time.

We have arranged to have Brother Walter G. Harbin with us in our Camp Meeting. Brother Harbin is too well known for any introduction. Brothers J. E. Williams, W. M. Sullivan, J. T. Abney and others will assist in the meeting. We invite the preachers of the Brookhaven District especially. All the ministers of the Mississipi Conference are invited to come help us. We are glad to know that Brother J. T. Leggett has arranged to be with us a part of the time at least. We all love our presiding elder and wish he could be with us all through the meeting. We would be glad to have you come Doctor. Can't you do so?

I ask all Christians everywhere to pray for our meetings at Topisaw. The Lord bless you and the dear old Advocate.

Yours in Christ, J. B. KING,
Pastor Topisaw Charge.

20th CENTURY TREATMENT.

In this day and generation the opium and liquor habits are not regarded so much as an outward and visible sign of viciousness as they are of an inward and physical condition. With this change of view-point has come a change in the method of treatment. We no longer treat our morphine users and drunkards as criminals. We no longer try to reform them mentally until we make the attempt to cure them physically. One of the chief exponents of this theory—and perhaps the most successful—is Dr. B. M. Woolley, of Atlanta, Ga. For over thirty years he has held firmly to this belief and the number of absolute cures he has made is something wonderful, as persons from every part of the Union who have been treated by him can testify.

SCHOOL AND COLLEGES.

We desire to call the attention of our readers to announcements of the institutions of learning on another page of this issue. As a whole, they represent the best educational advantages that the South, or any other section, can offer. And most of them are under refining religious influences. As Southern institutions they deserve the loyalty and patronage of Southern parents and guardians and we bespeak a favorable word in their behalf. Read the announcements. Resolutions of Thanks.

Whitworth College entertained 240 teachers during the State Normal at Brookhaven, Miss., which closed July 2. Prof. Hill, on June 30, offered the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted:

In view of the very pleasant and profitable month spent at Whitworth College, we, the teachers who have boarded at the college beg leave to express our thanks to Dr. Cooper and others for their uniform courtesy and hospitality in attending to our every comfort and pleasure during our stay.

We find Whitworth College an ideal place for a Summer School; the grounds are delightful, the buildings comfortable and convenient, the table-fare all that could be asked, and the health practically perfect. Very respectfully,

Obituaries.

Mrs. DORA E. McELROY was born June 5, 1860 in Winston County, Miss., and died at Highpoint, Miss., June 17, 1909. She was married to W. H. McElroy Dec. 23, 1879. She was the mother of seven children all of whom are living. These with the husband and other loved ones mourn her death. She was converted in early childhood and united with the Methodist Church and remained a consistent member until her death. She was a faithful wife, a true mother and a devoted Christian. And while she did not make as loud pretensions as some, yet she was true to God. And like Mary of Bethany, "She did what she could." It was my privilege to visit her several times during her illness and worship with her. And she was always happy in the services. She was an invalid for more than two years and was a great sufferer, yet she was patient to the last. All was done that could be done to save her life, but all to no avail, and while the weeping husband and children stood by asking God to save the life that was once beautiful, the gentle spirit slipped out and went home to God. May the blessings of heaven rest upon the home left so sad. And may the loved ones follow on. "She is not dead, but sleepeth." After funeral services conducted by the writer, her body was laid to rest in Bethsalem Cemetery to await the call of Christ. Her pastor,

REV. J. D. SIMPSON.

MISS ELOISE WROTEN.

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst and take to her eternal home our friend and co-laborer, Miss Eloise Wroten, and whereas she was true to the faith, proving her belief by her works, her love by her loyalty and fidelity, therefore be it resolved.

First—That in the death of Miss Eloise our Woman's Home Mission Society, of Magnolia, Miss., has lost a most faithful member. She passed away like a gentle breath into the beautiful land by angels blest.

Second—That we shall miss her from our midst, yet her life of piety, faith and devotion to duty along all lines will ever be an example to those who knew and loved her. That while we mourn our loss we will reverence her memory. May God bless the sisters and brother, from whom for a time she is separated. May each one learn to say "not as I will" and may the words grow sweeter as the days grow fewer between them.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family and spread upon the minutes of the Woman's Home Mission Society, and published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

(Mrs.) A. H. GATLIN,
Committee.

Mrs. MAGGIE SEBKEN died June 24, 1909, near Harrisville, Miss., aged 56 years. Sister Sebren was a member of the M. E. Church, South, a good wife, an affectionate mother, a loving sister, and a friend to all. She was converted to God about 34 years ago under the faithful pastorate of Rev. Pinkney Johnson and joined the church at Harrisville, Simpson county, and was a faithful member up to her death. She leaves a sorrowing husband, two sons, one daughter-in-law, one brother, three sisters, many relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Weep not, husband, children, brother and sisters. She is at rest Be faithful to God, as she was, and you will meet again on that beautiful shore where parting is no more.

Her pastor, R. T. NOLEN.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

At the last session of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League the committee on memoirs submitted the following report:

"It is with sorrow that we hear that since our last Conference, three of our worthy members have passed into the great beyond. All were active, loyal members of the League, and we feel a great loss in the death of these three.

At Gulfport some three weeks ago, Miss Millie Smithwick passed away On account of much sickness she was unable to do much work toward the end, but though her body was weak, yet was her spirit strong and she held out faithful unto the end.

The Centreville League was called upon to give up one of its faithful members in the person of Miss Nellie Ash. Miss Ash died of typhoid fever a few days before Christmas. She was a young, active member and her death was untimely.

Mr. Earl Record, of Natchez passed away four or five months ago, he died of consumption, and, for a few months previous to his death, he was in Texas, trying to recover his impaired health. He was an active member of the Natchez Chapter up to the time of his departure to Texas. The loss caused by his death is very strongly felt in Natchez.

Inasmuch as the Mississippi Conference Epworth League feels so strongly the loss of these members, be it resolved,

First, That the League Conference express its most heartfelt sympathy to the loved ones left behind.

Second, That it is the earnest hope of every Leaguer that our Heavenly Father will be with them and comfort them in their distress.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Epworth Era and New Orleans Advocate."

HOME COMFORTS.

Every man and his family wants home comforts, and spends a great deal of money for them. Now that the city is putting in the sewerage system and connecting all property with the water pipes free and the firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co. are doing the same with the sewer pipes, there is no reason that any family in the city owning a home should not have these comforts, especially when they go farther and do all kinds of plumbing work on contract and on the smallest monthly payments, giving the property holders every chance to enjoy these comforts and pay for them while enjoying same. If you are a property holder, see them and get them to tell you the cost, and the liberal terms will cause you to have the work begun at once.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address:
F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, Ohio.
Sold by Druggists, 75c.
Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

CHURCH INSURANCE.

The subject of insurance is an important one for churches. Insurance should not be neglected and sufficient insurance should be carried. An astonishingly large number of churches carry an insufficient amount of insurance. It is easier to pay premiums, besides being more business-like and less embarrassing, than to beg money to rebuild in the event of the destruction of the church by fire, lightning, or tornado, and it is easier to pay premiums under the co-operative system of our church insurance company, the National Mutual Church Insurance Co., of Chicago, than in any other way. The well-merited success of this company continues and it is now rendering a greater service to Methodism than ever before. Its business stands at the highest point ever attained—an evidence that it is faithfully fulfilling its mission. It is co-operating with churches, to their advantage, all over the country, and can do the same for yours. It insures churches parsonages and church schools and the property of pastors. Church officials and pastors should write for full particulars to Henry P. Magill, Sec'y and Manager, 184 LaSalle St., Chicago.

For Better Starching

A teaspoonful of melted paraffine in hot starch gives a much better finish to linens than starch alone.

Paraffine is wonderfully handy to have about the house—useful somewhere, somehow, from Monday to Saturday.

Pure Refined

PARAFFINE

is an admirable finish for uncarpeted floors. A little added to hot wash water loosens dirt from soiled clothes.

Nothing seals a fruit jar or jelly glass so surely as dipping the cap or cover, after closing, into hot Paraffine.

Ask for our anti-stick Paraffine Paper Pad for ironing day. It keeps the sad-irons smooth.

HER DUTY

"I feel it my duty," writes Mrs. Martha Dingus, of Lakin, Ky., "to inform you what Cardui has done for me. I have been a chronic invalid for years. I reckon I have had about every ailment that women are heir to. I have doctored a great deal with a great many doctors, as we have traveled a great deal in search of health, yet received but little benefit and got no better.

"Four months ago I commenced to use Cardui, and since then have been steadily improving all the time. I am now 46 years old, and am in better health than I have been in 20 years, and I give Cardui the credit for it."

Cardui has been known, during the past 50 years, as a reliable, effective remedy, for the ailments peculiar to women. It is a pure, non-intoxicating preparation, made exclusively from vegetable ingredients, having a special, curative effect on the female system. Cardui has been found to relieve pain and restore disordered functions to health.

If you're ill, don't wait until you have suffered for years before taking Cardui to relieve you. Isn't it your duty to spare yourself this pain? Get Cardui at once. All reliable druggists sell it.

LESSON FOR JULY 18.

PAUL AT THESSALONICA AND BEREA.

Acts xvii: 1-15.

Golden Text: "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee."

Paul and Silas, with Luke and Timothy, left Philippi and only passed through Amphipolis, with a probable stop of a night, and also Appolonia; there were only a few Jews at either of these places, not enough of them to have a synagogue. The plan of work may have been that if the preaching was done in Thessalonica these smaller places would hear of it, for the distasce between them was only thirty or thirty-five miles. The reason, inferred from the Scripture, for going direct to Thessalonica is that there was a synagogue there. It doubtless was the Spirit leading them there, as to a place from which "The gospel word would be sounded out" to the surrounding country, the same as was from Antioch, where the church soon grew in influence for good.

Paul began his work at once in Thessalonica, for three Sabbath days he reasoned with them out of the Scriptures. There was never one better able than Paul to reason from the Scriptures. He had made the law and the prophets his life study, and what is most remarkable he prepared himself for the gospel ministry when he was a Pharisee—"God's ways are not men's ways"—and if Paul's future had been known before hand, even the liberal minded Gamaliel would have been his instructor with great hesitancy, if at all. He as a Jew preaching to Jews, opened the Scriptures and alleged therefrom "That Christ must needs have suffered and risen again from the dead." He must have often proved the doctrine of the resurrection in former days when he came in contact with the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection. Now he not only alleged from the Scripture the truth of the resurrection, but also proved from the same Scriptures that the suffering, death and resurrection are all fulfilled in Christ. He contends that Christ must needs have been crucified and rise again—how else could there be a fulfillment of the words written by Isaiah? How else could a broken law be satisfied, and the law-breaker be freely justified?

These were new thoughts for those that heard and the Spirit sent conviction to many of them.

Some of the Jews that heard Paul consorted with Paul and Silas, which may mean that they identified themselves as believers and formed a church. A multitude of devout Greeks and not a few of the chief women also were among the believers. The harsh treatment received by the apostles at Philippi seemed to make Paul more determined in his work and rendered him bold in preaching Christ as the foretold Messiah, and the numbers that were converted excited the envy of the unbelieving Jews. Paul's worst enemies were his own countrymen, and these at Thessalonica were so bitter in their hatred that they they did not hesitate as to the means used against the gospel preachers; as a nucleus for a mob they collected "certain lewd fellows of the baser sort" and added a company that set all the city in an uproar. Paul and Silas were stopping at the house of Jason, whither the mob went, intending violence against the two preachers, but not finding them they took Jason and some of his friends and brought them before the rulers of the city, making the prophetic charge, though not then true, that "these that have turned the world upside down are come hither also, whom Jason hath received," making the same charge of violating the Roman law, as was made against them at Philippi, adding the accusation that they were proclaiming another king, one Jesus. There was great excitement among the people, and the rulers shared in it. It seems that no attention was paid to the charge, not even alluding to Jason as an accessory, but only made him and his friends give bond, and then released them.

That night the brethren sent Paul and Silas away to Berea, but the word of God was not sent away; it remained and had "free course and was glorified." (Read Paul's letter to Thesalonians.) The Jews were so fierce and determined against Paul because it was hard to accept his interpretation of their own revered Scripture; and his argument was always unanswerable, it only remained for the Spirit to quicken into life him that heard.

The next place at which the word was preached they were listened to by a different class of hearers—the people of Berea. These people were more noble than those of Thessalonica; sedately and decorously they listened to the preacher and "received the word with all readiness of mind," "and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so." How strange that two cities, situated as short a distance from each other, should show such a difference in their attitude to the gospel. The preaching of the word of God and the study of the Scriptures will create a nobility of character that is not otherwise attained. The student of God's word will note in his progress that he gradually attains the power of spiritual discernment, and that material things have a spiritual relation to events and circumstances of life. Paul's knowledge of the Scripture was the foundation of his sublimely logical reasoning; and when his austere learning was tempered by the love of the meek and lowly Nazarene, then he became fully equipped for the work he so successfully accomplished.

Many of the Jews in Berea believed, and many of the Greeks also; but the servants of God were not left unmolested very long. The Jews that had sought Paul and Silas at the home of Jason in Thessolonica, still retained their anger and envy against the preachers, and actually followed them to Berea, being aroused by hearing of the peaceful reception of the preachers and the many that had professed faith. They came and made the same demonstration as was made in their own city.

All the forces of the Satanic kingdom were marshaled to destroy the work of the servants of Christ as they went about laying the foundation of the church. Paul spoke of being hindered by Satan, and to this day it is true that evil rises against good from every conceivable source. The weapon of our warfare is the sword of the Spirit; it is so quick and powerful that the enemy cannot stand before it. He who wields this sword must know his weapon, he must know its power, and he must trust it. Accept and believe every word of it, from "in the beginning God created the heaven and the earth," every word, every page, unto the last loving benediction given by the Sage of Patmos; he must also say with truth, "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against Thee."

CHARTER
OF THE
National Co-operative Development Company, Ltd.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
CITY OF NEW ORLEANS.

Be it known that on this 9th day of July, one thousand nine hundred and nine (1909); before me, J. Marshall Quintero, a notary public in and for the parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, duly commissioned and qualified, personally came and appeared the persons whose names are hereunto subscribed, who declared that, availing themselves of the laws of this State relative to the organization of corporations, they do, by these presents, organize and constitute a corporation for the object and purposes herein set forth.

ARTICLE I.

The name of this corporation shall be The National Co-Operative Development Co., Ltd.; its domicile shall be in the City of New Orleans, Louisiana; it shall have corporate existence for fifty (50) years from the date hereof.

ARTICLE II.

The object and purpose for which this corporation is organized are to buy, sell, rent and lease all kinds of lands and to acquired by purchase or otherwise minerals, oils and gas of all kinds that may be in and under such lands and to sell the same, either in their natural condition or in a manufactured condition.

ARTICLE III.

The capital stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at one million dollars ($1,000,000), to be represented by one hundred thousand (100,000) shares of the par value of ten dollars ($10) each. Each share of stock shall entitle its owner to one vote, either in person or by proxy, at all meetings of stockholders. This corporation shall commence business and be a going concern when five thousand dollars ($5,000) of said stock shall have been subscribed for.

ARTICLE IV.

There shall be a board of six directors of this corporation, in whom all its corporate powers shall be vested, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum. They shall select from among their number a President, Vice-President, Second Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, no two of which offices shall be held by the same person. Citation shall be served on the President; in his absence on the Vice-President, and in the absence of both of these on the Second Vice-President.

ARTICLE V.

The first board of directors of this corporation shall be Edwin J. Larkin, Charles A. Celestin, Leon E. Marion, Ambrose J. Guidry, Sidney Story and Philip H. Mentz; of whom Edwin J. Larkin shall be President, Charles A. Celestin shall be Vice-President, Leon E. Marion shall be Second Vice-President, Ambrose J. Guidry shall be Treasurer, and Sidney Story shall be Secretary; all of these directors and officers shall hold office until their respective successors shall have been elected.

ARTICLE VI.

On the first Monday of January, one thousand nine hundred and ten (1910), and annually thereafter, the stockholders shall meet and elect a board of directors; the secretary shall give ten (10) days prior notice of said meeting by mail to each stockholder, in which notice he shall state the place, date and time of said meeting. As soon as said directors are elected, they shall meet and select the officers of this corporation to serve until the next election thereof shall be had. The failure to hold the elections provided for in this article shall not dissolve this corporation; in that event the officers and directors then in office shall remain in office until their successors shall have been elected.

ARTICLE VII.

No stockholder of this corporation shall ever be held liable for the debts, defaults or obligations of this corporation in any greater sum than the unpaid balance of any subscription due by him on shares of the corporation owned by him.

ARTICLE VIII.

This done and passed at my notarial office in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, in the presence of H. A. Mentz and Edwin O. Cook, competent witnesses residing in this city, who hereto subscribe their names with said appearers and with me, said notary, after due reading.

General News

So far as Congress is concerned, an amendment to the Federal Constitution authorizing an income tax, is an assured fact. As we elsewhere state, its passage of the state legislatures is entirely another matter.

A great many people in the United States believe that there should be a sea level canal at Panama. They do not believe that the lock canal is either cheap, convenient or safe. These persons are now pointing at the accident to the Soo Canal connecting Lake Superior and Lake Borgne.

China wants to borrow money on bonds with which to build a railroad. It is a singular fact that this government, with others, has been bringing diplomatic pressure upon China to secure for its citizens the privilege of purchasing the bonds that China wants to sell. There may be favors to ask in the way of trade after awhile.

* * *

There are idle men all over the nation who are longing for the return of prosperity. At the same time there are farms being deserted, because sufficient labor cannot be secured to work them. Returns for farm labor do not seem to be large, but the expenses are proportionately small. There is no question that of 100 men who devote their lives to agriculture, and of a like number who follow almost any other avocation, that when these men reach the age of 50 years there will be a larger number of the farmers who will have a competence assured for the rest of their days than of any other calling.

THE CROSS IN BRAZIL.

By Rev. G. D. Parker.

On the summit of what is known as "Old Hill," a huge wooden cross has been erected by the Romanists many years ago; it overlooks the surrounding valleys and can be seen for many miles from the lower hills. A few nights ago while coming down a hill opposite, I noticed a small flickering light at the foot of the cross. I could not understand it and upon inquiry learned that some one had probably made a vow to climb the steep mountain every night for a certain number of nights to place a lighted candle at the foot of the cross, probably climbing upon the knees as is customary in approaching shrines on high places; and there the tiny light shines night after night, the distress signals of souls lost in spiritual darkness. Last night I looked for it, but "the light had failed." Either the pilgrim had not reached the shrine, or the strong wind had extinguished the light at the cross. Poor misguided people groping for the light! How symbolical of their true condition is this incident? They have crosses, crosses everywhere, from the Southern constellation that bends over this darkened land to the sign of the cross on the outer wall of the most miserable mud hut to ward off evil spirits. Crosses, but how little the people know of the Crucified; Crosses they have, but they have missed the Christ; the cross has become a fetich, the living Christ unknown.

Glances at the World.

In a local option election, Bristol, Va., divided by the State line from Bristol, Tenn., which for two years past had been in the "dry" column, transferred its allegiance to the liquor ranks. In a vote of nearly 800 the whisky men won by the small majority of 32. In advance of the election it is said that saloon men and brewers and distillers went to Bristol to help in the election. Of course, they could not vote—not legally—but they could talk and spend money. The latter, it was alleged, would be freely used, and we have no doubt the allegation was true. The winning by so narrow a margin indicates that the whisky leaders knew who to handle. Bristol is a choice spot. From that point, Tennessee, North Carolina, the northwestern portion of South Carolina and the dry portions of Virginia can be conveniently served with drink, which, unfortunately, under interstate law, cannot be prohibited. But the liquor regulations of Virginia are rather strict, and the saloon men are not going to have as happy a time as they anticipated. Some of them made ready to enter upon business immediately, and there were about 200 applicants for license. Many of these will not succeed, and those who do cannot open up before the first of August, if then, for the election, it is said, is to be contested. The result of the contest is in the future. We have no doubt there is abundant ground for contest.

Many persons seem to have come to the conclusion that the simple gospel and the stated means of grace have lost their power over men, and are seeking all sorts of methods of drawing the people to service. In some instances the house of God is abandoned, even in towns and cities, and resort is made to tents or opera houses. Under some circumstances this is not objectionable, but too often it is done under the supposition that the people will not attend the church. When only a crowd is the motive, or it is done in deference to sectarian prejudice, the beneficial results amount to but little. We have known them to be positively harmful. When tents or opera houses are not available the effort is to have something sensational or attractive in the church. A clown is put in the pulpit, or the house is decorated, all sorts of musical instruments are introduced and made to do duty at a "sacred concert." We read in the press dispatches that a Cincinnati preacher has engaged 35 canary birds to be arranged around the auditorium to remind the worshipers that "the groves were God's first temples." This is not new. We heard the idea suggested nearly twenty years ago. We imagine that when the big organ stopped blowing, the little songsters were too much scared to open their whistles.

We have said once in these columns that it was not altogether prudent to put young women to teaching Chinese men, but this does not mean that we are opposed to mission work among these sons of the East. It ought to be encouraged, and every proper effort made to bring them into the light of the gospel. There is no reason why the work should be stopped. True, the murder of one young girl by a brutal Chinaman has shocked the whole country. It was natural that it should, but that one murder does not justify an outcry against the whole business of trying to save the souls of others. What we see in the papers, and what comes to us in circulars—much of it is disgusting and creates in us a righteous indignation. Some of it would have only the methods of teaching changed, while much of it pleads for the utter abandonment of the work. One writer informs the public that the murder of Elsie Siegel is not the only tragedy that has occurred under the prevailing system—many occur—many personally known to that writer. Why did not that writer make the facts known long ago? We earnestly hope the Chinese murderer will be caught and meet the fate he so richly deserves, but we just as earnestly hope that the mission work will be continued and prosecuted with renewed vigor. NOTE—It has come to the public that Elsie Siegel was not, and never had been a teacher in a Chinese Sunday School. Will the daily papers take pains to correct the error which they have so industriously circulated?

The tariff bill in the Senate was finished and passed last week, and went immediately back to the House. It is now in the hands of a committee composed of members from each branch of Congress. This committee will try to reconcile the differences between the two bodies—which is no little matter. On the income tax amendment the vote in the House was not unanimous, but only fourteen votes were cast against it. This amendment, it seems, mightily pleases Mr. Bryan, who has made public the following statement: "The Democratic platform of 1908 contained an income tax plank. President Taft, in his acceptance speech, insisted that an amendment was not necessary. For years the Republican leaders have opposed an income tax and denounced the Democrats for advocating it. But behold the change: President Taft sends a message to Congress proposing the submission of an income tax amendment, and it passes the Senate by a unanimous vote. Democratic Governors in States having Democratic Legislatures, ought to call extra sessions at once and secure immediate ratification of the amendment. Income tax clubs ought to be formed immediately in every county, nonpartisan clubs to pledge members of the various Legislatures to vote for ratification. Now is the time to act."

From time immemorial the professional gamblers have pretended to be "men of honor." Those of them inclined to fight would resist an intimation to the contrary "on the spot." It is said "there is honor among gamblers," but all gamblers are not men of honor, as the following dispatch sent all over the country will show: "What is believed by the police to have been a well-developed scheme for defrauding victims by the use of marked cards was unearthed to-day when the body of a former gambler of Memphis was found lifeless in his room. In the room were found over a hundred decks of marked cards, together with a number of letters from gamblers in Memphis telling how victims had been cheated out of various sums, ranging to thousands. This man from Memphis is known among the sporting fraternity of Little Rock and New Orleans also. Letters detailing names of gamblers in the three towns were found, and the police of the different places have been asked to investigate the matter." We wonder if it is a new thing by "marked cards" or other tricks for gamblers to defraud victims. Or is it a revelation that this particular gambler, well known in the sporting world, was a fraud? And now that the fraud has been exposed, will the other gentlemen in the clique hide themselves, or "quit their meanness."

The case of a young girl not long from Ireland, in a court in Chicago, charged with theft of lace, has attracted attention, and evidently reveals some of the methods of those engaged in the "white slave traffic." The young woman was first brought into notice several months ago when she was found in a bath-room at a big hotel, bound hand and foot, and bleeding, having suffered violence at the hands of certain parties. She was next accused of stealing lace, and was brought to trial. On the witness-stand she told a fearful tale, and though she was perfectly ignorant of the "white slave" business, her testimony left no doubt in the minds of the people that heard her, that those who bound her, first tried to persuade her to put herself in the way of being sold to the traffickers, and then either to force her or punish her for failure. The young woman was first advised to go to a famous sporting resort where she would have "plenty of money and good clothes." In the course of the trial, the name of a man who owns or controls one or two hotels at the resort was mentioned. The girl testified that the woman who is prosecuting her named the man while she was being tied. This man, without any summons, hastened to Chicago to clear his good name. This he did. But the trial reveals the fact that the white slave traffic is not confined to persons supposed to belong to the slums—but exists in society higher up.

Texas is the biggest thing in the United States. If divided it would make five states as large as Louisiana, and have sufficient territory left to make another State about the size of South Carolina. The bigness of Texas has long been the pride and boast of its citizens. Never until right recently have we ever heard of a desire on the part of Texans to divide and form two or more commonwealths. But there is talk now—which talk has grown out of the division of opinion over the saloon question. The citizens of the northern part largely favor prohibition, while those on the coast and towards the West are lovers of liquor and liberty. If the scheme to cut up the State is pushed, it will be done by the whisky element of the State. There may be better or stronger reasons for the partition of Texas than can be adduced by the liquor crowd, if not, we feel sure that the sane and sober sense of the State will hold to "the Empire" as it is. But Texas, liquor or no liquor, is Democratic, and a division would put two additional Democrats in the United States Senate for every State carved out. This, the Congress as now constituted, would not allow. The liquor gang will be left to dream a good while in the future.

* * *

The chief instrument of death these days—of all instruments not intended for that purpose, is the automobile. They kill more people now than they did when first introduced—we mean in proportion to numbers. According to police statistics, automobiles in Chicago, in 1907, killed one person every three weeks. They are now doing execution at the rate of three persons every two weeks. This rate of increase is not due to defective and unmanagable machines, but to reckless running. The craze among manufacturers is to produce the fastest, strongest and most reliable machine. This has produced the craze among drivers to "scorch" whenever an opportunity presents itself, and regardless of human life in the country and in the crowded cities, they have persistently defied the laws regulating speed. Fining owners from $10 to $25 did no good. It was a small price to pay for beating a rival. Not long since a driver killed a youth outright. He was tried, and convicted for manslaughter and sentenced to a long term in the penitentiary. The judge who pronounced the sentence notified the public that the next man found alike guilty in his court "might pay the penalty with his life." We would be glad if every man who so desires, could own an automobile; at the same time owners ought to be made to bear in mind that other people besides themselves have rights in the public streets.

SEASHORE CAMP-GROUND.

Seashore Assembly for Christian Workers, July 24-Aug. 3. This is the successor to the former Seashore Epworth League Assembly. It has simply broadened the scope of its work. While not undertaking to do especially evangelical work, but rather to train the young people how to work, this assembly usually numbers many conversions as an immediate result of its work. Some of the gracious revivals that have blessed some of the churches have had their inception in the new conceptions of service given the young people in this assembly.

THE SPIRITUAL STATE OF THE CHURCH.

By Rev. Jno. W. Ramsey.

The spiritual state of the church is a theme of vital importance, for upon the spirituality of the church depends the advancement of the kingdom of our Lord toward that ultimate goal which she has been striving to reach through the ages, and of which the inspired writers have so often prophesied, viz: the final conquest of the world and universal dominion over the nations of the earth, when "the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea." Seeing, therefore, the vital importance of this theme, it should awaken the interest of everyone who can sing that old sing which our fathers sang:

"I love thy kingdom, Lord,
The house of thine abode,
The Church our blessed Redeemer bought
With his own precious blood."

Another reason that we should be interested in the spiritual condition of the church is because our Lord is concerned for the church. Speaking through St. John to the church in Smyrna, the Master said: "I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty. Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Since Christ is concerned for the church, we are not surprised to learn that St. Paul was solicitous concerning her welfare, for the first lesson which he learned was that Christ identified himself with the church that his persecutions were mascus he heard a voice saying: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" and he said, "Who art thou, Lord?" and the reply was, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." Thus he learned the lesson which he never forgot—the lesson that Christ so identified himself with the church that his persecutions were directed, not merely against a few despised Christians, but against Christ himself. The impressions of that hour never faded from his memory, but followed him through life; so while standing on the sands of the seashore, bidding farewell to the elders of the church in the city of Ephesus, he said: "Feed the Church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." And on another occasion he tells us that Christ loved the church and gave himself for the church.

What the spiritual condition of the church through other ages was is revealed to us by the rising and falling tide of her progress along the ever-widening channels of history. But we need not strain our ears to catch the voice of the past, for that which concerns us most is the present. Let us ask, therefore, What is the present spiritual condition of the church? This question in its last analysis resolves itself into that other question, What is the spiritual condition of the church membership? for, of course, the spirituality of the church depends upon the spirituality of her individual members.

The men who have said, in answer to this question, that the spirituality of the church is moving toward zero have been called pessimists. But is the physician who accurately diagnoses the condition of his patient and pronounces it serious a pessimist, and does it improve the condition of his patient to call him so? Rather, is not the patient in safer hands when the physician recognizes the seriousness of his disease? Who is the pessimist? Is it the Dutchman who stands on Holland's dyke with sandbag in hand, ready to stop the first crevice made by the rising sea, or is it the Dutchman who lies sleeping in his home, unconscious of the approaching danger? So, why should we call these men pessimists who think they recognize a decline in the spirituality of the church? Indeed, does not their pessimism, if it be such, find its source in their zeal and love for the church? Be that as it may, I am sure that no decline, real or imaginary, will be checked by calling names, or by shutting our eyes to the existing facts. Would it not be better for us and for the church if we would honestly face the facts, recognizing them as facts, and endeavor to find the remedy, than to deny the conditions till the church is overwhelmed with the spirit of worldliness? I think so.

But let us return to the question, What is the present spiritual condition of the church? In our attempt to answer this question, let us notice, first, the evidences of the growing spirituality of the church.

The first evidence, then, is increasing numbers. At each Quarterly Conference the question is asked: "Is there a written report from the preacher in charge on the general state of the church?" followed by the direction, "Let this report embrace the names of those baptized, or in any other way received into the church." The general state of the church must certainly include the spiritual state; the inference, therefore, is that the discipline regards the number of accessions as an evidence of the growing spirituality of the church. With possibly one exception, not a year has come and gone in the history of Methodism that she has not seen a marvelous increase in numbers till to-day she counts her multiplied millions being among the wealthiest and numerically the strongest Protestant denomination in the world.

A second evidence of the church's spirituality is to be found in her material prosperity. It is said that Methodism is building two churches every day in the year. Her educational institutions also are many, and her missionary operations are nothing short of marvelous, for she is enlarging her borders day by day. The liberality of her people is growing, for they are pouring their money into the treasury of the church as never before. All the interests of the church are advancing, and as we keep in touch with the movements of the present day, we feel the thrill of her progress, and we seem to hear the voice of God speaking to us as he did to Moses, saying, "Speak thou unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

Now, all these tokens are accepted upon every hand as indubitable evidences of a rising tide in the spirituality of the church, and if there were no other source from which they could come they would be undeniable, but since there may be other causes which may account for all this progress, the force of these evidences of the church's spirituality is considerably weakened. The time once was in the history of Christianity when to become a member of the church meant persecution and a life of self-sacrifice. Those days, and I sometimes think unfortunately, are gone forever. Now membership in the church is fashionable. The elite of society, the educated, the refined, the cultured, the "bon-tons"—they are all members in good standing in the church. To join the church, therefore, is the popular thing to do, and membership in the church carries with it but little significance. So, then, an increase in numbers is a questionable evidence of spirituality; so much so, indeed, that it might be accepted as evidence of a lack of spirituality.

As for the material prosperity of the church, much of it may be traced to church pride, or denominational emulation, rather than to real piety of heart. So, if a growth in numbers and material prosperity are all that the so-called optimist has to show for the spirituality of the church, he is standing on shifting sand.

"But," says one, "what of the League, the Sunday school, and the various organizations of the church—do they count for nothing?" I answer, all of them, irrespective of name, are like so much useless machinery if they have not the Spirit of God. "But do you believe that the spirituality of the church is declining?" Well, let us put our hand on the pulse of the church for a moment and see what the symptoms indicate.

First, then, where is the old "class-meeting," that once delighted the hearts of our fathers, and wherein our mothers rejoiced as they told their religious experiences and how God had dealt with their souls? Those were hours of sweet communion with God, and when there was a flow of soul in Christian love and fellowship, but the days of the "class-meeting" are gone forever.

Is it not true also that the family altar around which, as the twilight was falling, our fathers used to gather their families to offer thereon their evening incense of prayer and sacrifice of thanksgiving and praise—is not the family altar dying, if not already dead? Have we not already heard the last notes of its funeral dirge sounding from out the sordid, material commercialism of the present day? It will be a sad day for the Church and our holy religion when the last family altar falls in some Methodist home.

Furthermore, what has become of the emotional nature which used to be so characteristic of Methodism that we were called shouting Methodists? Children and young people of to-day sometimes hear their parents speak of this manifestation of early Methodism, but thousands of them never saw or heard such a religious demonstration. Shouting is so much a thing of the past that to mention it in polite society is to arouse the risibilities and provoke a smile. Is it not true that our emotional natures—the best part of us—has been crushed out of us by the cold, lifeless tread of modern intellectualism? Sometimes I think St. Paul must have foreseen the coldness and formality resulting from the withering touch of intellectualism when he said: "Quench not the spirit."

What, again, of the prayer-meeting? It has been said to be the thermometer of the Church. If so, must not every observant pastor admit that the spirituality of the Church is declining?

True, the Sunday school makes a good show for itself, but what of the superintendents and officers? Are they men of real piety? And the teachers, are they men and women who have an experimental knowledge of Christ, and recognize that their chief business is to lead the members of their respective classes to a positive acceptance of Christ? If this is lacking there is here no indication of spirituality.

The League also; do we not hear its creaking, and do not its wheels drag heavily because it lacks the lubricating qualities of the Divine Spirit?

NEXT SESSION OPENS SEPT. 15.

Fourteen Good Reasons for Patronizing Grenada College

First—The unexcelled Home Comforts, unequaled anywhere else in the State.

Second—The Health Conditions; we rarely require the service of a physician.

Third—Our unusually skilled corps of teachers, whom we were able to secure only by paying a salary much above that paid by other girls' schools of the State.

Fourth—The Fine Arts Department, unequaled in the State and unexcelled in the South. Our teacher of Art studied in Germany and France, and our teachers of Music are graduated from the best Conservatories of America.

Fifth—See Descriptive Course of Study, which is conscientiously carried out as indicated.

Sixth—The Lyceum Course, which is superior even to that sustained in the University of Mississippi.

Seventh—The Library, which is fuller and better adapted than that of most girls' schools of the South.

Eighth—Strong Christian Influence dominating all instruction.

Ninth—Personal Attention to the Individual Pupil, with a view to develop the best even out of peculiarities of character.

Tenth—A superior Student Body as Associates, since most of the indifferent have been eliminated.

Eleventh—The Rates are lower than those of any other school doing the same grade of work, owing to the Conference Assessment, which gives us an income not possessed by other schools; further, we have no stockholders to whom we are forced to pay dividends, as are some private schools. Our patrons receive back in excellence of service more than they pay in.

Twelfth—We place but two girls in a room, while most schools put from two to six.

Thirteenth—We require our teachers to continue study. Two are in Europe, two in Chicago, others at other schools in North and East.

Fourteenth—All these superior features enable us to turn out a larger percentage of graduates, who take high stand in the educational world, than any other school in the State. It means something to hold a diploma of the Grenada College.

Is not church loyalty a sign of spirituality? If so, do we not fall short here also, and compare unfavorably with other denominations?

The relation of our church membership to worldly amusements and godless sport is still another indication of a decline in spirituality. A change is taking place in the minds of men in authority in reference to these matters. Some in high places, such as the editor of our General Church Organ, are advocating the removal from our Church rules all [illegible] of all forms of worldly amusement so that the entire question may be left to the decision of the individual conscience. This is what I call letting down the bars that any sort of a goat may come into the fold and keep company with the sheep. College authorities are standing for intercollegiate foot-ball and base-ball despite the protest of many who have a right to be heard.

A recent District Conference, composed, of course, of Methodist preachers (!) and laymen, passed resolutions to the effect that our conferences ought to play hands off and leave this matter to the judgment of college authorities. Now, while I would not condemn an occasional game of base-ball played by the community boys solely as recreation, the match game is godless, for as soon as the game begins there is more or less gambling, and I believe that such games are greater evils than horse-racing, because they affect more localities. The man who puts himself out on the diamond in the match game puts himself there as a race horse to be bet on. Prominent Methodist laymen have been known to umpire these games, and at least one ex-Methodist steward has been known to declare to the assembled multitude that all bets were off, since, a heavy rain having fallen, an expert game could not be played. Some Methodist preachers, including presiding elders, have been known to attend these games and lend them respectability by their presence. Many of our young people in some localities are dancing and going to "moonlight picnics." Some of our older men vote the prohibition ticket, but continue their drinking. Our men are ceasing to pray in public, and our women are abbreviating their testimonies for Christ, and a thousand various inconsistencies in the lives of our people show the tendency of modern church life. I am aware of the fact that it is not popular to say these things, but I am candidly trying to face the facts, and to honestly answer the question, Is the spirituality of the church declining? I must say, in the fear of God, what I believe to be the truth. "These things ought not so to be," but saying this does not alter the facts. I am speaking from an observation extending over eighteen years in the pastorate, and I am sure that in the charges which I have served worldliness has not been especially dominant more than in other charges.

Perhaps it may be asked, "Do you believe that the church is going to the bow-wows?" No; emphatically no! What conclusions, then, are we to draw? Is the spirituality of the church declining? Is the church getting better or worse? I reply, the question cannot be answered with a simple yes or no. It is similar to that other question, "Is the world getting better or worse?" Mr. Talmage said, "Better." Mr. Moody said "Worse." The truth is to be found in a golden mean—the bad part of the world is getting worse and the good part is getting better. It is likewise with the church. The worldly membership of the church is getting intensely godless, while the [illegible] are growing more spiritual. There was an inner circle even among the apostles, consisting of Peter, James and John, who witnessed the transfiguration of their Lord and his sufferings in the garden of Gethsemane, and were closer to him than were the others. So there is an inner circle within the membership of the church, composed of those who are more intelligently Christian than any other equal number which the world has ever seen. My faith in God and in the final and universal dominion of the kingdom of our Lord leads me to believe that this inner circle is slowly but surely growing in numbers, and constantly increasing in influence with the passing years.

What, then, is the remedy for that large majority who are worldly-minded and persistently godless—the most of whom doubtless never felt the touch of the Divine Spirit? Without entering into details, let there be a unanimity of action upon the part of all the pastors, supported by that inner circle, in the expulsion of the ungodly from the church. The very life of the church is imperiled, and the time has come when she must demand that her membership be at least decent and respectable.

METHODISM AND THE LAYMAN.

By Rev. T. B. Holloman.

Rev. W. H. Fitchett in his "Wesley and his Century" says that "Wesley was destined to found a Church which employs more lay preachers, and employs them with greater effect and honor, than any Church known to history." This statement agrees, strictly, with all other historians who have written of this great organizer and his wonderful movement. Nothing impresses the student of Methodism so much as the part performed by the laymen in her early development. While Mr. Wesley was a High Churchman of the strictest sect, in the beginning of the movement, his good judgment and uncommon wisdom soon convinced him that the help of such men as Thomas Maxfield was indispensable to the success of his work. The field preacher and the class leader became recognized as a first essential in organizing and holding together the movement. In the midst of our present-day lament at the shortness of ministerial supply, we are put to the blush when comparing with that time when, speaking technically, there was almost none—only a few like the Wesleys and Whitefield upon whom the hands of ordination had been laid; yet the life within the movement was indeed like the "yeast in the three measures of meal" destined to accomplish a wonderful reformation. But some one has said that such movements as the German reformation and the Wesleyan revival are like the pendulum of a clock which swings to the extreme of the arc and then gradually seeks its equilibrium. so it seems to have been with Methodism. From a Church largely dominated and built up by the combined efforts of the laity, there has been a decided tendency to seek the other extreme of the circle, and depend almost entirely on the ministry. There yet remain a few among us who remember the work of the class leader, its essential value to the pastor and its help to the membership—in its day of large circuits and scarcity of pastors, a maximum power for good. Then, too, the prayer meetings regularly conducted and maintained by the laymen, often resulting in gracious revivals even in the absence of the pastor.

Not many years ago, I heard one of these, twenty-eight-day circuit preachers say that the greatest revival that had ever come into his knowledge was the result of a weekly, neighborhood prayer meeting. How changed are the conditions to-day? Few indeed are the prayer meetings, where there is not a minister to lead, and in most of our churches the percentage of those who will respond to the pastor's call for prayer in the congregation is lamentably small.

This disposition to relegate so largely all of the work into the hands of the pastor has, not only put upon him burdens grievous to be borne, but has eliminated from the layman's life an essential element of growth in grace and knowledge of Jesus Christ. In this day of intensive work; of sharp denominational rivalry, and when the benevolences of the Church have increased to one-third of all monies collected, the pastor's life has become too strenuous for any man to do his best work for the Church, or to his own satisfaction.

If the Laymen's Movement means anything of great value to the Church, I insist that it must first give its thought to relieving the pastors of this constant serving of tables. A prominent man in the Laymen's Movement remarked to this pastor recently that they were waiting for the pastors to get their collections out of the way before beginning the canvass for their extra assessment. Under our present plan of requiring the pastors to raise all of these collections, and the further custom of the people to defer their payment until the close of the year our brother will look in vain for a convenient time to get before the membership of the Church. If, under our present plan the stewards are not willing to take all financial matters into their hands, it will be wise legislation if our next General Conference will provide for special collectors for these numerous claims upon the Church.

We are proud of the reputation of our

In the Nashville Advocate of June 15th, appears an article from the pen of Dr. Frank Richardson, touching largely upon this feature of our Church work, which would do well to be published in all our Conference organs, that our people might learn the conclusions of our oldest and wisest counselors.

This writer remembers upon receiving a certain appointment to have gotten a letter from one high in authority saying that the appointment was a compliment to my "Nehemiahan spirit," when the truth of the history is that Nehemiah was not either a prophet or a priest, but a wise master-builder among the laymen of his day. This, however, was but an expression of the spirit of this day when, if a church is to be built, a parsonage to be repaired or a special financial movement to be enterprised the call comes for a preacher who is a builder, often, even to the exclusion of every other requisite. The Sunday School may suffer, pastoral oversight be neglected and even better preparation for the pulpit be discontinued, if the finances are only skilfully managed. "Brethren, such thing ought not so to be."

THE SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

By Rev. Robt. R. Ellison.

The session of the Preachers' Institute at the Seashore Camp Ground, June 22-July 1, was a most profitable gathering of the ministers from the three States of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. The lectures were great. All went away with a much better knowledge of the problems that confront a pastor in his work, and the ways of meeting these problems. Much inspiration was received from the speakers and from the association with the brethren. The environment was most conducive to the enjoyment of the occasion. Bathing, boat-riding and breezes were incidental features, that added much to the pleasure of the preachers and laymen. But above all, the Institute was a great intellectual and spiritual feast. This is hardly necessary to be said, when we know the personnel of the speakers—Drs. Shailer Mathews, F. N. Parker, Wm. Weber, J. M. Moore, Gross Alexander, and J. T. Paves of Atlanta. All of these lectures were highly appreciated by the ministers and the public at large. Many were heard to express a desire to attend the Institute every year.

It might be of interest to many to state that Dr. Shailer Mathews has already consented to be on the programme next year. His lectures were so good and so highly appreciated by all who heard them that the Board of Directors took immediate steps to secure him for next summer.

This is just the beginning of a great summer school for preachers at the Seashore Camp Ground. The Board of Directors is already planning great things for next year. This session was a remarkably good beginning, everything considered, and the directors feel greatly encouraged over the success and the prospects of even greater success next year. The Board agreed to request the presiding elders of the four participating Conferences not to hold any Quarterly or District Conferences during the session of the school, so the preachers may be free to attend.

At the meeting of the Joint Commission the following were present: Mississippi Conference—Robt. Selby, H. M. Ellis and C. W. Crisler. Louisiana Conference—J. A. Rice and W. W. Holmes. Alabama Conference—H. H. McNeill and R. R. Ellison.

The officers were re-elected, as follows: Robt. Selby, chairman; R. R. Ellison, secretary; W. W. Holmes, treasurer

The programme for the next session was discussed. It was agreed that we put in the Conference courses in connection with the other lectures: One hour per day will be devoted to the classes on the four years' courses ordered by our Discipline for the young preachers. At the same hour there will be a post-graduate class for those who have finished these courses. The plan for the undergraduate work is this: One member of every examining committee of every Conference participating will be invited (expenses paid) to assist in lecturing to and conducting the classes. These four men to every class (one from each Conference) will have charge of their year's work. The undergraduate men will be expected to read the books before coming. If any committee of any of the Conferences should desire to examine their class at this time, instead of at the Annual Conference session, they will be at liberty to do so.

One hour per day will be devoted to lectures on psychology and psychological reasoning, one-half hour to hymnology and two hours to public lectures.

A constitution was adopted, and it was agreed that we call the institution "The Seashore Divinity School," and the Joint Commission "The Board of Directors." The entire teaching force will be known as "the Faculty," with a dean at its head. Dr. W. B. Murrah, president of Millsaps College, Jackson Miss., was elected dean of the school for one year. The faculty will be elected annually by the Board of Directors. Other members of the faculty for 1910 will be added from time to time, until the lecture force, or teaching force, is made up.

The following standing committees were elected:

On Programme—Robt. Selby, J. A. Rice, C. W. Crisler, R. R. Ellison.

On Finance—J. A. Rice for the Louisiana Conference; H. H. McNeill for the Alabama Conference; Robt. Selby and C. W. Crisler for the Mississippi Conference; W. B. Murrah for the North Mississippi Conference.

On Advertisement—H. M. Ellis, R. R. Ellison, R. H. Wynn and W. B. Murrah.

On Entertainment—H. H. McNeill, E. W. Lipscomb, W. W. Holmes.

On Recreation—W. W. Holmes and H. M. Ellis.

The date of the next session will be June 28-July 7, 1910, closing just before the Camp Meeting begins.

Following is the Constitution of the Seashore Divinity School:

Article 1. This school shall be known as "The Seashore Divinity School."

Art. 2. The purpose of this school is to increase the efficiency of our ministry.

Art. 3. There shall be annual sessions of the school, to be held at the Seashore Camp Ground. The time and length of the sessions to be determined by the Board of Directors.

Art. 4. The school shall be under the control of the Board of Directors. This Board of Directors shall consist of twelve ministers—three each from the Alabama, the Louisiana, the Mississippi and the North Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as follows: Robt. Selby, H. M. Ellis and C. W. Crisler, of the Mississippi Conference; J. A. Rice, R. H. Wynn and W. W. Holmes, of the Louisiana Conference; Robert R. Ellison, J. M. Dannelly and H. H. McNeill, of the Alabama Conference; W. B. Murrah, L. M. Broyles and J. C. Park, of the North Mississippi Conference. All vacancies occurring from resignation, death or otherwise, shall be filled by nominations by the Board of Directors, subject to ratification by the Conference in which the vacancy shall occur.

Art. 5. The officers of the Board shall be a President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, to be elected annually. Their duties shall be those ordinarily performed by such officers.

Art. 6. The Board of Directors shall elect a Dean at each annual meeting to serve for one year as general superintendent of a teaching faculty secured by the Board.

Art. 7. The Board shall have power to transact all such business as may be necessary for the furtherance of the purpose of the school.

ABERDEEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The fortieth session of the Aberdeen District Conference met at Nettleton, June 21, with Rev. Jas. H. Felts, presiding elder, in the chair. Rev. W. S. Shipman was the host, and right royally did he entertain. The good people of Nettleton not only provided generous hospitality, but they also attended the session of the Conference with marked interest. The Conference will be glad to go back there at any time. Shipman makes an ideal host, and if he ever asks for the Annual Conference this writer will be sure to vote for his place.

The Conference was well attended, and the reports from nearly every charge showed that the church was prospering throughout our bounds. We are more than holding our own, which is the lion's share. Good revivals were reported from some of the churches. The number of accessions was large, though I do not remember just what it was. Many new houses of worship are in process of construction. Brother W. C. Carlisle deserves special mention in this connection. He is building three new and splendid houses, one of which was to be open for service the Sunday following the Conference. In the midst of this great work, he has had enough time and faith to ask his people for and to get his mission collections in full. He has done this in a territory that is as poor as any other in our Conference.

Throughout the district there is a spirit of aggressiveness on the part of the pastors and laymen, which promises better things for the church.

Every part of the work of the church was thoroughly looked into with care. The laymen had a day and a night. Mr. G. L. Jones made a happy address which, beyond question, will bear fruit for the great missionary movement which he is leading in North Mississippi. Two of the charges in the district are well organized in the Laymen's Movement, viz.: Houston and Tupelo.

The work of the women's societies was given time, and the reports from the district showed that the women were organized in nearly every charge and doing splendid work.

One young man was recommended to the Annual Conference for admission on trial, James Mills. None were granted license to preach, nor recommended for orders. Pontotoc was chosen as the place for the next Conference. J. A. Lowe, S. J. High, P. W. Shell and F. J. McDonnell were chosen as delegates to the next Annual Conference.

During the Conference a memorial service was held in memory of Bishop Galloway and Brother Kendall.

Mr. Clifton, of our school at Grenada, delivered an address on the education of our girls, with special reference to the work of the Grenada College. Millsaps was also represented in a brief address.

Brother Felts is making the church a good administrative elder. The choice of Bishop Morrison in his case is fully justified by the untiring energy and earnestness of Felts. He hopes to carry up to Conference a clean slate this fall. Cordially,

THE SECRETARY.

SARDIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Sardis District Conference was held at Cold Water, Miss., June [illegible]-27. All the preachers were on hand save three, who were unavoidably kept away by sickness in their families. The first day was given to the woman's missionary societies, which showed great progress throughout the district. The second day was given to Sunday schools and missions, which also showed [illegible]. The third and fourth days were given to the discussion of topics and the hearing of reports of pastors.

Rev. W. M. Young, our presiding elder, had a carefully arranged programme that was carried out to the letter, giving all the preachers and laymen ample time to speak out of the fullness of their hearts. Seldom have I seen people so full of discussion, but it was all done in the spirit of Christ. Not a word was spoken to mar the peace and happiness of any one. The preaching was done by Revs. J. W. Raper, R. M. Evans, W. D. Wendell, S. A. Brown and C. P. Moss, all of which was of a high order and great spiritual power.

The visiting brethren were Revs. J. M. Wyatt, of Oxford; W. M. Williams, of Jackson; R. P. Neblett, of Shelby; also Hon. G. L. Jones, of New Albany, and Mr. T. B. King, of Memphis, Tenn. Hon. G. L. Jones delivered a masterly address on Friday at 11 o'clock on the Laymen's Movement. The climax was reached Friday night, when Mr. T. B. King, of Memphis, with the eloquence of Cicero or Demosthenes, spoke for one hour and thirty minutes on the great probabilities and responsibilities of the Laymen's Movement, of its work in evangelizing and Christianizing the world. Rev. W. M. Williams spoke in behalf of the Orphans' Home and the 165 children committed to his care. God speed the day when our church will do its full duty toward this home for fatherless and motherless children. Mr. Herbert Holmes was elected district leader for the Laymen's Movement. The delegates elected to represent the district at Annual Conference are: P. T. Calicott, Herbert Holmes, R. P. Houston and Dr. C. L. Mapers. Alternates: Dr. A. S. Yarbrough and J. J. Stephenson. The following local preachers had their licenses renewed: A. F. Moore, J. W. Askins, J. H. Arnold, W. J. Echols and A. S. Raper. Recommended to Annual Conference for admission on trial: A. S. Raper, a very promising young man and son of Rev. J. W. Raper, of Byhalia.

The licensing committee for the coming year are as follows: J. T. Murrah, S. L. Pope, S. A. Brown, C. P. Moss, R. M. Evans. The next district conference is to be held in Senatobia.

The following resolutions were unanimously passed by the Conference:

"Whereas we anticipated with great pleasure the presidency of Bishop Chas. B. Galloway at our next Annual Conference; but whereas, in the providence of God, he has been removed from labor to refreshment; be it

"Resolved, That we record our high appreciation of him as a faithful Bishop and a great preacher of the gospel of Jesus Christ."

The people of Cold Water threw their hearts and homes wide open for the entertainment and pleasure of all who attended the Conference, and really made us wish our stay could be lengthened. Brother V. C. Curtis was Conference host, and spared no pains in looking after the comfort and happiness of his guests. The only objection I heard of was, there was not enough visitors to meet the demands of the hospitable people of Cold Water. Brother P. T. Calicott acted as secretary for the Conference. Brother Calicott runs a large merchandise business in Cold Water, for which he keeps his own books, but he always finds time to attend to any business of his church.

I cannot close without speaking a word in behalf of Rev. W. M. Young, our presiding elder. He is faithful in all things, and is living in the hearts of the people of his district. There is no undertaking that is too great for him. We all fear he is working too hard, but you can't check him. He has his brakes thrown off and runs with the throttle wide open, and will some day cease to labor and begin to live.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The annual conference of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of North Mississippi convened at Greenwood on June 11-16, 1909. Mrs. S. M. Thames, of Pickens, Miss., president of the body, dispatched with ease and skill much important business during these few days. All the officers were present except the recording secretary, Mrs. Alexander, Lexington. Mrs. T. M. Clark, of Verona, was appointed to serve as recording secretary pro tem.

The guest of honor on this occasion was Mrs. Mary L. Hargrove, of the Bible and Scarritt Training School, Kansas City. Mrs. Hargrove has just returned from China. Her series of evening lectures on China, Japan, Corea, and a trip around the walls of Jerusalem on a donkey, were graphic in description, all-compelling in interest and very instructive. The influence of her three noon-tide talks on "The inspiration of Vision," "The Dynamics of Prayer," and "The Venture of Faith," was intensely spiritual.

Among other visitors present were Mrs. Mary Inge Hoskins, of Huntsville, Ala., Miss Tommie Foster, of Tchula, Miss., who sails for Soochow, China, as a missionary in September, Mrs. Carlotta Gibbs; of Grenada College, and Miss Mollie Clark, of Pickens, Miss.

The ministers of the conference, who encouraged the body by their presence, were Rev. H. S. Spraggins, the genial host; Dr. W. B. Murrah, of Millsaps College; Rev. S. M. Thames, Pickens, Miss.; Rev. E. S. Lewis, presiding elder of Winona District; Rev. O. L. Savage, of Iuka, and Rev. J. M. Wyatt, of Oxford Training School.

Besides the business to be transacted, the president had planned other interesting features. The annual sermon was preached by Dr. W. B. Murrah, of Millsaps College, from Matt. 13:33. This strong discourse awakened in the minds and hearts of the hearers new incentives to a higher plane of spiritual life. Mrs. Walter Trotter, in a charming manner, conveyed to the body greetings from the Conference Home Mission Society. Among the carefully prepared papers which were read and enjoyed by the hearers, were "Relation of Young Womanhood to the Missionary Cause," by Mrs. Carlotta Gibbs; "The Child in the Midst," by Mrs. W. N. Duncan, Durant, Miss.; "Our Literature," by Miss Susie Trigg, Greenville, Miss.; "Young People's Work," by Mrs. Hardin, Macon, Miss. The President's address showed much thought in preparation, and was delivered in the modest, womanly manner characteristic of the beloved President. The annual report of the Conference Corresponding Secretary evinced a thorough knowledge of the work on the part of Mrs. C. F. Evans.

A unique feature of the programme was readings and papers by the Jubenile delegates, interspersed throughout. Twenty boys and girls were present from as many auxiliaries.

The able financial report made by the efficient Treasurer, Mrs. B. L. Jones, of Beland, Miss., showed a total collection of over $6,000 for all purposes during the year. The encouraging feature of this report is an increase of over $1,000 over last year's collections.

Mrs. C. F. Evans, the beloved Conference Corresponding Secretary, who has so faithfully served in this capacity for several years past, offered her resignation, which was reluctantly accepted with sincere regrets of the body. With this exception, the same officers were re-elected for the coming year. Mrs. T. M. Clark, of Verona, was elected Corresponding Secretary.

On Wednesday evening, June 16, the Conference adjourned to meet in Tupelo, Miss., next year. The people of Greenwood opened their homes and their hearts to the strangers in their midst. Each delegate and visitor left with hearts full of love and gratitude for the royal hospitality they had received at the hands of the inhabitants of the "Queen City of the Delta." MRS. W. N. DUNCAN.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I am asking that each district secretary and auxiliary corresponding secretary send me some item of interest for the column. This week we are publishing the report of the conference treasurer for the first quarter, and we note with regret that the pledge has fallen $200 short of the first quarter last year. Last year our pledge was $2,000; this year it is $3,000. Let each auxiliary make an extra effort to make up the deficit next quarter. MINNIE BUNTYN.

1310 23d Avenue, Meridian, Miss.

Following is the report for the first quarter, W. F. M. S., Mississippi Conference:

1909-10—

Dues	$377.75
Pledge	213.18
Conference Fund	81.78
Day School	12.36
Bible Women	2.50
Scholarship	1.50
For Miss Vaida Martin's expenses	43.31
Total	$732.41

ZELLE WATTS KENDALL,
Conference Treasurer.

FROM THE COLPORTER.

During the past three months I have been on the run trying to keep up with the District Conferences and other church meetings. But after all diligence, some have been missed because of two or more being held on same date.

This I exceedingly regret, and have been assured that my absence was regretted by the brethren and friends with whom I could not meet. Still, we are joined in mind and spirit, and in love and prayer for each others' welfare and success.

Notwithstanding the financial depression, rains, floods, etc., our colportage business keeps well up, equally as good as in any year in the past to date.

Only one thing is lacking right now, viz.: The settling all accounts in full to date. Will those concerned see to this and make their humble servant's heart rejoice? It is sincerely hoped that they will so do and that right soon.

The churches at Itta Bena and Fayette have recently been supplied with the Methodist Hymnal. Who next?

"Revival Praises" is going rapidly. For merit and economy it is next to the standard hymn book the very best to use in our revival meetings. Do not forget this nor neglect to send us your orders.

Young People's Hymnals Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are yet in demand, and worthily so. A good supply of them also in stock awaiting orders.

The newest books from our press are "Reminiscenses and Sketches," by Charles Forster Smith, $1.25; "The Men of Sapio Ranch," by Rev. H. M. DuBose, $1.00; "The Trials and Tribulations of a Young Preacher," by Rev. E. G. Kilgore, $1.00. Either of them excellent summer reading and sent post paid at price given.

Rev. J. A. Hall, pastor of Winona Church, has organized an adult class for the study of Methodist doctrine and history. They are now studying the Methodist Armor. What a valuable book it is, and costs only 50 cents, postpaid. Every Methodist should read it. Brother Hall has also a "Bible Teachers' Study Circle" of his Sunday School teachers, using the latest revised "Circle Courses." This is commendable. Every church should have such schools with the pastor as principal. With such teaching and learning there is hope of making disciples indeed.

The weather is hot and we are entering the heated period, but the Colporter is in health and ready by the grace of God for any service in his calling and sphere. G. W. BACHMAN.

IN CLOVER.

"Oh!" said Jamie, one day, "I wish I was a little bird or a bee."

How mamma laughed! "Why do you wish that?" she said. "Do you want to fly to the top of a tree?"

"No, but I was just thinking how good it would feel to live in clover all the time."

It was June, and Jamie was in the country. He was enjoying it and felt as if he just could not get enough of it. All around him were acres and acres of clover, and the air was sweet with the perfume of many blossoms.

Hundreds of bees and butterflies were flying here and there, sipping the sweet white and red blossoms. And Jamie, too, enjoyed drawing the sweet from the little tubes. But he was always very careful not to interfere with the flower the bees had selected.

Every morning Jamie went to the field and brought a nice basketful of the clover, with the dew on it, for Bunny Wee, going again late in the afternoon to get it fresh for his supper.

Bunnies are all very fond of clover, and ponies, too. Prince was—Jamie said when he went to the stable and asked him if he wanted some clover Prince just "sniggered and laughed," he was so happy.

And Jamie felt very happy, too, as Prince cantered off with him on his back to the clover field.

Did you ever find a nicer place, children, than a big clover field?

What good times!

Can you find any sweeter place to play hide and seek?

By the way, did you ever look at clover leaves after dark? The two side leaves, which are its "hands," are folded together, while the third leaf leans over and clasps them.

Some one said, "The clover was asleep, and had folded its hands to say its prayers."

Clovers usually have three leaves. But when you find four leaves in a cluster, it is said to bring good luck.

When you hear people say "they are living in clover," that means they are having a splendid time.

And Jamie certainly "lived in clover" all that summer, for he had the most splendid vacation he had ever had.—The Child's Gem.

A WISE YOUNG WOMAN.

Alice Eames walked into the library, an open letter in her hand.

"Tom has written to ask me to go to the Junior Prom at Hillsver, mother," she said, and there was a queer little catch in her voice.

Mrs. Eames looked up from her book. "How delightful, my dear!" she cried, enthusiastically. "You've looked forward so much to going, I know; and now you shall have the prettiest gown we can plan together."

"But I'm not going," answered the girl, and the little catch turned into a genuine sob.

"Not going!" exclaimed Mrs. Eames, in astonishment. "Why, what is the matter? Tell me! I thought you and Tom were such good friends."

"We were, mother!" cried Alice. "And it was something more, for at Christmas Tom told me he cared for me, and I promised—" her voice broke again. "But he's in with the swiftest set in college, Ted Lanham and Joe Grover and all those rich boys that were in prep school with them. I told him that he would have to break with them if he wanted me."

"What has he done now?" demanded her mother. "I had heard nothing."

"No, I didn't tell you," answered the girl. "I was so hurt that I couldn't. It was just the silliest sort of scrape; what dad would call sophomoric. A lot of his fraternity drove to Lebanon, and drank more than they should, and then had a general smash-up at one of the dance halls there. I heard something about it; I asked Tom, and he told me—straight. He never lies, you know. I was angry and disappointed, of course, and said so." Alice lifted her head proudly. "And that's all there is about it."

"Don't you think that you're a little hard on Tom, girlie," asked Mrs. Eames, wistfully. "Aren't you going to give him another chance?"

"Yes, mother," replied Alice, firmly, "but not the chance of the girl who sells her forgiveness just for the sake of a good time. He'd despise me if I was like that, and I'd despise myself, too. I'm going upstairs to write him that I can't go."

And she walked out of the room, her head still nobly erect.

The letter, so hard to write, reached Tom as he sat in his uncle's study wrestling with the professor over an intricate bit of calculus, and his face dropped dolefully as he read it.

"When do you expect Miss Eames?" Professor Lee inquired, pleasantly.

For answer, Tom held out the letter in silence; then, when his uncle had finished reading it, he said:

"It's all that fool Lebanon parade! No glad rags for mine this prom! Alice is great, I know, but she's the sort of girl that's dreadfully hard on a fellow."

"But that's just the kind of a woman a man wants," answered his uncle. "It's the woman who sets standards almost out of our reach who makes us grow." The Professor's eyes softened as he looked across his study to the picture of a woman who had at once made life hard and very, very beautiful for him. "'If Helen of Troy set the world at war, she made men heroes,'" he quoted, slowly. Then he added, with a quizzical glance at his nephew, "Tom, it's up to you!"

"You're dead right, Uncle Ned!" cried Tom, a new light of determination coming into his face. "It is up to me, and—I'm going to make good!"—Youth's Companion.

FOLKS, PLACES AND THINGS.

A Chicago attorney who says modestly that he tries to improve every fair opportunity for conversation on religion with men of his acquaintance testifies that men are constantly growing more and more willing to talk about religious matters. "One rainy day some years ago," he recalled, "going down one of the principal streets of Chicago, I suddenly ran into a member of the City Council. 'Say,' he said bluntly, 'are you a candidate for anything this campaign?' I didn't really intend to say it, but quick as a flash the words popped out of my mouth: 'Me? I'm a candidate for heaven.' The man gripped my arm nervously and pulled me into a doorway out of the rain. 'Look here,' he said tersely, 'what made you say that to me?' 'I don't know, I'm sure,' I answered. 'It dashed into my mind all of a sudden. I wasn't planning it. I mean it, though.' 'Well, you've knocked me all in a heap,' he said huskily. 'I'm a candidate for heaven, too, but I've come pretty near forgetting it. I'm a church member, and I thought I was a pretty good Christian when I went into politics. I haven't done anything very shameful yet, but I have been losing sight of my religion and getting awful careless. This Council business hasn't been good for me. I've been kept out late nights, and I always go with the boys for supper at some restaurant after Council meetings are over. They're a hilarious crowd, and we go bumming around the town more than is good for anybody. I've neglected my family and neglected my church, and this thing you've said brings it all back over me. I'm going to do better. I don't have to let this political business lead me off. I'm glad that thing was put into your head to say to me. I needed it.'

"One day," continued the attorney, "I had been working with another lawyer over a case; and when we finally wrapped up the papers and he was ready to leave the words slipped out of my mouth sort of unawares: 'Well, it's all so; the wages of sin is death.' He whirled around and stared at me fiercely. 'What do you mean by that? Are you going to preach to me?' 'Not a bit of it,' I answered. 'What are you getting excited about? That's in the Bible. Don't you think it's true?' He paused and studied several seconds. 'Yes, it's true,' he answered slowly. 'I know it's true. And I haven't been living like I ought to; I know that. There are a lot of things I have been doing that I wouldn't dare to have my wife know. I'm going to try to cut them out. I don't want the wages.'"—The Interior.

"Power for Service."

This is a book of 261 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It is from the press of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

IS EDUCATION IMPERILED BY NORTHERN MONEY?

Under the above caption, the Western Methodist, of July 1, presents in a strenuous way the editor's views in regard to the work of the General Board of Education. The article seems principally designed to combat the idea that the Board grants donations only on humiliating conditions. We think the editor fails. He does not mention at all the conditions that are really humiliating. For example, the Board proposed to give a certain amount to a Southern school and imposed five conditions, two of them as follows:

> "The accredited representative of the Board shall at all reasonable times have the right to inspect the books, accounts and securities of said college.
>
> "The sum contributed by the Board is to be forever held as a separate fund, and be separately invested that its identity may be preserved, and that the Board may forever have and retain a specific lien on said fund and on the securities in which it shall from time to time be invested, as security for the faithful observance by the college of the terms of the agreement."

These terms, we think, are humiliating to a great degree. Knowing Dr. Anderson as well as we do—his courage and independent spirit, we do not believe he would accept a donation for the endowment of the Western Methodist on such conditions. Why should he accept "Northern money" or any other kind of money, in behalf of our colleges, on such terms.

We would as soon think of surrendering the entire ownership and control of our schools to self-perpetuating boards of trustees gathered from the world and from unfriendly denominations, as to accept money from any board which proposes to hold a lien on the gift, and to require a lien on the securities in which it is invested, and also demand the right to inspect the books, accounts and securities of the school. This is altogether different from the right to direct gifts for specific purposes.

Could we be persuaded that the conditions above-named are not humiliating, designedly so or not, we could look more favorably than we do on the proposition that those who organized the General Board of Education were wholly ingenuous. Taking into consideration the conditions, and the fact that beneficiaries are forbidden to use any part of the fund donated for a specific kind of teaching, we are bound to think there is a disguised purpose governing the millionaire organizers of the Board.

HEADING TOWARDS ROME.

Not a few of our people believe that the Roman Catholic Church is making progress in its effort to capture the United States. A writer in one of our papers declares that if the present rate of increase is maintained, fifty years will suffice to bring the country under the rule of the Pope. Two things have so impressed that writer. First, the constantly-increasing number of Roman Catholics that come to the United States every year from Europe. Second, the preponderating influence of Roman Catholics in the federal administration.

There is little to fear we think from immigration—not near so much as from the influence of the Roman Catholic clergy at Washington, which, though confined to few individuals, is nevertheless more powerful than is possible to be exercised by the masses. We could name two Roman Catholic dignitaries who have almost unbounded influence at the seat of the government. This is true perhaps because the Roman Catholic Church, being desirous of recognition as a temporal as well as a spiritual power, concerns itself with politics, and can, beyond all other religious orders, except the Mormons, control the votes of its members. A real anxiety exists to establish a Roman Catholic embassy at Washington. More than once has such an anxiety been expressed, and we are likely to wake up some morning and find a representative of the Pope's temporal power installed and recognized, notwithstanding he does not rule over a foot of earth outside the grounds of the Vatican. The political ambition of Rome is dangerous to our country.

That Roman Catholic immigrants are constantly swelling the population is true; but the net increase from year to year is not sufficient to justify great alarm. Rome does not retain all in her fold who come to us from Europe. Many of these sons and daughters of Europe, inspired with the idea of liberty, as well as of money-making—coming in daily contact with people free to adopt any form of religion they may deem proper, with their children in the public schools mingling with Protestant children whom they find to be in all respects quite as moral as themselves, and neighborly to the utmost degree, are lost to Rome.

The statistics of the churches do not give ground to fear the speedy triumph of Romanism in the United States. The Roman Catholic population, consisting of men, women and children, is a fraction less than one-sixth of the inhabitants of the country—that is, of 85,000,000 people 14,000,000 are Roman Catholics. Of these 85,000,000 people a fraction less than one-fourth, or about 21,000,000, counting by families, are Methodists. Counting as do the Romanists, men, women and children, there are about 18,000,000 Baptists. Besides these, there are other large and influential Protestant denominations, to say nothing of the Jews, and people of no church, who, though not technically arrayed against Romanism, are by no means in sympathy with it. These figures, if approximately correct, show that the triumph of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States is far in the future.

That Roman Catholic influence at Washington is to be feared, we believe, but the danger does not lie altogether in that direction. The tendency of the rich people of the country towards Rome is more to be dreaded than the political influence of a few Bishops. Why the rich tend towards Rome we do not know, unless it is on account of the spectacular so manifest in the great cities, or because they find it an easy way to heaven. But the tendency of the rich seems to be that way, and money rules the country. The greatest danger, however, is not in these things, but in the introduction of disintegrating elements into Protestant communions. No disintegration is yet apparent, but the elements have been introduced, and, unless counteracted, will do their work in time. Long since the Roman Catholics saw this, and were not slow to make note of it.

What ground have we for saying the above? Witness: Respect for the Church of God, as a divinely organized institution, is growing slack, and its doctrines do not have the attention they deserve. Its rules and ordinances are lightly esteemed. Multitudes in recent years have come to believe that "one denomination is as good as another," and that "it makes no difference what a man believes if he is sincere." It has not been an age since we heard a leading educator say: "The whole of orthodoxy consists in loving service for our fellow-man." Less than two weeks ago we saw the sentiment stated in a religious newspaper. Obedience to pastors is a thing almost unknown, and the minister, in high places, is regarded as nothing more than a layman that preaches. Besides all this, leading schools, some of them church schools, and all of them patronized by Christians, are tainted with rankest heresy, and are sending out students who will inoculate the people with the poison.

If Protestantism ever breaks down, it will break down under the strain of the things we have indicated. The Church cannot survive, except under authority. Rome is on the alert. She stands ready to gather up the spoils, and dominate both the politics and the religion of the land.

A GREAT SORROW.

A great sorrow has come into the editor's family. The beloved wife of his eldest son, Rev. John W. Boswell, Jr., passed peacefully to rest in Nashville, Tenn., on the afternoon of July 13, 1909. She was in the prime of life and of splendid constitutiontion, but six weeks of typhoid fever was more than could be resisted. She was a good wife and mother. Besides her husband, who is crushed with grief, she leaves five young children who will never know the worth and extent of a mother's love. She was a Christian from girlhood and devoted to the Church, and before the cares of a household were thrust upon her, was active in Church work, always taking great interest in the Sunday school and Epworth League. Two children went before her to the better land—these with a host of friends have greeted her, and she is at rest. May the good Lord comfort the hearts of the loved ones left behind, and may they meet her by and by.

CHANGE OF DATES.

Bishop Hoss announces through the Christian Advocate, the connectional organ, that the North Mississippi Conference will begin December 1, and the Mississippi Conference December 8. This moves forward each Conference one week.

PERSONAL.

Rev. H. T. Cunningham, in addition to the work we reported him as doing, a short time since, is engaged in building a district parsonage, which will be completed about the 1st of September.

Rev. J. H. Montgomery, at this writing (Monday, July 19), is conducting a very successful meeting at James' Chapel, on the Independence Circuit. The particulars we have not learned. Brother Montgomery, we suppose, will report in due time.

A note from Rev. C. D. Atkinson, written July 16, from Denver, accompanied by a beautiful picture of Pike's Peak, tells us that he "expects to go up the Peak next week with the Epworth League party from Seattle." He is enjoying his trip very much.

We thank Hon. W. C. Wells, of Jackson, Miss., a fellow-student of Bishop Galloway at the University of Mississippi, for a well-written article on "Bishop Galloway as a Student." It will appear in our issue of July 29, and we doubt not it will be read with great interest.

A correspondent writes that Rev. T. J. O'Neil "lets no grass grow under the feet of the presiding elder of the Newton District. He has preached over one hundred times, besides delivering lectures and prayer-meeting talks not a few. The district is in fine condition."

We are overwhelmed with communications—some of them very long, unnecessarily so. We print one or two in this issue, and have some longer ones on hand. We cannot see far enough ahead to tell just when we will be able to get through. We ask our friends to be patient.

The Secretary of the Oxford District Conference, Rev. I. D. Borders, informs us that on account of family affliction, the presiding elder, Rev. J. E. Cunningham, was unable to attend the Conference. This the brethren regretted very much. Rev. J. M. Wyatt was elected president.

Brother J. E. Williams, lay leader of the Alexandria District, presents, through the Advocate, an exhortation to the brethren throughout Louisiana. All other leaders are invited to use the Advocate to get in touch with the brethren who fail to hear the leaders. The Advocate will serve to the best of its ability.

Rev. P. O. Lowrey, of Jena, has sent the names and money for twenty-five subscriptions to the Advocate this year, besides rendering assistance to other pastors in securing subscriptions. We very much appreciate the successful work of our brother in behalf of the paper. He will please accept our thanks.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, our pastor at Friar's Point, Miss., is visiting his brother, Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, at Biloxi. He spent several hours in the city on Tueday last, putting in much of the time visiting places of interest. He paid his respects to the Advocate, giving us the pleasure of his company for half an hour or more. We enjoyed his company very much.

Rev. F. R. Hill, Jr., at Crawford Street Church, Vicksburg, tells us that his work "moves along with much to encourage." The Crawford Street Church is of the Institutional character, the only one of the kind among our people in the State, if we are not mistaken, and Brother Hill's work is being watched with much interest.

Rev. W. G. Harbin has been assisting in revival work in Texas, which was crowned with success. The pastor at Kosse, Rev. T. M. Brownlee, a bright young north Mississippian, he says, "is making good in his new field. His sermon at the Preachers' Institute, in the Calvert District, was complimented by all. He has the esteem and love of his people, and is doing a great work at Kosse and Reagan."

We deeply sympathize with our brother, Rev. W. M. Langley, and wife, in the death of their first-born, who lived several months to gladden their hearts and home. The little one was sick only a few days; its sudden going was a great shock, but the Christian parents are reconciled to God's will. The little one passed into the arms of the Good Shepherd July 4, 1909. May the Lord comfort the hearts of the sorrowing father and mother.

Miss Willie Beatrice McKee, sister of Rev. J. A. McKee, now of Denver, Colo., died at the family home in Grenada, Miss., Monday night, July 12, 1909. She was a young lady, consecrated to the Master's service, and was unshaken in her faith as she approached the end. She was not afraid to die. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. W. G. Burks, assisted by Rev. W. W. Mitchell. The Advocate tenders sincere sympathy to the sorrowing friends.

A word personal to the reader: Our Publisher stands much in need of money at this time. Very few new subscriptions are received at this season of the year. But hundreds of our subscribers are due the paper, being some behind in payment. Dear friends, give us the needed help now. The Publisher has been sending out statements. If you have received one, please answer it immediately. If you do not get one, and know yourself to be in debt to the Advocate, please remit, if possible. Do not wait another day.

Dr. Palmore, of the St. Louis Advocate, believing that the pictures of Dr. Wainwright, the excellent presiding elder of the St. Louis District, which have often appeared in official publications, so grossly misrepresent him, that he has secured "an excellent cut" and printed it on the first page of his paper. We give Dr. Palmore due credit for good intentions, but must be permitted to say that, as we see it, though the cut may be a better picture, it is not a better likeness than those we have been accustomed to seeing in official publications.

It has been several weeks since we made acknowledgement of the clubs sent in by our friends. In that time Mr. Enochs, a layman of Fernwood, Miss., sent in the largest number, 29. Others have sent in as follows: Rev. D. M. Geddie, of Winona, Miss., 13; Rev. Walter W. Jones, of Rienzi, Miss., 12; Rev. W. W. Mitchell, of Grenada, Miss., 11; Rev. J. C. Ellis, of Gallman, Miss., 10; Rev. R. T. Pickett, of Mentorum, Miss., 7; Rev. W. G. Harbin, of Haynesville, La., 6; Rev. J. W. Lee, of Kentwood, La., 5; besides a number of others that have sent in smaller numbers. We appreciate fully all that these have done for us. We need badly at this time all that our friends can do for the paper.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

If you have not sent me that postal card asking about your Children's Day, and number of Sunday schools in your charge, please do so right now. This is of great importance to the Board.

More responses and more favorable responses have come from the Sardis District than any other section of the Conference. Last year this district advanced nearly $100 over the previous year on Children's Day collections. This was more than all the other territory of the whole Conference combined, and this year indications are that they will be far in the lead, with less "blanks" and a greater advance than any other district. Great credit is due the presiding elder, Rev. W. M. Young, for his earnest work.

Brethren, please do not pass this notice by, and send me that "postal Card." Only two pastors, J. E. Thomas and J. L. Nahors, from the Columbus District, have paid us any mind. What is the trouble over there? Only four from the Winona District have reported. If you will mail those cards I will thank you.

R. P. NEBLETT, Agent.

Shelby, Miss.

THE LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT.

Editor Christian Advocate, Dear Brother: Will you contribute space enough to a Layman to say to the Lay leaders of the various districts that the movement is being received with quite an encouraging amount of enthusiasm and that conservative, earnest spirit of business that always characterizes our laymen. I organized at White Chapel, on Sunday, July 11, with a good, strong young man as leader (R. J. Nugent) and able corps of helpers, and am receiving letters from various sections inquiring about the matter. All of which makes me feel like Paul must have felt when he says, "I thanked God and took courage."

Not only would I exhort the Laymen to rally to the movement, but to the ministry I would say: "It is YOUR OPPORTUNITY." And I want to thank Brother A. W. Turner for so ably helping this weak Layman at the above mentioned place.

Doctor, I know the Advocate is open to the Laymen, and would suggest to leaders all over the State to agitate, educate and otherwise keep this movement before the Laymen. I believe it the most significant step taken in the church in many decades.

Yours for fifty millions of converts,

J. E. WILLIAMS
Leader Alexandria District.

TOPIC FOR JULY 25, 1909.

SUSTAINING GRACE; STUDIES IN HOME AND FOREIGN MISSIONARY BIOGRAPHY. II Cor. xi:16-33.

Few who read the category of sufferings and trials given by Paul, can repeat personal experiences that anywhere near approach them. Yet Paul does not grieve over his hardships. He rather glories in them. His introduction to Christianity, was a revelation of how great things he must suffer for the service, and his last message to Timothy has in it a shout of triumph. But he tells the secret of his life in Cor. xii:9, "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness." One reason why we appreciate the life of Paul so thoroughly, is that we feel as we study it, that he did not do things to be seen of men. He was striving for the glory of the Master, and to accomplish the things for which he had been called.

But while Paul was the first great missionary, he has had many followers. None of the later men have stood at such a crucial point nor have their lives meant as much to all Christendom, but there have been many just as devoted and self-sacrificing.

No man ever more truly followed in the footsteps of Paul, than did Francis Asbury, the Bishop of our Church in the early days. He came to America when dreadful tales were still told about the wilderness, and unsparing, he spent a life of toil and hardship, facing the dangers of the wilderness, and all the hazards of primitive travel. "His journals contain a wonderful record of apostolic zeal and fidelity, of a spirit of self-sacrifice rivalling that of the saints and martyrs of the early Church, of an industry which no toils could weary, of a patience which no privations could exhaust."

Dr. John Scudder, the first American medical missionary who went to Ceylon, was sent out by the American Board in 1819. He was one of the foremost physicians of New York City, when he heard the call to go, and it seemed to most men as if his work certainly lay at home. While it proved true with him, as with most medical missionaries, that his medical skill opened the way and made him friends, yet often he met hardships and dangers and sometimes was stoned. He testifies, that when led through jungles infested by wild beasts, he was kept from harm. "They had a commission" he says "from our Divine convey not to molest us." In a debilitating climate and with heat intense, he was unremitting in his toil, and was wont to say, "Eternity will be long enough to rest in."

But instances might be multiplied without limit. These two are taken from widely separated lives to illustrate the fact that the same devotion and self-sacrifice holds to-day as in the days long gone. The world grows better, and the kingdom of God comes nearer, and the salvation of the world is hastened, because there are still men and women "who hold not their lives dear unto themselves."

FAYETTE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I am glad to report through the Advocate that we are getting along fairly well in the work on Fayette Charge. We recently held a revival meeting here in Fayette, which resulted in much good. Rev. G. H. Galloway did the preaching and Rev. C. N. Guice conducted the singing. Brother Galloway is a strong preacher and a successful revivalist. His sermons were forcible, clear-cut, and deeply spiritual. Brother Guice is a master in his special line of work. There is no sweeter singer anywhere. His touching and inspiring solos greatly pleased the people. Judging from his talks to the children, he is far from being an ordinary preacher. Any pastor needing help for revival meetings would do well to engage his services. The results of this meeting were eight accessions to the church and the membership greatly strengthened and built up in the faith.

Owing to the ravages of the boll weevil in this section our finances are behind, but we are working and praying for a full report at Conference.

Our most important work this year has been a reform movement against the lawless element in the community. In our fight for the extermination of blind tigers, the suppression of gambling, and the conviction and punishment of those guilty of miscegenation, we have been bitterly and determinedly opposed by some of the most prominent men in the town. However, we have forged ahead in the fear of God and accomplished some telling results. A law-enforcement league was organized some months ago with Judge J. S. Hicks, chancellor, as president. Every officer and committeeman is a prominent member of some one of the churches here. About ninety per cent. of the citizens in Fayette and a great many in the county belong to the league. We propose to stand for our rights and not be run over by the evil-doers of the community.

During the year we will hold a revival meeting and observe Children's Day at every church on the charge. Our Sunday Schools and Epworth Leagues are doing good work. We are visiting from house to house and doing our best to faithfully discharge the obligations that rest upon a modern Methodist preacher. We ask an interest in the prayers of all who may read these lines.

D. SCARBOROUGH, P. C.

A GREAT SORRROW.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Just two months ago wife and I were visitors at the parsonage here in the town of Boyle, Miss., the house being occupied by our son, W. M. Langley and wife of the North Mississipi Conference. Little William Marvin, their first born, and only child, a little less than two years old was then the joy of the home. Almost idolized by the young parents and very tenderly loved by grandfather and mother, to-day the home is gloomy and all our hearts are sad. On last Sunday, July 4, little Marvin was taken from us by the grim monster, who has invaded and left sorrow in so many homes. He had been a very lovable child all his short life, and was looked upon as one of much promise. But we know it is well with the child. Unstained by sin he is safe in the arms of Jesus. There was little preparation for the heavy stroke as the little one had been sick but a few days. The hearts of the parents are almost crushed. But their trust is in God who "giveth songs in the night."

Obituaries.

TATUM, MYRTLE MAY, child of William Pierce and Martha Lenora Tatum, near Montrose, Miss., was called away from earth by an All-wise Providence on the evening of June 7, 1909. She was born, February 12, 1908. The mortal remains repose in the town cemetery to await the resurrection morn. "It is well with the child." The immortal spirit dwells in the paradise above and basks in the sunshine of the Savior's smile. In the absence of the pastor, the funeral services were conducted by the Rev. L. H. McInnis, of the Presbyterian Church. W. A. BETTS, P. C.

GAMMAGE, Lois, child of John and Nora Gammage, was born August 21, 1904 and died at 4:15 a. m., January 6, 1909, after an illness of only a few days. She was the only daughter of the home and dearly beloved. The heavens contain no sweeter spirit than this precious child, so winsome and gentle here on earth. The pastor conducted the obsequies and assisted by the Woodmen, the body was laid to rest in the cemetery of the town of Montrose, Miss. "Of such is the kingdom of God." W. A. BETTS, P. C.

JOHN W. BAILEY was born in Amelia County, Va., May 23, 1833, and died at his home near Acona, Holmes County, Miss., May 21, 1909. His parents moved from Virginia to Mississippi when he was two years old and settled in Holmes County, and it was here that Brother Bailey grew to manhood. On March 8, 1855, he was married to Miss Sallie A. McGee, and for more than half a century they have lived happily together. When sixteen years old he professed religion and joined the church. Brother Bailey was a Methodist after the Wesley type. He was always true to his church, true to his pastor, and ready to do what he could for his Master. He was Sunday School superintendent for about thirty years of his life. He was kind, gentle and loving in his home. It was pleasant to be with him. He had been waitiug the call for some time, and when it came he was ready to march. I would say to the aged wife and the eight children, do not mourn. Your loss has been heaven's gain. May God lead you on in the way of life until you all shall meet around his great white throne!

W. L. STORMENT.

Mrs. M. E. HASTINGS was born in Wilkinson County, Miss., Sept. 11, 1840 and died in Vicksburg, Miss., June 8, 1909. She was three times married: first, to Mr. John Tyler in 1848 who died in the army in 1862, leaving two children, one of whom soon died and the other, Mrs. Ellis Cobb, of Vicksburg, still lives; next to Mr. Thomas Reddy, who left three children, two of whom are still living, Mr. T. J. Roddy, of Jackson, Miss., and Mrs. Nanie Flourney, of Torbert, Miss., and last to Wesley Hastings who left one son who still lives; also four sisters to mourn her death, but praise the Lord we do not mourn as those who have no hope. She was the daughter of Rev. Hiram and Nancy Enlow, was brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and united with the M. E. Church, South when a small girl. When about eighteen years old she was happily converted during a revival meeting at Mount Carmel, in Wilkinson County, in a wood's prayer meeting of the ladies in 1858, Rev. Charles McNeal, pastor. All the latter part of her life she spent in Vicksburg and held her membership in South Washington Church. Some years ago she had professed sanctification and lived it and died in triumph. Her last words were, "Oh death, where is thy sting? Oh grave, where is thy victory." May we all so live that we will be re-united in that home of glory where she is gone.

Her sister, M. A. F.

Mrs. MARY E. MEEK, wife of W. T. Meek, was born March 3, 1839, and died at her home in Coldwater, Miss., May 3, 1909. She was a daughter of Maj. Robert and Elvie C. Moore and a grand-daughter of Rev. Robt. Walker who was a minister of the Presbyterian Church at Bethesda, S. C., for forty years, afterwards moving to Mississippi and was buried at Senatobia, Miss. Mrs. Meek was first a member of the Presbyterian Church but joined the Methodist Church in 1876 and remained a consistent member till her death. She was married to Mr. W. T. Meek, Aug. 25, 1869. Four sons were born to them, two of whom are left to mourn the loss of their mother. She was a devoted wife, tender mother and affectionate friend. Her remains were laid to rest at Brook's Chapel, May 5, 1909, by the side of her youngest son. May the bereaved find comfort in the assurance that there shall be a resurrection of the just.

HOME COMFORTS.

Every man and his family wants home comforts, and spends a great deal of money for them. Now that the city is putting in the sewerage system and connecting all property with the water pipes free and the firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co. are doing the same with the sewer pipes. there is no reason that any family in the city owning a home should not have these comforts, especially when they go farther and do all kinds of plumbing work on contract and on the smallest monthly payments, giving the property holders every chance to enjoy these comforts and pay for them while enjoying same. If you are a property holder see them and get them to tell you the cost, and the liberal terms will cause you to have the work begun at once.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE OF ALABAMA

LOCATED in the historic City of Montgomery, well known as one of the most beautiful and cultured of all the Southern cities. Genial climate offers finest health conditions. Young ladies from the North, desiring to escape the rigor of long winters would find here an attractive College home. Campus of fifty-seven acres in one of the city's most attractive suburbs. Tennis, basket ball and other outdoor recreations emphasized. Under the auspices of the two Alabama Conferences of the Southern Methodist Church. Annual appropriations from the two Conferences added to other productive funds equivalent to an endowment of $150,000; a substantial nucleus for a continually growing fund. Endowment as above-named enables the College to give, at reasonable rates, the finest advantages in the various departments of study. Music Conservatory, Art, Expresion and Literary departments are in charge of experienced teachers who bring to their work the best training of the Universities of this country and abroad. During the ensuing session, which opens September 30, 1909, only "B-grade" work will be required for graduation; the following session, beginning September, 1910, full "A-grade" standards will be maintained, while a Junior Department continues the preparatory courses. BOLINGER, LA.

Dear Dr. Boswell: As I have written nothing from this charge up to this date, I send you a few lines thinking possibly some of the readers of the Advocate would be interested in the work being done on what formerly was known as "North Bossier Circuit." We cannot report great progress in all lines of church work, but we are looking after the children and young people, trying to work up a deeper interest in Sunday School work. "Children's Day" has been observed at two places on the charge, viz.: Bolinger and Plain Dealing. The programme was good at both points, but especially so at Plain Dealing. The service was delightful in every particular. Much praise is due Miss Eva Carstarphan and her assistants, Miss Ola and Minnie Watkins for the excellent programme. The music was a delightful and agreeable surprise to the audience. Mr. J. C. Bolinger and Mr. Alton Foster, with their cornets, adding greatly to the success of the musical feature of the exercises. Collection, $11.

We hope to be able to bring up a good report to Conference despite the continued depression in finances throughout this section of Louisiana.

HISTORICAL SKETCHES.

To the Members of the Mississippi Annual Conference:

Dear Brethren: At the session of the Mississippi Methodist Historical Society held on June 5, 1905, it was provided that the writer should secure for the society and put in some permanent form a biographical sketch of each member of the Conference. For various reasons, good and bad, I have done nothing on this work up to date. But I am at work on that important task in good earnest now, and with your help I will have it finished by the coming session of our Annual Conference. I am sending to each member of the Conference a set of questions and blanks for answers and shall have made a large book, each leaf containing a corresponding set of questions and blanks into which I shall, as carefully as possible, copy the data sent me by the members. This book will be the property of the society and will be invaluable to the future historian or to any biographical writers who write with reference to our preachers. I trust the brethren will give this matter not only very prompt, but also very accurate and careful attention.

The brethren interested will see at a glance that my success in this important task will depend on their prompt and careful response to these inquiries. Expecting such ready and accurate attention to this matter from every member of the Conference,

I am, H. B. WATKINS.

Hazlehurst, Miss., July 6, 1909.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address:

WOMAN'S BEAUTY

A woman's beauty is dependent on her health. To keep her beauty, she must keep her health. Sickness and suffering leave their trace, pain leaves its marring imprint. Ladies have come to realize that to be beautiful and attractive they must give attention to physical fitness and health.

Countless women suffer from ailments designated generally as "female complaint," thinking it is the natural lot of their sex to suffer.

This is a mistaken belief. Nature invariably has a cure for her children's ills. Thousands of women have found permanent relief for their sufferings by using that natural, herbal medicine,—Wine of Cardui. Cardui is a pure, non-intoxicating remedy, specifically for women, which has grown steadily in favor during the past fifty years. Letters pour in every day, expressing the gratitude of the writers who have been relieved of their misery and restored to health.

When you are nervous or sick, get Cardui from your druggist, and try it.

N. B.—Upon request, we will send you, free of charge, our valuable, illustrated 64 page book "Home Treatment for Women." In it you will find valuable information regarding the treatment of female troubles.

LESSON FOR JULY 25.

PAUL AT ATHENS.

Acts xvii. 16-34.

Golden Text: "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."—John iv. 24.

Everywhere the Apostle Paul preached the gospel he met with such opposition that he was driven away. When the Jews from Thessalonica came and drove him away from Berea it might have meant to some that the time had come for concealment, until those opposing him ceased their efforts against him. Not so with him who said "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel."

The friends of the apostle, impressed by the excited state of the people of Berea thought best to hurry him away, and under Providence, Paul's face turned westward to take the gospel, as we believe, to plant it as a seed where the harvest would be reaped, and again planted, by the forefathers of the Anglo-Saxon race. Westward to the great intellectual city of Athens Paul was led; and here, as at other places, the great soldier of the cross was the equal in every way of those that opposed him.

"Silas and Timothy remained for the time at Berea; so Paul entered Athens alone. Alone in heart and spirit, and grieved that he saw the whole city, so renowned for learning, "wholly given to idolatry." First, he went to the synagogue, hoping to find some that would listen to the words that burned within him; there, perhaps, he met some of the same kind of Jews that drove him away as an exile, for next we read that he preached in the market place. He saw the effect of paganism on the lower classes, and so earnest was he in his speech, and his face fairly shining with the truth he stood for, that the attention of some of the many philosophers and teachers were attracted toward him with the undignified interrogation: "What will this babbler say?" The answer met the question: "He seemeth to be a setter-forth of strange gods." However, they had heard enough to create a desire to hear more, and the apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ was led by those of the Epicurians, whose religion was pleasure, and of the Stoics, who had no religion at all, to Mars Hill, an eminence in the city, arranged as an outdoor auditorium.

On every side there met the eye shrines and statues and altars, all dedicated to the numberless gods and goddesses that Grecian mythology had exalted as objects of worship; and a people "who spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell or to hear some new thing." Paul had new and strange things to tell them, and things that, with all their intellectual attainments, they had never heard before. The apostle stood up before them and began his sermon, carefully avoiding any disrespect to their various beliefs, and giving them his impression that they, as a people, were too much given to ideals, and meeting this impression with a plain relation of facts, blending the spiritual and divine as the cause of the material.

Paul's text was "To the unknown god," an inscription he had read on an altar he had seen as he was passing along. This God was unknown to them, and he came to make him known, for he made the world and all things therein, nor would he dwell in any of their temples, however beautiful and costly they might have been. This unknown God had all power and all knowledge, and is not worshiped with men's hands, but whom they ignorantly worshiped. Paul would declare unto them that "he is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." This great God, one and eternal, had inherent attributes of wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness and truth; whereas for each of these qualities they had a separate god or goddess. This great God was not far from any one of them, for "in him we live, and move and have our being," as certain also of your own poets have said," said Paul, "we are his offspring." Then why should they think that they should bow before gold, silver or stone that were fashioned into gods by men's hands?

Then Paul told them of God's mercy; that he would not see all this ignorance, and now commandeth all men everywhere to repent; assuring them by the power of Christ's resurrection that, in him that judgeth the world in righteousness, every man would be justified by faith in him whom he hath ordained. When the resurrection of the dead was mentioned some of them that heard mocked, and others turned away, saying they would hear him speak again on that subject some other time.

Paul had not mentioned the name of Jesus; he had only referred to Jesus as "the man whom he hath ordained," but before this, in other places in Athens, he had preached Christ and the resurrection. Here Paul ended his sermon, and we do not know that he was ever in Athens again; but as God never leaves his word without a witness, there were some that believed and were converted. The sermon, as we have it, is short, but comprehends all. It was preached that God is the Creator; that religion is reasonable; God is sovereign; he made all things, and will judge all things; he hath already appointed a day of judgment. He gives us natural life and spiritual life; without him we can do nothing. He is so great and so good, and so powerful, holding the universe in his hand; yet he tells us he is our loving Father. That was the message that Paul brought to Athens, and with a heavy heart he delivered it. It was only the promise that God's word will not return unto him void that lightened the burden that rested on the preacher's soul as he left Athens and began his journey to Corinth.

The world is full of people to-day that worship, or pretend to worship, a God unknown to them; and they will never know him until, through Jesus Christ, he is revealed to them by the Holy Ghost. He is ready to be to every one a father, closer and dearer than any earthly parent. How can this truth be told to the great restless throngs that live from day to day, never giving a thought to death and eternity? How can these, that seem a flock without a shepherd, be made to believe that it is the will of the eternal Father that all should know him, love him and obey him?

Oh, that God would raise up some voice of one crying in the present-day wilderness, and, that cry being heard, men may turn from worldliness to serve the living God! Under the bondage of a modern Egypt, the poor are tasked under a master that has broken their spirit, and their hope for surcease is now waiting to be pointed to him who cries now, as ever, and ever will: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden."

A NEW BOOK.

"From Darkness to Light," a story of negro progress by Mary Helm, is the title of a careful and discriminating study of the processes of the evolution through which the race has has passed from an African savage to a Christian citizen of America. It is a most remarkable book, whether written by a Southerner or a Northerner. The author is a Southerner in whom interest has ripened into a Christian devotion and consecration that sees the true manhood and womanhood regardless of race and color. From the standpoint of unity, it is remarkable and unbiassed in that it presents a study accepted by both the North and South. The book is teeming with vital and accurate statistics. Its optimism is sane and reasonable. The author frankly admits that she has no theory of the Negro, nor does she attempt to solve the "Race Problem." She writes from an intimate knowledge of the Negro obtained not from books, but from real life.

The "Woman's Council of Home Missions," representing nine of the leading denominations of America—North and South—wrought wisely when it selected Miss Helm to make this study on this live and burning question. Although primarily prepared for a textbook in Home Mission Study Classes, the book has a much wider vision and scope. Unless we are very much mistaken, a careful reading of this little volume will help many to a better understanding of our brother in black.

CHARTER
OF THE
National Co-operative Development Company, Ltd.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
CITY OF NEW ORLEANS.

Be it known that on this 9th day of July, one thousand nine hundred and nine (1909), before me, J. Marshall Quintero, a notary public in and for the parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, duly commissioned and qualified, personally came and appeared the persons whose names are hereunto subscribed, who declared that, availing themselves of the laws of this State relative to the organization of corporations, they do, by these presents, organize and constitute a corporation for the object and purposes herein set forth.

ARTICLE I.

The name of this corporation shall be The National Co-Operative Development Co., Ltd.; its domicile shall be in the City of New Orleans, Louisiana; it shall have corporate existence for fifty (50) years from the date hereof.

ARTICLE II.

The object and purpose for which this corporation is organized are to buy, sell, rent and lease all kinds of lands and to acquired by purchase or otherwise minerals, oils and gas of all kinds that may be in and under such lands and to sell the same, either in their natural condition or in a manufactured condition.

ARTICLE III.

The capital stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at one million dollars ($1,000,000), to be represented by one hundred thousand (100,000) shares of the par value of ten dollars ($10) each. Each share of stock shall entitle its owner to one vote, either in person or by proxy, at all meetings of stockholders. This corporation shall commence business and be a going cencern when five thousand dollars ($5,000) of said stock shall have been subscribed for.

ARTICLE IV.

There shall be a board of six directors of this corporation, in whom all its corporate powers shall be vested, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum. They shall select from among their number a President, Vice-President, Second Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, no two of which offices shall be held by the same person. Citation shall be served on the President; in his absence on the Vice-President, and in the absence of both of these on the Second Vice-President.

ARTICLE V.

The first board of directors of this corporation shall be Edwin J. Larkin, Charles A. Celestin, Leon E. Marion, Ambrose J. Guidry, Sidney Story and Philip H. Mentz; of whom Edwin J. Larkin shall be President, Charles A. Celestin shall be Vice-President, Leon E. Marion shall be Second Vice-President, Ambrose J. Guidry shall be Treasurer, and Sidney Story shall be Secretary; all of these directors and officers shall hold office until their respective successors shall have been elected.

ARTICLE VI.

On the first Monday of January, one thousand nine hundred and ten (1910), and annually thereafter, the stockholders shall meet and elect a board of directors; the secretary shall give ten (10) days prior notice of said meeting by mail to each stockholder, in which notice he shall state the place, date and time of said meeting. As soon as said directors are elected, they shall meet and select the officers of this corporation to serve until the next election thereof shall be had. The failure to hold the elections provided for in this article shall not dissolve this corporation. In that event the officers and directors then in office shall remain in office until their successors shall have been elected.

ARTICLE VII.

No stockholder of this corporation shall ever be held liable for the debts, defaults or obligations of this corporation in any greater sum than the unpaid balance of any subscription due by him on shares of the corporation owned by him.

ARTICLE VIII.

This done and passed at my notarial office in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, in the presence of H. A. Mentz and Edwin O. Cook, competent witnesses residing in this city, who hereto subscribe their names with said appearers and with me, said notary, after due reading.

Glances at the World.

It does seem that very rich people would be free from the temptation to smuggle goods into the country to avoid paying the duty, but as a matter of fact, they are the people who do the smuggling, at least, that part of it that amounts to any great value. Certain wealthy persons in New York were recently caught in the act of trying to get goods into the port valued way up in the thousands. And late papers give an account of "a beautiful girl, daughter of wealthy parents" who was fined in the United States Court in New Jersey, $2000, for smuggling goods valued at $2500. The goods are held, and she can get them only by paying double duty. Rich people set the fashions in dress, dictate the customs in society, and in various ways dominate the country. It would be a blessing to them and to the whole land if they would set an example in common honesty. That would solve some perplexing problems.

A strange thing has been discovered, and a stranger thing is, the discovery has been made public. An Italian Monk in Turin has made a scientific study of "holy water." This "holy water" is kept in a font at the entrance of every church, and the faithful on entering the church, dip the tip of a finger in the water and cross themselves with it, we believe, on the forehead. The aforesaid Monk has discovered dangers to health lurking in the water. An examination of a small quantity of it taken from the surface of a basin revealed 150,000 microbes, while the same quantity taken from the bottom of the basin contained 6,000,000 of the living creatures. The priest made some experiments. By injecting this water into animals he found that it invariably killed them, by developing tuberculosis or diptheria. Who before, ever dreamed that microbes could generate in "holy water?" And who can believe the report made by this Monk of scientific mind. It is about as hard for us to believe as to believe that snakes cannot exist in Ireland. But some people can believe anything.

The trustees of Cumberland University, a Cumberland Presbyterian institution located at Lebanon, Tenn., have abolished the Theological Department of the school. Possibly they may have been justified in view of the recent difficulties growing out of the union of the Cumberlands with the old school Presbyterians. But the trustees went a step further. They declared themselves the sole owners of the institution, which if true, neither the Cumberlands nor the old school can claim and take possession of the property. In the recent litigation in Tennessee, the Supreme Court gave all the property heretofore held by the Cumberland Presbyterians to that part of the Church in the State that remained loyal to the Cumberland faith. So, if they claim the university, they must go to law again to get possession. We have always thought that Cumberland University belonged to the Cumberland Presbyterians, just as we thought that Randolph-Macon in Virginia belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and likewise, Vanderbilt University. But the trustees hold otherwise—at least so do the trustees of Randolph-Macon and Cumberland University. As far as we know, Vanderbilt's trustees have not spoken, but we have heard, Chancellor Kirkland holds that the decision of the three eminent lawyers, appointed by the General Conference to settle the question of ownership "is not worth the paper it is written on." May be the Chancellor will some day change his opinion. Great are some trustees!

What is whisky? We had an idea that the question had long since been settled. But not so. The great United States Government has been wrestling over it for more than a year. The Chemist of the Agricultural Department, having charge of the Pure Food Law, has decided one way—which was upheld by President Roosevelt; and the distillers who make the stuff have decided another way. The question was unsettled when Mr. Roosevelt went out of office, leaving the final decision with Mr. Taft. The Government chemist contends that spirits distilled from grain is the only product entitled to pass as straight whisky under the Pure Food Law, and that any other form must bear a label proclaiming it as an adulteration. The distillers repudiate this, and say that such an interpretation will greatly injure their business. Exactly what they call whisky, we do not know. Our notion is that they desire all sorts of "blends," concoctions," "red liquor," etc., to pass under the name of "whisky." Mr. Taft will settle the question by and by. In the meantime, Mrs. Beulah Amidon, chairman of the food sanitation committee of the federation of women's clubs, has sent circulars to every woman's club in the country asking them to write to Mr. Taft and urge him to uphold the ruling of Mr. Roosevelt, and report says it appears that all the women have done as requested. Of course, these good women do not drink whisky, but they are interested in maintaining the Pure Food Law.

The following facts, taken from the New York Sun, in regard to forestry in France show what has been done by close application. In reading the facts it must be remembered that France is a very old country: "Eighteen per cent. of the area of France, or 23,500,000 acres, is under forest. About 6,179,000 acres are managed by the State and the net profit derived from this source is $4,737,250 a year, or $1.75 an acre. Ninety-five cents an acre is spent each year in the management of the forests. The great achievement of France in forestry has been the establishment of protective forests where much destruction has been caused by floods and winds. From various causes large areas were cleared of forests toward the close of the eighteenth century, and only when it was too late was it realized that these lands were not fit for agriculture and should have been left in forest. Down to the present time, encouraged by wise laws, the State, the communes and private land owners have restored to forest more than 2,500,000 acres and so saved them from ruin. In addition the resulting forests return an excellent revenue. Great results have also been obtained in reclaiming or controlling the sand dunes, which the winds drive farther and farther inland, wasting the vineyards. Of the 350,000 acres of sand dunes, 275,000 have been planted in forest, and the dunes, instead of being a constant menace to the surrounding farmers, now are growing crops of pine which produce valuable wood and rosin. About 2,000,000 acres of sifting sands and marshes toward the interior of the country, a triangular territory known as the Landes, has been changed from a formerly worthless waste into a profitable forest valued at $100,000,000." What has been done in France, and Germany, and Japan, can be done in the United States.

It must be a matter of general regret that so many neighborhood and family fueds result in the loss of human life. They are specially harmful to the communities in which they occur. Two have been very recently stirred up in Mississippi, resulting in the death of no less than five men, and the wounding of several more. It is to be regretted also that in certain communities, where life and property are in danger, law-abiding citizens are afraid to undertake to ferret out and punish evil-doers, or get them out of the community, lest they meet an untimely and violent death. And what is worse, it is more than intimated that juries sworn to render verdicts in accordance with the law and evidence, are too uncertain to be appealed to, for juries are made up of men who, like others, are afraid of violence. This state of things leads the Picayune to say: "There are communities in Louisiana, as well as in other States, where the people are intimidated, and rather than appeal to a jury whose verdict is a most uncertain factor in the administration of justice, the people will quietly submit to great evils. It is unlikely that any real relief will be experienced until the orderly members of the community, who realize the need of some reliable and forceful protection, organize committees of safety and cease not in their efforts to establish conditions of security for life and property until the worst classes are brought to justice or are driven out of the country. * * * What is necessary is that the best citizens shall get together and organize for the safety of society, and not cease their efforts until it is established and the machinery of the law is put in proper operation." We commend these words to the citizens of every community in which men, held to be good or bad, are in the habit of carrying pistols. Pistol toting is the root of much evil.

The following from the Inter-Ocean, of Chicago, in regard to the grain crops of the country in 1909 as compared with 1908 will prove interesting reading to everybody. The crop for 1909 not having all been harvested is only estimated, and we doubt whether the estimate takes into account the largely increased area in corn in some of the Southern States. If not, at least one million bushels should be added to the estimate given in the figures below. The figures are as follows:

Wheat	1909	1908
Winter	397,000,000	438,000,000
Spring	296,000,000	227,000,000
Totals	693,000,000	665,000,000
Corn	3,117,000,000	2,669,000,000
Oats	1,030,000,000	807,000,000
Rye	31,500,000	32,000,000
Barley	191,000,000	167,000,000
Total all grains	5,062,500,000	4,340,000,000

With the corn and oats prospects in the West and Northwest the best ever known in July, an estimated increase over last year's crop of more than 500,000 bushels, and more than 250,000 bushels in excess of the record breaking harvest of 1906; with unprecedented prices for cash grains prevailing in spite of the prospects for the biggest crop in the country's history; with the granaries cleaned out at this time of the hold-over harvest, as they have not been for many years, owing to the high prices that have prevailed for months; with the tariff bill nearing its final disposition in Washington and the business world clearing the decks for a record-smashing dash, the country is believed to be entering upon a period of prosperity that will surpass even the memorable revival and expansion of the McKinley era.

THE AUGUST HOUSEKEEPER.

Hammock stories for hot days fill the pages of The Housekeeper for August. Some of them have such startling titles as "Hatching the Serpent's Egg," by A. Gordon Ogilvie, "Seen Through the Telescope," and "The Life-Book of Uncle Jesse." "A Case of Art and the Common People," by Edmund H. Wuerpel, is the interestingly true story of St. Louis. All sorts of advice is given about managing the home in hot weather and the suggestions are valuable, economical and helpful. The Housekeeper Corporation, Minneapolis, Minn. BISHOP CHARLES B. GALLOWAY, D.D.

By Hon. W. C. Wells.

While attending the meeting of the Alumni Association of the University of Mississippi, at its recent commencement, without the slightest notice to me beforehand, I was called upon by the president of that association to take the rostrum and tell what I remembered of Bishop Galloway as a student of the University. When I finished, and after the dismissal of the audience, I was requested by a large number of the Bishop's friends to reduce to writing what I had said on that occasion, which I agreed to do. In obedience to that promise I will briefly state now a part of what I remember of the distinguished divine as a student of the University of Mississippi.

My acquaintance with him began in this way. I served in the Confederate army from July, 1861, to the close of the war, and about the first of January, 1866, I started from my home, in Hinds county, to the University. When the train reached Canton, where it changed engines and stopped about ten minutes, I aimlessly left the car and stepped on the ground where I met a man I had served with in the army, and he asked me where I was going, and I told him to the University of Mississippi to get an education. He said: "I have two little friends going on this train to the same place and I want you to know them." He at once called up these two lads and introduced them to me, and one of these was Charles B. Galloway. When he thus introduced the lad to me he also introduced his father, Dr. Galloway, who was an eminent physician residing at Canton. We had but a moment to converse before the train started, but in that brief space of time, Dr. Galloway said to me, "Mr. Wells, you are a grown man and my son is but a boy, won't you please look after him for me." I answered in the affirmative, and the train whistled. The lad Charles went on the train with me, was introduced to two friends who were with me and at once attached himself to our little crowd. One of these two men was John Silliman Moore, for a long time pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Sherman, Texas. Dr. Moore and I had been friends about six months, and agreed to room together at the University, which we did until June, 1867, when he graduated. The other friend had no roommate, and I suggested to Charles to room with that friend, to which he consented, and that arrangement was carried out. On our arrival at the University, my roommate and myself took a room in Franklin Hall, and I assisted Charles in getting a room which was just across the hall from mine.

Dr. Moore and I, the first night we spent in that room, agreed to have religious services in our room every night, and invited Charles Galloway and his roommate to join us. This they did, Charles always reverently taking a silent part. Mr. Moore and I took a night about in conducting these services. Charles Galloway was then 16 years old. His intimacy with me began at the time we met at the train at Canton, and lasted to the day of his death. He was at that time engaged to be married to the sweet, dear woman who became his wife on the 1st of September, 1869. We were not in the same class, but we were together, when not in the recitation room, nearly all the time. A part of the vacations I spent with him, a visitor in his father's house, and he would spend a while with me at my father's home. The last time I conversed with him was on the porch of his home, and then, as we always had done, we called each other the same as when we were chums at college. About one month before his marriage he wrote me a letter, and asked that I would be one of his groomsmen, and I declined because I married twelve days before he did. At the birth of his first child he wrote me a joyful letter of the coming of his daughter, who afterwards was such a joy and comfort to him.

We had been together at the University a few months when he became interested in his soul's salvation. He spoke of it to Mr. Moore, and he (Moore) to me, and we invited him to a conference with us in our room, and there, with closed door, we knelt together to pray to God for the salvation of his soul. Mr. Moore, greatly gifted in prayer, led us in an earnest appeal to the great Savior of men to convert our young friend. I do not recall whether he professed conversion that same evening or not, but, if not, certainly within a few days. Dr. Moore and I discussed between ourselves whether or not we should use our influence to get him to join the Presbyterian Church, the one to which we belonged, and I said, "No; let him make his own choice." If I remember right, his father was a Methodist, and his mother a Baptist. In a very short while he joined the Methodist Church, at Oxford, then ministered to by Dr. J. J. Wheat, the Professor of Greek at the University. He immediately took an active interest in the Sunday school and church, and the last year he was there he taught a class in the Methodist Sunday school.

While Charles Galloway was pastor of the church at Vicksburg he passed through a dreadful scourge of yellow fever, and when the news was telegraphed that he had passed away I was bowed down with great sorrow, and great joy came to my heart when I learned that he had recovered. While he was pastor of the church at Vicksburg he held a meeting at the Methodist Church at Raymond, where I was then residing. He spent the week at my home, and, after services at night, we sat together and talked over the days we spent together at the University, and, among others, the incident of his conversion. He said to me that the turning-point of his life was his meeting me at the railroad station at Canton. We had never heard of each other before, and we both felt that the special providence of God had directed us both so as to bring us together. He then and there left his old friends and joined himself to me and mine, and thus was led to accept the Savior.

I cannot close this article without telling of another incident in his life. Some years since I was extremely ill, and it was thought that I was going to die. As soon as the Bishop heard of it he hastened to my bedside and knelt beside my bed and prayed to our God that he would rebuke the disease and spare my life. I shall never forget his great earnestness as he pleaded with our Heavenly Father to spare me to my church and my family and friends.

Some day, I trust, I shall be greeted on the heavenly shore by my departed friend, where we shall part no more.

THE SUPREME WORK OF GRACE.

In reply to an article in the Advocate of June 10 under the above subject, I wish to say that, with some statements therein I do not agree, and should our brother be right in his views, they are still likely to be misunderstood, as we find a great many, even in the churches, living in sin and seeking everything possible to justify and condone such life; people who are very much afraid of fanatical holiness teaching, and consequently are pleased to place all holiness teaching on a par therewith, and conclude that we can live in sin and escape the judgment and eternal hell.

Certainly the redemption through Christ of a lost soul from sin is the crowning work of God's grace, but our brother limits this to the salvation from the guilt of sin, justification, "what God does for us," and says nothing of salvation from its power and dominion, regeneration—"what he does in us"—but speaks of love being shed abroad in such an unregenerate heart.

Now, wouldn't a sinner be in a pitiable condition, pardoned of past sins, and given no power in his life to quit sinning. This is about the same as saving a man in, instead of from, his sins.

Christ said that he was sent to heal the broken hearted, to deliver the captive, to open the eyes of the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to cause the lame to walk, to raise the dead, to cleanse the leper and to unstop the deaf ears (Luke 4:18, Matt. 11:5), and he has been doing this ever since. If we but scan our mission papers we will see greater accounts than at home, and we have in him a remedy to present to fallen man.

A missionary once asked some atheists what they would do with the thousands of men who have lost their manhood, whose tastes are depraved, whose wills are destroyed, victims of passion, slaves of lust, the despair of civilization, and received this reply: "Make you a present of that lot." But he further confessed that "if there is any hope for such men anywhere, it is in the Christ you preach."

He has promised to save all. "They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." "I come not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance."

"He breaks the power of cancelled sin,
He sets the prisoner free;
His blood can make the foulest clean,
His blood availed for me."

Let us not limit the power of Christ to save and perfect men, for this is the Scripture standard, and from the beginning a life above sin is set as the normal one for the Christian. "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin, for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." (1 John 3:9.)

No compromise with sin of any kind is purposed, but the means of salvation therefrom is prescribed. Instead of "continuing in sin that grace may abound," we are to die, and stay dead so far as sin is concerned. (Rom. 6:1.)

It is altogether unscriptural to excuse such things as anger, pride, selfishness, or any other pet meanness, by calling them endowments of natnre, and trying to make them consistent with a life of perfect love. More anon. R. T. PICKETT.

If anger arise in thy breast, instantly seal up thy lips, and let it not go forth. Angry passion is like a fire, and angry words are breath to fan it.—Jeremy Taylor.

NEXT SESSION OPENS SEPT. 15.

Fourteen Good Reasons for Patronizing Grenada College

First—The unexcelled Home Comforts, unequaled anywhere else in the State.

Second—The Health Conditions; we rarely require the service of a physician.

Third—Our unusually skilled corps of teachers, whom we were able to secure only by paying a salary much above that paid by other girls' schools of the State.

Fourth—The Fine Arts Department, unequaled in the State and unexcelled in the South. Our teacher of Art studied in Germany and France, and our teachers of Music are graduated from the best Conservatories of America.

Fifth—See Descriptive Course of Study, which is conscientiously carried out as indicated.

Sixth—The Lyceum Course, which is superior even to that sustained in the University of Mississippi.

Seventh—The Library, which is fuller and better adapted than that of most girls' schools of the South.

Eighth—Strong Christian Influence dominating all instruction.

Ninth—Personal Attention to the Individual Pupil, with a view to develop the best even out of peculiarities of character.

Tenth—A superior Student Body as Associates, since most of the indifferent have been eliminated.

Eleventh—The Rates are lower than those of any other school doing the same grade of work, owing to the Conference Assessment, which gives us an income not possessed by other schools; further, we have no stockholders to whom we are forced to pay dividends, as are some private schools. Our patrons receive back in excellence of service more than they pay in.

Twelfth—We place but two girls in a room, while most schools put from two to six.

Thirteenth—We require our teachers to continue study. Two are in Europe, two in Chicago, others at other schools in North and East.

Fourteenth—All these superior features enable us to turn out a larger percentage of graduates, who take high stand in the educational world, than any other school in the State. It means something to hold a diploma of the Grenada College.

SHALL THERE BE TWO NEW PRESIDING ELDER'S DISTRICTS IN LOUISIANA?

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

[illegible] Shreveport District Conference there was presented a resolution memorializing the Bishop and presiding elders at the next session of the [illegible] Conference to create two new districts, making a total of nine, instead of seven. The movement originated with and was presented [illegible] the resolution being signed by W. F. Henderson, S. H. Porter and W. L. [illegible], and, as far as we noticed in the discussion and vote, not a layman opposed it.

The following are among the leading reasons given in the long discussion on the Conference floor for favoring the two additional districts:

1. The increase in the number of appointments since the Conference was divided into the seven now existing districts. In a quarter there are thirteen Sundays, and for any district to go beyond that number of appointments some Quarterly Conferences must be held without Sunday preaching by the presiding elder, and therefore be of little value to the pastoral charge. But as the matter now stands, instead of having thirteen pastoral charges to the district, Shreveport has twenty-four, Baton Rouge and Crowley each twenty-three, Ruston nineteen, and New Orleans Alexandria, and Monroe each eighteen, making a total of one hundred and forty-three appointments instead of the ninety-one that should compose the seven districts, allowing thirteen to each. So it will be seen that the surplus of fifty-two appointments allows ample room for the two new districts with enough left for two more to be distributed among the nine to fill in the weak places. In other words, there were exactly enough appointments read out at Conference to make eleven districts of thirteen appointments each. All the increase since Conference is to be disposed of in addition to this.

2. It was universally conceded that the present pay of the presiding elder as the districts now stand was out of proportion to the service rendered and as compared with the pay of our pastors. The minutes show that the average presiding elder's salary last year was $1865 while the average salary of the pastors was only $639, or almost three to one in favor of the presiding elder. To more nearly equalize this, either the districts must be divided or the percentage of the presiding elder reduced. Were we to adopt the large district plan and have the elder simply a superintendent to go and come when and where most needed, then to reduce the percentage for him would be the plan. But to reduce his salary now and then next year divide the district, it would be harder to get the old standard of fifteen per cent. restored. And although in many or most instances the larger part or all of this comes directly from the pastor's pockets it is better to pay it for a brief period in the growth of the districts than to work harm to the general financial stability of the work, awaiting the time of redistricting and of an equitable financial adjustment. Why should not Methodism's rule to increase the workmen as soon as the support will allow apply to the district as well as to the stations? If, therefore, a church that can pay their pastor $600 or $800 is entitled to a station preacher, why should not a group of thirteen churches that can pay $1500 be entitled to a [illegible] energetic presiding elder? Allowing [illegible] each of our seven districts, there was paid in a surplus last year of $2575, for which [illegible] It is quite possible that the Bishop could find [illegible] who would serve the church on the districts allowing that this year will be one of normal growth.

3. And, too, the increased demands for efficient service entered into the discussion. The day is passed when a preacher can pass through the country as a vision in the night and have the full gospel effects follow him. Taking from his dusty saddle-bags a worn copy of the word edition of the hymn-book and lining off a few verses, calling mourners and going off with a shout does not compose the full measure of a leading preacher's work. Our people are now Christianized and need developing in grace and in service. Both our young preachers and our church members need teaching, inspiring and directing. But under our present scattering of our elder's power, how many of us have had one to lead off in grading, organizing, re-organizing a Sunday School? Such a thing as a Home Department, a Cradle Roll, or a Teacher's Meeting, the average presiding elder doesn't seem to know, or care. And of perfecting the workings of the several departments of the Epworth League or Women's Societies, he knows and cares as little. And when did one ever have time to prize the old church building out of its dilapidated condition or find and buy a lot for a new one? Or call on the women of the charge and have the parsonage put in good order and the pastor "pounded," and walk into the offices of the laymen and talk heart to heart with them about the Lord's work and their privilege and duty to support his kingdom? If such acts of practical superintendency are uncommon we either need to give our presiding elders more time or get new men for the work. Our resolution calls for the former plan, as it is practically impossible to expect good service from a man spread out so thin. For him to come in hurriedly on a week day and preach a worn sermon, ask a few perfunctory questions, get thirteen per cent of the preacher's salary for three months and then rush for the next train, can only be endured by either preacher or people "for a season." We need him long enough and fresh enough to study our interests and help in working out our plans of development. Our additional districts will help in giving him ample time for this. In the bounds of our own State there are vast fields of needy territory that our elders, burdened with their more than twenty appointments, never see nor know anything about, and while they tarry, enemies ecclesiastic sow tares in their field and others reap the harvest that is justly ours. Is it not time for us to awake out of our sleep?

A FEW DAYS' VACATION AND ELSE.

"Would you not like to have a rest, go off on a vacation for awhile," said T. B. Butler to me some weeks ago. He and I had been to Fayette, Miss., where our (Natchez) District Confeence was held in May. I hesitated a moment, then said: "Yes, provided I only had money to defray expenses," etc. He assured me the money would be forthcoming, so I began to make preparation for the trip. The first thing I did was to secure the services of Clinton Forman, a promising young preacher, to fill my pulpits in my absence. This done, other preparations were made. On Monday, June 28, I left home to be gone more than two weeks.

At McComb I met Brother W. M. Sullivan and family. I found Sister Sullivan sick, though not seriously ill. Brother and Sister Sullivan are doing good work in McComb. The Methodists there are wonderfully pleased with him as their pastor and preacher. He was just home from Fernwood where he had been holding a meeting for Brother G. D. Anders. The meeting was a grand success. Noble people—Zeb. Linton, the Enochs, and others—live there. What a help, yea, how encouraging it is, to a preacher to be supported by such faithful, liberal hearted men as Brother Anders preaches to in Fernwood. His salary is paid monthly, his people also look after the collections ordered by the Conference. It ought to be that way everywhere.

The first time I met Brother Anders was in 1879. He was living at or near a place called "Hogeye," ten or twelve miles from Liberty. At the request of his, now sainted, mother, I visited his home. He was not a Christian then, not even a church member. He had a store, and was selling—shall I tell it? Well, anyway, it is simply wonderful what the grace of God can do for a man when that grace is allowed to have the right of way. I broke bread with him, enjoyed being with his good wife and babies, had a word of prayer with the family, then went on my way. Before I left the work I received him into the church and baptized him. George had a good mother, an earnest, consecrated Christian mother. George wanted to be "dipped in Jordan." He thought "immersion" was baptism. So many people think that way before they learn that baptism is the "application" of water to a person as a sacrament, or religious ceremony, by which he is initiated into the visible Church of Christ.

From McComb I went to Jackson, thence to Bolton. Bolton is a town of 800 or 1000 inhabitants. Brother Peebles has been there, was there four years, hence nearly all the children there have been baptized. Yes, baptized is the word. Brother Terry, who followed him, has his work well in hand and is doing well.

On the morning of July first I left Bolton, passed through Jackson and Meridian, and by 3 p. m. was in Scooba, where my oldest preacher boy now lives. He has a wife and six children. My! what a host of grandchildren I have; nearly forty, including six great grandchildren.

On Sunday, the Fourth of July, Barney and I went to "Union," where I was pastor more than twenty years ago, and where Barney was licensed to preach twenty-three years ago. Only a few of those who were members at Union twenty-three years ago are there now. Brother John L. Hunnicutt, noble man, was the leading man in the church then. He is still in the lead, doing well; God has been good to him. True, he has had sorrow. His noble wife, the partner of his bosom, the mother of his children, his stay in tribulation, left him and went home to rest more than a year ago. She was a good wife, a good mother, a good Christian. It was a treat to me to be in his home once more. I was his pastor three years. We enjoyed a good, "old time" religious talk.

A week from the time I left home I got—shall I tell it? Yes. I got a little home sick. So I decided to cut my visit short and go home. In Jackson, where I had to wait seven hours for a train, I gave one dollar at the "Lawrence House" for the privilege of rolling and sweating five hours. "Too much for his whistle." The weather was too hot to sleep.

At 8 o'clock on the morning of July 6 I reached home to find Sister Lewis sick, but in a little while she was cheerful and happy. So was I. "Home, sweet Home." H. P. LEWIS.

THE PREACHERS' INSTITUTE.

By Rev. D. P. Slaughter.

The session of the Preachers' Institute, held at the Seashore Camp Grounds June 22-July 1, was exceedingly interesting and helpful. This was the first session of this institute, yet it was well worth going to see and to hear, and we count it one of the privileges of a lifetime to have heard the messages brought by the men of God, who came to minister to us in spiritual things. Rev. Shailer Mathews, D.D., professor of Systematic Theology and junior dean of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, is one of the great scholars of the present day. His lectures on the "Preacher's Religious Life" were very helpful and inspiring. But his lectures on "The Social Teachings of Jesus" were especially good. He gave us a better insight into the teachings of the Great Master Teacher. Those who heard him saw the devout Christian, the earnest gospel preacher, while they received instruction from the scholar and the critic. He brought us things new and old out of the Word of God, and out of his own rich Christian experience he spoke to the brethren.

Dr. Frank Parker, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, also gave us inspiring and instructive lectures on Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians. We all felt lifted up as we caught fresh glimpses of the divine purpose of God revealed in Christ. Dr. Parker seemed to make this great epistle glow with new light as he spoke of St. Paul's conception of Christ as the center of all the spiritual forces. Of Jesus Christ as not only the gateway to God, but as the center, the Supreme One in the spiritual world.

Dr. Weber's lectures on some of the great poems of some of the great poets were also helpful. He stressed the influence of these great poems upon the molding of human life and character. Rev. John M. Moore, DD., Ph.D., of Nashville, and Dr. Dayes, presiding elder of the Atlanta District, were with us. These men of God came with messages from God to speak to the men of God. Their lectures on the preacher—"A Man," "A Citizen," "A Preacher," "The Pastor," "The Leader," "The Evangelist"—and the different phases of the preacher's work were all practical and instructive. We came from those lectures with a more exalted idea of the office and work of the preacher, and with an inspiration to he workmen that needeth not to be ashamed.

Rev. Gross Alexander, S. T. D., the book editor of our church, is one of the great scholars of our church. Those who were privileged to hear him were impressed with the fact that Dr. Alexander not only knew much of God's Word, that he thought profoundly, but that he also knew God; that he is a great Christian as well as a great scholar. We earnestly wished that not only every preacher in our land might have heard those lectures, but that every man might have had the privilege of enjoying them. His lectures on "The Sermon on the Mount" and "Paul's Epistle to the Romans" are masterful discourses. The writer considers it one of the greatest privileges of a lifetime to have heard them.

We also acknowledge our debt to the commissioners for this excellent programme, and the very satisfactory way in which it was executed.

WHAT ABOUT MATTHIAS?

Brother D. M. Geddie, in a recent issue of the Advocate (July 8), raises the question: Did Saul or Matthias fill the vacancy? He answers to the effect that Saul did. He advances as proof: "Luke does not say that they were divinely directed to elect him."

Luke says nothing about the wisdom or unwisdom of their act. Peter, who was at that time head of the apostolic college, believed that it was proper to hold the election. Is there any evidence that Peter was mistaken? Is Luke's silence more evidential on this point than Peter's utterance? Peter said: "Of the men therefore that have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and went out among us * * * must one become a witness with us of his resurrection." Was Peter mistaken? Luke does not hint at such a thing. Was Peter presumptious? The suggestion that he was is very evidently an unwarranted presumption.

Brother Geddie further says: "There is nothing in the record to indicate that God accepted him in Judas' place." There is nothing in the record to indicate that God did not thus accept him. Peter evidently thought that God did. Was Peter wrong? Does Brother Geddie know better about this than Peter did?

Brother Geddie argues that Matthias had not until then been called of God to the ministry. Is there any evidence of this? The apostles were not the only men of that time called to the ministry. Barnabas and Silas and Timothy and others were very soon found active in the ministry; and none of them were apostles. Matthias had "companied with" the apostles. Maybe he was one of "the seventy." Luke tells us that our Lord "appointed"—i. e. called—"the seventy."

Brother Geddie assumes that there was no general conference at Jerusalem at that time, and that such a general conference had no right to elect Matthias. How does Brother Geddie know all this? There certainly was a conference; Luke says so—whether general or not, he does not say; but he tells us that there were present "about a hundred and twenty." It seems to me rather "general" for the young church just then; and Peter certainly believed that this conference had authority to elect a successor to Judas; and Peter was the inspired head of the church just then. Did he blunder in the matter? Where is the scriptural proof that he did? Brother Geddie's assumption is utterly baseless.

Brother Geddie assumes again that there must have been just twelve apostles and no more. His inferences drawn from the use of the number twelve in the Apocalypse and from other passages which speak of "twelve thrones," the "twelve tribes," etc., do not prove this. Likewise his indications concerning the prerogatives of the apostolic office lack proof. He insists that if Matthias was an apostle there were thirteen, which thought is revolting to him. Well, Luke and Peter say that he was an apostle; Matthew says Judas was one; Paul says that he was one—not the "unlucky" thirteen, but fourteen appear in the Sacred Record. The Sacred Record, and not Brother Geddie's assumption, must be our guide.

Brother Geddie's contention is not a new one. I heard it years ago; but have never found any evidence of its truth. That Matthias is not heard of again in the New Testament is significant; and that church history gives us nothing reliable about him is also significantly true. It may be—even is probable—that he amounted to very little. I am not sure that he ought to have been elected. It is not my province to defend his election. But, really, was he elected? Was he not only half-elected? He and Joseph were elected or half-elected—"put forward;" then "they gave lots"—gambled over the question, maybe. Now, Christ said that the acts of the church in its corporate or church capacity would have heavenly sanction. (See Matt. xvi, 19, and xviii, 18.) The binding and loosing, the ordaining and repealing, are to be functions of the church. Suppose that I assume that the church ought to have elected Judas' successor as we elect a Bishop; that their blunder was that they did not fully elect, but cast lots, and that had they elected, as was their real privilege to do, the man elected would have been more to the church than Matthias ever was—suppose I assume all this, then what? Why, it would be but an assumption—yes, an assumption, but an assumption far more reasonable and more in harmony with the teachings of the New Testament and of the church through all the Christian centuries, than is Brother Geddie's assumption, with neither reason nor Revelation to support it, and with no historical sanction even suggested. Brother Geddie's story of Matthias' election, relation and failure is a mere dream, and that is all.

THE ENOCHS FAMILY AGAIN.

Mr. Editor: I read Brother R. B. Downer's letter in your issue of July 1, and the impulse was to tell Brother Downer and others who might be interested who the Rev. Isaac V. Enochs was, but I am a timid man and am wanting in confidence, so I decided to let it pass. But E. A. Enochs' article in a later issue of the Advocate has just been read.

I think I knew the traditions of the older generations of Enochs better than Brother Enoch, being the only remaining or living link of former generations. If admissible, I would interpolate, by saying that all Enochs, no matter how they spell their names, are the descendants of one Gabriel Enochs, a Swede, who landed in South Carolina just a year or two before the Revolutionary War, and followed "The Fox of the Woods" (General Anthony Wayne) in his telling raids against the English and Tories. It was my great-grandfather—Rev. Isaac V. Enochs' grandfather. Rev. Isaac V. Enochs was a younger brother of my father, and an itinerant preacher. He stayed all night with Uncle Preserved Ford on his way to Louisiana somewhere about 1822, I guess. Being a Methodist preacher, of course he drifted, and we lost sight of Uncle Isaac, but I know he has descendants in western Louisiana, and is an uncle of Fletcher, Isaac and Jim Enochs. Yours, etc.,

AN OPEN LETTER.

Dear Brother Boswell: Your "A Word Personal to the Reader" in last issue (22nd inst.), it seems to me is enough to stir up the careless ones. Of the "hundreds of subscribers" in arrears, there are doubtless many who, from simple carelessness, are in arrears, others for worse reasons. The effect, however, is all the same. Let those who claim forgetfulness as the cause ask themselves the question, Why are they not forgetful in some other matters of business. Is it not that some other concerns will not tolerate forgetfulness, delays, etc., and in order to get further and other accommodations, they don't forget? They want other favors from time to time and they know that they must be prompt. I am one month behind in renewing my subscription and am sorry for it.

I wonder if some people ever thought that the label on their paper "gave them away." I know of one case, at least, where the label on a paper was the beginning of distrust—led to investigation—and my, well, there was much found in keeping with the date on the label. Lookout, delinquents, better pay up and keep your labels right in line with your profession.

Just think of "hundreds" in debt to the Advocate. What would that mean to the paper in cash paid, and how little to each one! If one cannot pay, write to the paper and say so, have an honest settlement, and you will feel better. I need not be reminded that "times are hard." I've heard that sort of thing for more than half a century. And remember too, that if "times are hard" with you, the same applies to the Advocate.

"The spiritual state of the Church," by Rev. Jno. W. Ramsey in last paper (22nd inst.), as I see it, is a magnificent picture of the subject.

GENERAL CONFERENCE LEGISLATION AND OTHER.

By Dr. [illegible] Keener

While there is no body of men more loyal than the itinerancy of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, yet there seems to be an undercurrent of restlessness caused by the arbitrary use of the Episcopal prerogative. The day has come, or is seeming near at hand, when there must be a check put upon the unlimited prerogative of the appointing power. There are numerous requests going up to the College of Bishops. "We will not have this man to reign over us." When nearly a majority of the Conferences ask to be protected against the presidency of a Bishop, the time certainly has come for a modification of a law which allows the appointing power to ignore the advice of the whole cabinet and make appointments regardless of advice or without any consultation whatever, thereby causing ruthless and unnecessary suffering upon the part of our loyal, devoted itinerancy.

Some law by which three-fourths of the cabinet could prevent this unlimited and arbitrary use of the appointing power would obviate this cry to be delivered from the presidency of any Bishop who might be given to the policy of moving men without any cause apparent to the cabinet. The day for "star chamber" methods and appointments is passed, and the demand for heavy sacrifices which were needful when all the territory of our church was largely frontier is also passed, and there has succeeded a time when counsel and advice should be taken fully, freely. Men are no less loyal or ready for heroic self-sacrifice now than in the past, but the need is not so apparent. Men are not pawns, nor are they to be flung across a Conference because a Bishop announces one hundred changes are needed in this Conference before the first cabinet meeting. Some Bishops, when first elected, seem to think the cure for all ills in a Conference is to move the ministers. This fever holds them for two or three years; then they learn that many ills are unaffected by this call for self-denial, self-sacrifice and suffering on the part of loyal, devout servants of God, who have excelled any Bishop in the College in their years of toil and self-sacrifice. Woe betide the church when this becomes the whole policy, the only wisdom a Bishop attains after a quadrennium in the exercise of appointing men. If a Bishop has to move more men the second successive year he presides over a Conference, it shows that his first year has proven a misconception of the situation, or else his mania for moving men is incurable.

If there was a veto lodged with the cabinet, it would, first, force the Bishop to read over the appointments in full to the cabinet, thereby obviating mistakes, unnecessarily long moves, and hard moves for the ministers. No two, four or six men would be left stranded like itinerant hobos, without an appointment. No ruthless appointment, whereby men are degraded or taken from a superior appointment and read out to one far inferior. There are grades in the ministry; men who have worked up from the mission, backwoods circuit, to the double station, then the station, and the presiding eldership. After one, by improving his talents, has made himself capable of filling the highest places for usefulness, it is a cruel and ruthless injustice to put him down in mid-career to a lower grade appointment by a Bishop whose whole wisdom runs to changing men.

Second—The presiding elder is held responsible for many of these needless moves, when he did not dream of their being made. When, in some instances, the man is put down where the elder counsels the Bishop to send him, then dismissing the elder, the Bishop rewrites the whole list of appointments and changes many men without advising anyone whatever, thereby practicing a species of deception unworthy of the high office. Either give the presiding eldership a degree of co-ordinate power if he is to be held responsible for appointments, or else get rid of the elders and let the stewards and itinerants go direct to the Bishop.

Third—The approach of laymen has been invited, so that stewards of third-rate appointments can go to Conference and prove all sufficient to get the man they call for, and it is a noted fact that all the main stations of a Conference have become largely congregational, as often they select an itinerant in a neighboring Conference, hear him by committee or through their presiding elder, then ask the Bishop to transfer the man for their station. In many forms this prearrangement occurs. In the meanwhile there is a vast number of itinerants who depend wholly on their presiding elder to represent their case and cause in the cabinet meeting, and the Bishop hugging his "scrip" to prevent the elders from knowing the appointments he is making, when lo! the appointments as finally read are a surprise to the whole body of elders, and surprises to the Bishop himself, who finds he has put two men down at the same place, or left out a few altogether. Now, the day for such autocratic methods is past, and should be relegated to the shades of oblivion or some other foreign mythological land.

A Bishop has no court to call his administration into question. There should be some law whereby the administration of a Bishop could be called in question annually. Every minister is reviewed annually as to both moral character and official administration, but a Bishop only at the end of the quadrennium, after four years of administration is past, does his character come into review.

If a Bishop should leave two, four, six, ten or fifty men without appointments, there is no recourse for those men, no way to call that Bishop to account, no punishment for such negligence or carelessness that is criminal. Why should men who have seen far more self-denial and self-sacrifice than the Bishop be subjected to such treatment without recourse? —

Again, what a world of unnecessary suffering would be prevented by such a check on the appointing power, for no Bishop has more knowledge and godly judgment than five, six or seven elders, who know their Conference and men far better than he can ever know them.

A Conference was presided over by a novice in the office, who, like all young Bishops, acted as if he felt his courage and wisdom would be discounted if his presidency is not followed by a general move, so this Conference found all but thirty men out of one hundred and fifty moved, many unnecessary, many misfits, many at great self-sacrifice. The next year fully half had to be moved to modify the mistakes and misfits; it took three years to undo the misfits and needless changes of that Bishop. In some of our Conferences it will take this long to get rid of the effects of the autocratic rule that hears all advice more freely than that from the presiding elders.

As one who claims as much loyalty and love for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as any elder in it, be he Bishop or what not, my prayer is that our present method of appointment may be modified so as to be preserved intact and our church not become as congregational as our sister, the M. E. Church, has become to a great extent. Furthermore, it is to be devoutly hoped that those who may be elevated to the high and sacred office of Bishop may be selected from those who are in full sympathy with the great body of our itinerancy—men from the active ranks; not men who have been so long removed from itinerant work that they have forgotten how it feels to receive a regular appointment. Those long-ago itinerants are out of sympathy with the great body of the rank and file. What do they know of sacrifice for the church in taking appointments? What they once knew is now a memory.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

I have mailed to each one of our pastors a copy of our new catalogue. Please send me the names of boys who ought to go off to school.

In two weeks the contractor will turn over to us the completed fourth story of our building. With this added space, we can accommodate forty additional boarders. If our pastors will help us, we shall have little difficulty in filling all our rooms. Will you not speak to some boy to-day, Brother Pastor?

Fraternally, W. L. WEBER.

OXFORD DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

In the quiet inland village of Paris, twelve miles east of Water Valley, has just been held the fourth session of the Oxford District Conference. Difficulty of access militated against a good attendance, but the seclusion and warm-hearted appreciation of those worthy country folk doubtless did much to conduce to the quality of the Conference.

Serious illness in the family of Rev. J. E. Cunningham, the presiding elder, precluded his presence, and Rev. J. M. Wyatt was elected president. Rev. G. W. Bachman, once preacher in charge of the circuit in whose bounds we met, was on hand with the books. Rev. W. M. Williams represented the Orphanage. President W. L. Clifton, Grenada College, and Rev. R. P. Neblett appeared in behalf of the Sunday School Board.

The preaching was fervent and evangelistic. Revs. Park, Strickland, Bell, Poston, Robertson, Broom, Nelson, Bachman and Borders being called on for this service. The reports were gratifying as showing considerable progress in every department of activity. The discusisons were spirited and pointed, but the utmost harmony prevailed and the entire meeting was a feast of brotherly love.

Two promising young men were licensed to preach: T. L. Porter and S. E. Galloway. Neither of these contemplate immediate application for admission on trial, but both avow their purpose to do so eventually.

A memorial service was held in honor of the late Rev. Amos Kendall, Bishop Charles B. Galloway and Rev. G. M. Lagrone. The tributes paid to these men of precious and sainted memory were tender and touching.

Selecting Abbeville as the place of meeting for the next Conference we adjourned to carry away happy memories of delightful hospitality and fellowship, and with fresh inspiration and courage.

VALUE OF THE EVENING TOILET.

It has been wisely said that when one pauses to consider that a third of the twenty-four hours are spent in sleep, it is surely not too much to meet the rest time in a clean condition, and in these days of universal bathrooms and of conveniences generally, there is no excuse for untidy retirement. Three things are necessary to health, cleanliness, pure air, and proper diet and they are necessary to good looks as well. If the skin is not bathed often, it fails to act, then the liver becomes sluggish also, and numerous ills follow in its train. If one can spare the time, an hour spent on the toilet before sleeping pays a thousand-fold, for if one can take a good bath the body has been cleansed and soothed, and the nervous strain of a busy day has been removed, and if you will notice, all high price toilet preparations demand cleanliness as a first principle. After the bath, the teeth should be thoroughly brushed and an antiseptic spray should clean both nostrils and throat alike, and there is nothing better to use than boiled water in which a little borax is dissolved. If one cannot take a full bath, one can surely take time to care for the teeth, hair, face and hands. The best way to keep the skin white and firm, is to first bathe with warm, soft water, and good toilet soap to get rid of all dust and soil of the day. Then rinse carefully in cold water with a little borax in it as the hot water opens and cleans the pores of the skin and the cold water closes them again. Borax not only softens the water but it helps to keep the skin white and firm, and a beauty specialist says that in many cases this washing and rinsing would be quite enough without the facial cream. To keep the body clean is to keep it healthy. More than that, it is to keep the mind bright, as circulation is stimulated, the skin massaged and the tissues hardened. The woman who devotes a little time to her evening toilet will not only look better, but she will also sleep better and and awaken brighter in the morning. M. H.

THE MAN AT HOME.

That the woman should never be unmindful of her domestic duties, and that she cannot truly serve God while she neglects her home, no man in his normal frame of mind has ever doubted. The domestic woman is loved and praised, for everybody—at least every man—is anxious that women should always excel in such virtues. But is it possible that such virtues should ever characterize one sex much more than the other?

A pair of cardinals built a nest in a rosebush by my window. Sitting on her nest, the female was so well hidden that even a hawk could never have found her. But her mate—he was not hidden. Dressed in his flaming coat, he loved to sit in the top of a tree nearby, an object that no hawk could fail to see, uttering often notes so loud and clear that everything that had ears was bound to hear them. His song was: "You need not look for my wife; she is not to be found. But here I am; all your bird-eaters, get me if you can." Nature had gifted him with beauty and with song that he might be a lure to draw the enemies of his house upon himself. Moreover he was not only a warrior, with his brave heart and gaudy uniform; but when there was a nest to build or fledglings to feed, he was as faithful a drudge as ever carried grass or worms. He does all, not only without a word of complaint, but with a song that is the outflowing of irrepressible joy.

It is possible for a man to be inferior to a bird; but it is not necessary; nor is it necessary for him to be inferior to a woman even in domestic virtues, nor are such virtues required of him less than of her. One domestic duty, that neither men nor women remember, is the duty of taking life as a joy and of making it a joy. A sacrifice made sorrowfully is only half a sacrifice; a sacrifice made complainingly is spoiled in the making. "Live joyfully with the wife thou lovest," and be so joyful in bearing domestic burdens that the example of joyful duty may become infectious, that the infection may spread at least to your wife and children. Why should a man be less than a bird!—Christian Advocate.

FAITHFUL.

Amanda Jones was born in Madison County, Mississippi. Twenty-six years ago she came into the service of my family. With the exception of a few months she has been with us during all these years. There was never a more competent and more faithful servant than she was. Indeed so correct was her general conduct that we came to regard her more as a friend than as a servant. She was a woman of unusual good sense. Her integrity was conspicuous, and her honesty was never questioned. Whether we were absent a day or a night, or for weeks at a time we knew that everything was safe in her keeping.

Beyond question she would have died for any member of my family. All of our children were nursed by her, and she served us in every possible way.

She was never known to slight her work, and many were the times when the mid-night hour, and later found her still toiling because she would not be content till it was done perfectly.

When severe sickness for weary weeks and long months held us in its grasp and a dark cloud of dread apprehension hung over us like a pall that might at any moment fall with blinding and crushing force, nothing could have been more beautiful and more helpful than the fidelity of her service. Day and night every interest of the home and the welfare of all its inmates commanded her supreme devotion and untiring effort. Mrs. Bingham could not have nursed her own sister with more faithfulness and tenderness than she did Amanda in her last illness.

Our lives have been wonderfully, sometimes I think singularly, blessed with rich friendships. I am sure that we had no sincerer friend than this humble black woman. True, she tried us many times because she had an almost uncontrolable temper. But now as we look upon the body that served us with unfaltering devotion, and the hands that often grew weary, but never ceased in making things to please us, we do not regret any act of forbearance.

When one stands where the light of two worlds falls there is no regret for any magnanimous act, or for any kindness shown, or for any patience exercised. Not one of us is ashamed of the fact that deep grief and sincere sorrow wrung our hearts, and we could not partake of the evening meal when this devoted servant and faithful friend went away from us. We made no attempt to conceal our tears. Indeed, we would despise ourselves if we could lose so true a friend without the fountain of our emotions being stirred to its profoundest depths.

After a few days of sickness she went to her reward on Sunday afternoon, June 18, 1909.

Through the long sad hours of that lonely Sunday night my children kept the vigil by her bier. On Monday we had our pastor, Rev. R. L. Allen, to conduct the obsequies in our parlors. We were glad thus to express our profound respect for the memory of her who for a quarter of a century had loved us better than she did her own life.

I and my sons, whom she had seen grow to manhood with as much pride as their own parents felt, were her pall-bearers. We followed her to the cemetery and covered her grave with flowers.

For many years she had been a member of the Colored Methodist Church, and one of its most liberal supporters.

Being unusually efficient she commanded the highest wages for the class of service she rendered. Industrious and frugal, she carefully saved her earnings, and then distributed with a lavish hand, giving away every dollar that she made. Knowing all this, it was a pleasure to provide for her a home, and to meet every want of her last sickness, and to see that her burial was such as it should be.

Nowhere is there a promise to the perfect, but there is a sure promise to the faithful. Amanda Jones was faithful.—J. R. Bingham, in Carrollton Conservative.

"Power for Service."

This is a book of 261 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It is from the press of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE ADVOCATE.

Dear Brethren: A ruling of the postoffice department at Washington made about two years ago forced our publisher, Mr. C. O. Chalmers, in the early part of 1908 to strike from the subscription list, first and last, about two thousand names. This was very much regretted, for the majority of these subscribers were good—only a little slow in paying up. But it could not be helped. We had to do it, else pay one cent on each paper sent out every week—an expense the ADVOCATE could not afford. Of course, with few exceptions, these subscribers were permanently lost. Added to this is the fact that many subscribers received in 1907 at low club rates failed to renew, and they too were cut off. Thus the Publisher was compelled to report to the Publishing Committee in 1908 the lowest number of subscribers on the list since his connection with the paper.

But we are glad to report that through the efforts of strong and willing friends, we have about regained what we lost, and to-day, we are sending to subscribers about as many papers as at any time in the history of the ADVOCATE. We desire to largely increase the number of our readers. We would like to send the paper into many more Methodist homes. There is no more favorable time to canvass than now—now while protracted and revival meetings are being held all over our territory. Many persons can be induced to take a religious paper during a good revival that could not be induced to do so at any other time. We beg our brethren to try it. Perhaps as much money cannot be collected now as later in the year, but more good promises can be obtained. And, much cash can be collected. In this dull season, cash is very much needed. Especially can our brethren in the country give us help right now. Please try it.

In this connection, the Publisher desires us to say that the club rates which have been given will hold good all through the season, but that, after due consideration, he has concluded to reduce single subscriptions from two dollars, to one dollar and fifty cents a year. It is a little risky to make this reduction just now, considering the high price of labor and materials, etc., but he feels that this is due many subscribers—who deal directly with the Publisher, and not through the preachers.

We would like to secure three thousand subscribers between now and the first day of December. In our patronizing territory we have 503 effective itinerant preachers, besides thirty-six supplies, many of whom are good canvassers and friends of the ADVOCATE. An average of six subscribers from each will give us a larger number than we ask. The work can be done. Who will help to bring about such a result?

Dear brother preachers, to do this work would help the ADVOCATE and be a blessing to you and your people. Will you try it for the work's sake?

Your fellow servant in Christ,

JNO. W. BOSWELL.

A MATTER OF SERIOUS IMPORT.

A communication of a very serious nature has been made to the public. It is to the effect that confessions made to a Roman Catholic priest are "privileged communications," and that under no circumstances will the priest divulge them. This bit of information was made to the public in connection with the details of the hanging of an Italian who had been convicted of taking part in the kidnapping and murdering of a little Italian boy in New Orleans two years ago. The condemned man, up to the day of his execution, had never made any sort of a confession to anybody. It was stated in the Times-Democrat that he would make a confession on that day, if at all, to the priest who was his "spiritual adviser," but, it was also stated that the confession, being made to a priest, would never be made known to the public, because of its privileged character.

As we understood the reporter, emphasis was laid on the privileged character of the confession, because made to a Roman Catholic priest, leaving the public to infer that only confessions made to a Roman Catholic priest can be thus sacredly guarded. Whether that was said by the reporter, wittingly, or that the idea was in his imagination, we do not undertake to say. It can hardly be that the law grants such dignity or importance to clergymen of any denomination. It would be against public policy. We can readily see how a confession of a purely personal nature, made by persons to a priest or other minister, may be held as privileged—not to be divulged but when the public is concerned, and public safety and justice demands the arrest and punishment of guilty parties, if the confession reveals to the priest or minister the names of the guilty ones, we do not see how, in good conscience, the priest or minister can withhold the knowledge from those who have a right to know.

And if one can rightly hold such secrets, any man without respect for human life, and bent on crime, but afraid of the great hereafter, may kill his fellow being, or commit other heinous crime, make confession, receive absolution, and, if undetected, live with a good conscience, and kill another man the first opportunity.

If the law of the land upholds a Roman Catholic priest in keeping secrets, merely because the Roman Catholic Church maintains the confessional, then the law protects a form of religion which, in that respect, is contrary to public policy. We do not believe that it does.

THE BURDEN OF THE PRESIDING ELDERSHIP.

Is the presiding eldership a burden to the Church? Were the office abolished, would the money now paid to presiding elders go to increase the salary of pastors, or would it be a clear saving to the Church?

For years past we have heard much about abolishing the office of presiding elder. Every man who favors such action, as far as we have seen, presents as his principal argument the expensiveness of the office. The amount paid to presiding elders, it is said, is not only large, but out of proportion to the value of the service rendered. And more than once it has been asserted that the presiding elder takes bread from the pastor's family. Every argument of this character proceeds upon the principle that, by abolishing the office of presiding elder, the Church will be relieved of the support of the men who fill it. That is really equivalent to saying that the men who fill the office of presiding elder are just so many men above the number required to do the work of the Church—supernumeraries to be retired when the office is discontinued. Such is not the case.

The presiding elder is an itinerant preacher, subject to appointment, and should the office be abolished, everyone, unless enfeebled by age or sickness, would not only drop back into the pastorate, but into a good, paying charge. In that case, how much would the Church save? Let us make a calculation. Take, for example, one of our Conferences with eight Districts. It pays eight presiding elders $13,623, an average of $1702 (we leave off fractions). The eight leading appointments, measured by the salary, pay $13,400, an average of $1675 to each pastor. That would be a saving to the whole Conference of $223, an average to each District of $27.87 1-2. That would be less than one dollar and fifty cents to each pastoral charge—an amount too small to be considered.

But suppose these presiding elders should be assigned to leading charges paying the smallest salaries—$1200. The eight would receive $9600. That would be a saving to the Conference of $4123, or an average to each District of $502, and a fraction—about $25 to each pastoral charge—an amount still too small to justify the abolition of an office essential to Episcopal Methodism. We say this, because our itineracy absolutely demands a representative of the preachers and pastoral charges, if the appointment of the preachers is to continue in the hands of the Episcopacy. This we think is conceded. At least, up to this time nobody has suggested the abolition of the Episcopacy.

Those who favor doing away with the presiding eldership, themselves concede the necessity for some form of District superintendency. The prevailing notion among them being the appointment of one of the pastors in each District to act as presiding elder—his business being to hold Quarterly Conferences, look after the temporal and spiritual interests of the Church, and to represent the preachers and charges to the Episcopacy. Even this form of superintendency will cost something—perhaps more in the long run than the presiding eldership under the present regime. What District in Southern Methodism would think of assessing an average of less than $25 to each pastoral charge for the travelling expenses etc., of the presiding elder. Take this amount in connection with the amount paid him by his own pastoral charge, it will be seen that this form of service will cost about as much as the presiding eldership as it is now maintained. Nor would it in our opinion be any more satisfactory. We feel sure it would not be anything like as efficient as the office now is when filled by thoroughly competent men.

Other ground than that of cost must be presented before those who would abolish the presiding eldership can make good their contention.

PERSONAL.

Some time, late in August, we expect to publish a special edition in the interest of the mission fields of Louisiana and the Gulf Coast.

Rev. M. M. Black is at his post, Port Gibson, Miss., and doing his part of the work. He writes that his "congregations are holding up well in spite of the hot weather."

Rev. J. E. Denson, presiding elder of the Crowley District, paid the Advocate a visit last week. He reported the district as doing well. We thank him for his brotherly call.

Rev. J. A. Rice, D.D., is one of the instructors at the Assembly for Christian Workers at the Seashore Camp Ground this week, and is making a deep impression on those who hear him.

Rev. E. L. Alford, of the Osyka Circuit, Mississippi Conference, closed last week a very successful meeting at one of his churches. He was assisted by Rev. J. B. King, of Topisaw.

If Brother R. N. Jeffrey fails to receive a letter calling for his services, and his eye falls on this, will he please get in communication with Rev. W. W. Graves, Homewood, Miss., and oblige.

Rev. J. B. Copeland, of far away Honduras, has forwarded us one dollar, United States currency, for the Galloway Memorial Church. We pass it on the treasurer, J. R. Bingham, Carrollton, Miss. We would be glad for him to have thousands more right away.

On reaching our office this (Monday) morning we found a card bearing the name of W. H. Hunter, Nashville. Our old friend, "Brother Will," had called in our absence. We regret much that we missed seeing him. We thank him for the honor of a visit.

Four delegates from the Epworth League at the Mary Werlein Mission have been sent to the Assembly for Christian Workers, now in session at the Seashore Camp Ground. The representatives are the Misses Annie Lampard, Belle Tankersley, Mabel Whitehead and Lilly Campbell.

Rev. C. B. Carter, Commissioner of education for the Louisiana Conference, called at the office while passing through the city on his way to the Seashore Camp Grounds. He is very cheerful and hopeful as to the outlook for Centenary College. An enrollment of at least 150 is looked for this fall.

A good brother, in renewing his subscription, thus expresses himself: "Please continue sending me the Advocate. Its weekly visit to my home is like the coming of some absent loved one, always laden with good things for the hungry mind. May it always continue good and strong as it grows older."

The Cleveland (Miss.) camp meeting begins as this Advocate goes to press, Wednesday, the 28th, and will continue until Aug. 8. The Camp Meeting Association has made ample preparation for all who may attend, there being two dormitories, one for men and one for women, and other modern conveniences. A large attendance and a good meeting are looked for.

Dr. Sawyer returned Monday from Carson, La., where he assisted Rev. J. C. Rousseaux in a meeting of about ten days. He says it was a good meeting and deep interest manifested and souls saved. The pastor decided to go on with his meeting through this week. He says that Brother Rousseaux is in great favor with his people and is doing fine work at both Carson and Bon Ami.

Rev. L. C. Wilson, of Amite, and family are off for a short vacation. At present they are at Iuka, Miss., from there Brother Wilson will visit his old home in Arkansas. It was the editor's pleasure to minister to his people last Sunday, as he did the Sunday previous to the good people of Tickfaw. The church at Amite is a new structure and one of the most beautiful we have seen.

We had the pleasure on Monday morning last of a ride with Rev. A. W. Turner, of Opelousas. He was going home from Kentwood, where he had spent a week or more with Rev. J. W. Lee in a revival. It was a good meeting. The revival spirit pervaded the church and got hold of the people generally. Souls were converted and added to the Lord. Brother Turner was very happy over the gracious results.

Under date of July 23, Rev. H. J. Maddox, of Waynesboro, Miss., writes: "Our revival meeting at Hebron closed yesterday with success in every respect. To say that the preaching was done by our beloved presiding elder, Brother W. H. Lewis, explains that it was done well. We all love and appreciate him. A goodly number saved, and the Church greatly revived. Three accessions, and eight children dedicated by baptism."

Rev. J. W. Chisolm, Edinburg, Miss., has sent in his second list of subscriptions and renewals for this year. In the last list is the name of Brother James Ray, who says: "I cannot do without the Advocate; I have spent over $100 for it; have been taking it ever since it started, except while it was stopped during the civil war." Brother Chisolm has sent us an excellent picture of Brother Ray, with which, in a short time, we expect to adorn the pages of the Advocate.

Rev. A. C. Holder, Leesville, La., brings us under obligation for a list of twenty-two new subscribers, with the promise of a "few more later on." Brother Holder has just closed a meeting in which there were over one hundred conversions of persons ranging from six to sixty years of age. In this meeting he was assisted by Mr. James W. Chapman, son of a Texas preacher—"a cultured young man with rare talent as a singer." We thank Brother Holder for the good news, and also for the new subscribers.

Through the courtesy of the author, we have received a copy of a "Sermon Memorial of Bishop Chas. B. Galloway," preached at Rolling Fork, Miss., by Rev. E. H. Mounger, D.D., of the Mississippi Conference, May 23, 1909, and printed at Nashville, Tenn, by Smith & Lamar, Agents. This is a sermon of great beauty, and evidently preached from the heart of Dr. Mounger, as well as from his head, for he loved the most loving man of our day. We thank Dr. Mounger for his kindness in favoring us with this memorial.

Rev. N. G. Augustus, presiding elder of the Durant District, is maintaining his reputation as an "untiring worker." His District Conference, recently held, was "a good conference," and "good reports were made by all the preachers." The General Secretary of the Laymen's Movement, Mr. W. B. Stubbs, was present. One whole day, July 2, was given to the laymen, and they improved the time. Hon. G. L. Jones, the Conference leader, was also present. And Dr. Winton, of the Christian Advocate, added to the success of the Conference.

Rev. Robt. Selby informs us of the death of Mr. A. H. Campbell, which occurred on the night of July 21 at the home of his daughter, Mrs. H. P. Lewis, wife of our pastor at Pearl Street, Natchez, and adds: "His sons, Rev. J. W. Campbell, of the Washington charge, and Fred., of Newton, were with him several days before his death. Another son, Bert, who is seeking the recovery of his health at Colorado Springs, Col., could not be at his bedside. Besides these, his widow mourns the departure of a devoted husband. Mr. Campbell died in the triumph of the Christian faith."

We print "An Open Letter" in this issue from a faithful layman, an old Confederate veteran, believing it will do good. We would like for every friend of the Advocate to read it. But we beg, one and all, not to catch the idea that all who are behind in payment for their paper are a year or more behind. Such is not the case. Under the late ruling of the Postal Department, the publisher tries not to allow subscribers to get more than a year behind. Many are cut off, except for special reason, and the Advocate loses the amount due. He holds them awhile, hoping they will pay up. What about it, dear friends? YOU!

REV. J. A. PARKER, D.D.

We publish this week the portrait of Rev. J. A. Parker, D.D., one of the veterans in the Louisiana Conference. We give below a brief sketch of the life of this veteran of the cross:

Rev. J. A. Parker is 72 years old; was licensed to preach in 1857; joined the Alabama Conference in 1860; was in the Confederate Army as a private soldier until discharged in 1862. When sufficiently recovered to return to the army, he was sent by Bishop Andrew as missionary to Clayton's Division, in which work he remained to the close of the war. In 1867 he was appointed presiding elder on the Pensacola District for the purpose of reorganizing that district and recovering church property confiscated under the Staunton-Ames order. Having accomplished this, he was transferred in 1870 by Bishop McTyeire to the Little Rock Conference, where he labored six years as pastor and presiding elder. In 1876 he was again transferred by Bishop Wightman to the Louisiana Conference, where he has labored on circuits and districts. Having no taste for city work, he filled but few stations, though he has preached in nearly all the city churches in the State.

Having a growing family, after the close of the war, he found it necessary to supplement his support from other sources than the pastorate. He chose the legal profession as the means to this end, but never permitted it to interfere with his pastoral or pulpit duties.

After seven years of this strenuous life, he was sufficiently recovered from the financial depletion resulting from the war to retire from the legal profession.

Brother Parker has been much in demand on camp meeting, school commencement and dedication occasions. He has written a great deal for our church periodicals, and is the author of a book on the origin and development of church doctrine and polity.

His brethren have honored Brother Parker with a seat in the General Conference twice, and elected him as one of the delegates to the great Missionary Convention at New Orleans in 1901, where he was one of the speakers under the five-minute rule.

Brother Parker received his degree of D.D. from Hiwassee College in 1894. He has been twice married—first to Miss Martha J. Culliver, who died at Milton, Fla. His second wife, Miss Eliza Penn, is still with him, and, in his present affliction (a partial blindness coming suddenly), does all his reading and writing for the pulpit work and social and business correspondence.

CAMP MEETINGS.

Topisaw Camp Meeting.

The Camp Meeting at Topisaw, Felder's Camp Ground, will begin on Friday night, Aug. 6, 1909.

The Rev. Walter G. Harbin, of Haynesville, La., will be the principal leader, with as many of the ministers of the Brookhaven District and of the entire Mississippi Conference as may come.

We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren to join us in this revival. We ask all Christians everywhere to pray for the success of the meeting and all who can to come and help us. We are expecting a glorious meeting.

You have a special invitation to attend these services. J. B. KING, Pastor.

TOPIC FOR AUGUST 1, 1909.

THE NEARNESS OF EXTREMITY TO OPPORTUNITY

John v:1-16.

According to his custom, the Master went up to one of the feasts at Jerusalem. By the side of the pool Bethesda he saw an impotent man, who had suffered thirty-eight years. It was believed that at certain times when the waters were troubled, whoever first stepped into the water would be healed. This man was too badly crippled to help himself to the water and he lingered in a helpless despair. But when hope had reasonably been abandoned, the Christ came that way, and asked of the man, "Wilt thou be made whole?" At the command of the Master, "Rise, take up thy bed and walk," the man was at once healed and carried away his bed, rejoicing in his new found strength. When the Jews took the man to task for carrying his couch on the Sabbath, he could not tell who it was that had healed him. Afterward, Jesus revealed himself to the man, and commanded him to sin no more, lest a worse fate come upon him.

2. It has been well said, that man's extremity is God's opportunity.

Men are not apt to turn to God until they realize that they cannot do for themselves. In the miracle of our lesson, apparently, the crippled man had no thought of seeking for help, but the great heart of divine compassion saw the conquered soul, and unsought, gave the blessing. The apostle Paul puts this same truth in other words, when he voices the message of the Spirit, "My strength is made perfect in weakness." We have a lesson, often overlooked in the life of Moses. In his own strength, in the vigor of young manhood, he tried to solve the problems of his captive brethren. As a result he spent forty years in exile in the desert. Then when he had lost all confidence in his own strength, by the burning bush, he received his commission to go and deliver Israel in God's strength and in the matchless ways of divine power.

3. The soul delivered out of great deeps to-day, should not look for a similar deliverance to-morrow, if through its own fault the troubles come. The Master warned this man, "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon you." The favors of our Lord are for humility and obedience, and not for presumption. The Master himself, refused to tempt divine power. He said, "It is written, thou shalt not tempt the Lord, thy God."

4. The heart of omnipotence is touched with the frailties and needs of his creatures. The same heart that was touched with the needs of the impotent man by the pool of Bethesda, that day now long gone, is touched with the needs of every one of his creatures to-day. When our hearts are crushed with the burdens that rest upon them, he is willing to do for us all we will permit. Sometimes our foolish pride, and lack of faith stands in the way. Sometimes we would turn and forget God, if we received the help we seek. Throughout the ages, not a few times has it been true, that with the granted request, there came also leanness of soul. The Master is willing and able to do for us, far more than we can ask or think.

OLIVE BRANCH, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: As the protracted meetings are always looked forward to in a little town or country community, as one of the spiritual milestones of the year—so to us in our little town of the Olive Branch charge the services of this year were looked forward to as a time when we would be refreshed and re-baptized with power from on high, feeling that our frail human strength needed the refreshing showers to help us toward a fuller and more consecrated life, and that the moving of the Spirit might be felt in its effectual power, deep in the hearts of our dear Leaguers, who had not enthroned the Christ in their lives. And, too, that our little town might be drawn into that closer and warmer Christian brotherhood that knows neither sect nor denomination, but is one in Christ Jesus.

Our efficient and beloved pastor secured the services of our friend, Brother Borders, of Holly Springs, who came to us on Monday morning the 5th and worked faithfully for us and with us until Friday night. His were strong, forceful God-inspiring sermons, awakening the inner recesses of our souls to a fuller realization of our duty as Christians, coupled with a firm determination to lead more godly lives, and follow in the footsteps of Jesus more closely, to put forth more effort to help build up God's kingdom, and stretch out a hand of sympathy and love to those who need sometimes only a smile of encouragement.

Brother Border's sermons were marked with a peculiar significance in the selection of his subjects, thus his first sermon (to the church) "Therefore came I unto you, without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for; I ask therefore, for what intent ye have sent for me?" Acts x:29. "The fallow ground." "He pitched his tent toward Sodom," Gen. xiii:12. "Thou art weighed in the balance and art found wanting."

While in the strict sense of the word the meeting was not the success we had hoped and prayed for, it was not the fault of Brother Borders nor of our pastor. But more the conditions we labored under, threatening weather, rain, extreme heat, sickness, busy times with farmers, but not least the inertia of the church.

Three joined the church by profession of faith and two by letter. Our people were deeply impressed by Brother Borders as a man and preacher of ability. We like him and will welcome him back to our homes and town.

MRS. P. B. JONES.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address:

Obituaries.

Miss LULA ALLRED born Jan. 25, 1878, and died Nov. 18, 1908. At the age of thirteen she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and from that day lived an exemplary Christian life. Lula was a girl that everybody loved who knew her. She was always thoughtful of her church, which she loved as dearly as she loved her own life. Her presence always afforded the preacher inspiration; the church's burden were her burdens; and the church's work, the work she loved above any other. Do we miss her? Yes, we miss her, but after several years of suffering, bearing it with that patience and resignation that characterizes every true child of God, she was set free from pain and sorrow, and her sweet spirit went to that home where, there is no more sickness where "sorrow and sighing shall flee away," and only "the redeemed shall walk there." She leaves a mother, two brothers, and a sister, with many other relatives and friends to mourn her absence. Dear, sorrowing ones, weep not as those who have no hope. Some day, in God's own good time, and in his own well appointed way, we may all come to the beautiful gate, where Lula, clothed with immortality, will greet you. Lula, farewell, but not forever. Her last pastor,

R. W. THURMAN.

Brother JAMES A. BENNETT, Sr., was born in North Carolina, Aug. 17, 1832, and died at his home near Madison Station, Madison County, Miss., Jan. 16, 1909. He was married to Miss Julia A. Goodloe, Mar. 30, 1865, and to them were born eight children, three of whom, with their mother, survive to mourn his going. Brother Bennett joined the Methodist Church in his boyhood and reconsecrated his life to the church during the stormy years of the Civil War, in which he served four years. He lived and died in the church, always giving liberally of his time, talents and money for her advancement. I knew Brother Bennett only during his last illness being his pastor for only about three weeks before his death, but during that time he exhibited the most beautiful Christian fortitude and resignation, he was as joyous and happy as if preparing for a visit to his children or to the home of his best friend. His faith never wavered, his hope grew brighter and his going was as quiet and peaceful as the gentle sleep of a babe. Our brother is very greatly missed in his community as a citizen, neighbor, and friend for he was a friend alike to the rich and poor, the old and young, the great and small, and the white and black. And the church has lost one of her strongest supporters. Our sympathies go out to the bereaved ones and we point them to the one whom he believed.

IN MEMORIUM.

Whereas God, our Heavenly Father, hath seen fit to take from our midst our sister and Christian worker, Mrs. ELLA REEDER EDMISTON, be it resolved by the Ladies Aid of the Methodist Church, of Fernwood, Miss.:

First, That we humbly bow in submission to the will of our Father, who knoweth all things and who doeth all things well.

Second, That we shall always miss her sweet, loving and ministering presence from among us, and that in her true Christian life we have had a noble example, the influences of which eternity alone can reveal.

Third, That we extend our deepest sympathy to the broken-hearted husband and son, the aged mother, and to the sister and brothers and commend them to him who errs not and who said, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

Fourth, That these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, a copy be sent to the family, and published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions of respect to the memory of CHAS. WILSON RANKIN:

We, the undersigned committee, appointed by the superintendent of the Magee Sunday School M. E. Church, South, to draft resolutions in memory of Chas. Wilson Rankin, who departed this life July 3, 1909, report the following:

Whereas, we are called upon to mourn the death of our brother and fellow worker in our Sunday School and whereas, our vision is so limited that we do not understand the providences of God in taking from our midst one who was in the prime of life and who was so useful among his fellow-men, however, we bow in humble submission to the divine will of God. Therefore, be it resolved

First, That we take this method of expressing our appreciation of his worth as a Sunday School worker. He was a true type of Christian manhood, and exercised that charity towards his fellow-men which is so essential in every Christian life. He was a loving son and a devoted and affectionate husband.

Second, That we extend condolence to his bereaved loved ones, and mourn with them in their sorrow. But we desire to point them to the lowly Nazarene who is ever ready and present to protect and give comfort to those whose hearts are crushed by the loss of a loved one. Our prayer is that the loved ones may so live that when they shall reach the unknown shore they shall be wafted into God's presence, a re-united band to praise him forevermore.

Third, That these resolutions be spread upon the record of the Sunday School, and a copy be sent to the loved ones of the deceased, and that the New Orleans Christian Advocate and Magee Courier be requested to publish same.

J. J. CHILDRE,
H. G. ANDERSON,
MRS. J. L. NEILL.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas God, the all-wise ruler of heaven and earth saw fit to take from us at the early age of twenty-two, Mrs. ADDIE LIGHTSEY FOLEY, and while we lament her untimely death, we submit to the will of our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well, therefore, be it resolved

First, That in the death of Mrs. Foley our Sunday School and especially Class No. 7, has lost a true and faithful member, and one whose every impulse was prompted by friendship, love and truth.

Second, That we cherish her virtues and that we will earnestly strive to emulate the example of so consecrated a life.

Third, That while we deeply sympathize with the loved ones so sorely bereaved, we share with them the hope of a re-union in the better world where there are no more partings, and bliss ineffable forbids all tears.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the bereaved family, that they be published in the Jasper County Review and the New Orleans Christian Advocate; and that a copy be spread on the minutes of our Sunday School.

(Signed): Miss Leona Hutto, Mrs. C. R. Abney, Rev. A. J. Davis, committee for Class No. 7, of the Montrose Sunday School.

I know [illegible] living [illegible] fault [illegible] not fall [illegible] the right. Let our light shine, go to church when it is so, and we can invite the preacher home with us when he is left without excuse. I believe when God sends a man to preach he is not to have respect to persons, but go where he is needed most. Visit the sick, comfort the feeble-minded, teach them the way of truth, that they may be able to overcome the trials of this life, because this world is full of them. We need sympathy. Oh, how little we get, but on the other hand, we are abused for not doing a lot of things—such as giving to missions, paying to the preacher's salary, attending church regularly. But does the preacher understand the condition of things, has he been to the homes of the people? If so, he would find the cause.

Let the preacher and people get together and share one another's burdens. We need the preachers and need them badly if they will only do what God intends for them to do. Then they will be worthy of their hire. It is my duty to see that the preacher and his family are cared for and kept nicely. Then we can appreciate them and feel proud of them.

LESSON FOR AUGUST 1.

PAUL AT CORINTH—THE CLOSE OF THE SECOND MISSIONARY JOURNEY

Golden Text: "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." John xvi. 33.

Paul had much tribulation, his great sorrow bore down upon him with crushing force; but his was no selfish grief; he sorrowed that men rejected Him whose gospel he preached. He came to Athens alone, and alone he left for Corinth, sorrowing that those he had preached to were so hard to impress with a truth that had absorbed his own body, soul and spirit. Much learning of the worldly sort tends to build up pride, raising the mind to the planes from which the simple truths of religion appear unworthy the consideration of deep thought. It is this so-called learning, not being accompanied with consecration and prayer, that makes men so wise as to deny the divinity of Jesus, his birth a miracle, Lazarus raised from the dead, and the resurrection of the Son of God himself. It was this class of intellectual opposition that Paul found at Athens. He found the resistance at Corinth just as strong, but of a different nature. Corinth was a commercial center; people were busy with buying and selling; it was also a city of political importance—a better point than Athens for Paul to study the power and influence of Roman rule, and it is evident from all that follows in history that the earnest desire of Paul was to be prepared in every way for the great work that awaited him at Rome, hence the significance of his words * * * "After I have been there I must also see Rome." (Acts xix, 21.)

Another saying of his, written to the Corinthians in his first letter to them: "I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some," is connected in the mind with the manner in which he introduced himself to a busy and much occupied populace. He went to work at his trade, and the first to come in contact with him by this means, were two that afterwards showed the effect of his influence. Aquilla and Priscilla were also tent-makers, and it must have been while they all worked together that Paul found time to speak of the great burden that bore down upon his soul. In those days it was no disgrace to work. The Lord Jesus worked at his trade, and his followers would have done the same, even if it had not been the custom to have a trade. Among a busy people, Paul was as busy as any; at the same time praying in his heart for an opening of a door for the gospel. Making tents during the week, but very soon the Sabbath days found him in the synagogue "persuading the Jews and the Greeks." When Silas and Timothy came from Macedonia, they found Paul earnestly about his great mission. He must have been in some degree discouraged by his visit to Athens, and was the more earnest, and determined to make up at Corinth for what he deemed a loss at Athens. He was encouraged by the coming of his two fellow-workers, it seemed to rekindle his zeal and energy, for he was "pressed in the spirit." That would mean that his responsibility came before him with greater force, arousing him to boldness in proclaiming to the Jews that Jesus was Christ. To the Jews, for he knew that from them any opposition would first be shown. The opposition was very soon made manifest, for the Jews resisted his appeal with blasphemy. Paul was just as ready with his dealing with them, and at the very first of their antagonism, he clearly defined his intention as produced by the fierce and united rejection. To give great emphasis to his words, Paul shook his raiment and said, "Your blood be upon your own heads." It was the Jews first, to be shown that Jesus was Christ, but at their [illegible] he continues his words, hurling the responsibility upon them; he adds: "from henceforth, I will go unto the Gentiles." Was this not an indication of the fulfillment of the words in Jesus' parable of the Supper, when those that had been invited would not come? Paul was beginning to see the great things he must suffer for the name of Jesus; matters that formerly were of little moment, now gave him great concern. It is just so with every follower of Christ, and is a manifestation of a growth in grace. Brethren, are you "pressed in the spirit" that the work of the Lord does not prosper where you think it should? Then count it all joy, for "It is God that worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Paul, suiting his actions to his words, left the synagogue and went to the home of a Gentile nearby, not taking away the gospel from the Jews forever, but having it near them, so that when the long-suffering Almighty God shall call them, they will find peace and pardon at their very doors. Now was a time with Paul, when the consolation needed could not be given by any but by him for whom he labored; and from him it came that night in a vision. The Lord came and spoke to his desponding servant: "Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace: for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee; for I have much people in this city." There, Paul, Jesus came from heaven to tell you that, and Jesus knows just when to come. No man, that loves the Master and his work, need be afraid any time, or anywhere to speak and tell of his great salvation. There is a power in naming the name of Christ that existed always, exists in this great present-day of worldliness, and will always. No man shall set on him to hurt him that speaks to his fellowman of the blessings of religion. Then be about the Father's business, for he has much people in the teeming multitudes that come and go, crossing the pathway of the Christian every day. "I am with thee," he said to Paul, and he says it to everyone that loves and serves him. What more can he say? What more can we ask? O, come, let us kneel in thanksgiving that our faith brings the Comforter to our side, and he guides us into the truth of the prediction, and the promise that "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

God always gives us strength and sense enough for what he wants us to do. If we either tire ourselves or puzzle ourselves, it is our own fault.—Southern Churchman.

Certainly, in taking revenge a man is but even with his enemy, but in passing it over he is superior, for it is a prince's part to pardon.—Bacon.

WORK OF A GOOD MAN.

A few men now and then, here and there, realize the responsibility they owe to the world to be of some benefit to their fellow-men and some of the most conspicuous examples of this is Dr. B. M. Woolley, of Atlanta, Ga. Dr. Wolley is noted for his Christian integrity and fair dealing, being a highly-esteemed citizen of his home town where he has built up a reputation as a specialist for the cure of the liquor and drug habits. He has had more than a quarter of a century experience in the treatment of these terrible diseases. Dr. Woolley and his son, Dr. Vassar Woolley, conduct an elegantly-equipped sanitorium in Atlanta where hundreds of persons addicted to drugs and liquor are successfully treated every year. The average time required for treatment is thirty days except in extreme cases. Some time ago Dr. Woolley wrote and published a book on the effects of opium and liquor upon the human constitution. It brings out many facts not generally understood. If you happen to know of any person in your neighborhood to whom such a book would prove of value you will do him a great favor by sending his name and address to Dr. Wolley, 200 Lowndes Building, Atlanta, Ga., and the book will be sent postpaid with the author's compliments.

A PLAIN LETTER FROM A LAYMAN.

[illegible] Many church members are bringing reproach on the cause of Christ. Would to God that the preachers were so filled with the Holy Ghost, and their hearts so burdened for the salvation of lost souls that they would so preach and place such stress on these popular vices that those that are practicing them would be brought to a consciousness of the fact that they are not only on the road to hell themselves, but through their influence are carrying others with them. I've often wondered why the church is silent on the tobacco habit. Is it because she thinks it an inoffensive luxury, or is it so popular that God has taken no notice of it and that it will not be included in the catalogue of uncleanness and filthiness of the flesh? In that great day when we all must appear before God what shall we say? That we used it to satisfy our carnal desires, or that we used it because our preacher used it and said it was no harm.

The preacher who says that, has never considered its influence on his flock. If he has not got the backbone to speak out publicly against it's use and sale he ought to set an example of abstaining from it himself. I know it would render him very unpopular to preach against its use and sale, but he should remember that he is to declare the whole counsel of God. What disposition is he going to make of the tobacco traffic? He will tell you at once that the church has not declared against it and why should he? The man who has not seen the harm in the use of tobacco has never gotten out of the world and into Christ. If it is not harmful, why does the law forbid the sale of it to minors for the same reason that it forbids the sale of whisky to minors? The same motive that prompts a man to use whisky prompts him to use tobacco. It creates a thirst that nothing else can satisfy. The motive that prompts him to sell whisky prompts him to sell tobacco. There is profit in it. There is more profit in selling tobacco than there is in selling meat and lard, but, when I have taken your money for tobacco, I have given you nothing in return. Consequently, I am helping you to rob your wife and children of the necessities of life. Oftentimes I've seen men, both white and black, spend more money for tobacco than they would spend for the benefit of their families even when I knew that their families didn't have sufficient clothing to make them comfortable in winter. I have seen them spend more money in one year for tobacco than they spend for the gospel in five years. Nothing wrong in the use and sale of tobacco? Isn't it poison as well as offensive? Yes, so much so that you dare not take it in the stomach. If taken in the stomach as whisky, it would certainly kill. If it is no harm for me to use it, it is no harm for my wife, son or daughter to use it. If I use it and forbid them to use it, I have given proof to the fact that it is dangerous for them to use it or [illegible]

[illegible] What do you suppose that Christ would say when he comes should he find his ministers with their mouths full of the vile stuff? [illegible] the Lord Jesus Christ.

Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. There is money enough spent every year for tobacco to support missionaries in the foreign fields to the extent that the gospel might reach every heathen land at once. As it is, there is no one benefited except producer, manufacturer and seller. May God speed the time when everyone that professes to be a follower of Jesus will do all in his power to abolish the sale of whisky and tobacco.

REVIVAL AT HICKORY.

About two months ago we engaged to assist Brother H. Meilard in a meeting at Hickory, beginning Wednesday, July 7, and continuing 8 days; but the Campbellites began a meeting in their church in Hickory, Sunday, July 4 and continued through the week following, so our meeting didn't begin till Sunday the 11th inst. Our congregations were large from the initial service Sunday morning, which service was concluded with the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, many communicants partaking of the Holy rite. The Holy Spirit was present in all the services, and at times almost the whole congregation seemed under his control.

Because of engagements elsewhere, we were compelled to close the meeting Wednesday night, the 14th inst. Some of the tangible results of the meeting are: sixteen accessions to the church, fifteen on profession of faith and one by certificate; eight family altars pledged, and the spiritual life of the church greatly toned up.

In the business session of the Quarterly Conference which was held Wednesday afternoon, it was revealed that the pastor had been diligent and the stewards had not been thoughtless.

We carry with us many happy recollections of our sojourn and labors among the good people of Hickory. Theirs is a true type of genuine hospitality.

A GREAT TABERNACLE MEETING.

We have just closed a great meeting in Webb City, Mo. The meeting was held in a large wooden tabernacle under the auspices of the First Methodist Church. Rev. D. C. Dutton, the efficient pastor planned the meeting. There were fourteen services held daily in different parts of the city.

The crowds throughout the meeting were immense. Many times the large tabernacle would be filled and people turned away.

The entire city was stirred and felt its moral uplift. The number that were blessed ran into the hundreds. There were over a hundred united with the First Methodist Church, most of whom were adults. Among the people who were blessed were to be found [illegible]

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. [illegible] carrying the pipes to the property holders' line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

In this theatre of man's life it is reserved only for God and the angels to be lookers-on.—Bacon.

CHARTER
OF THE
National Co-Operative Development Company, Ltd.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
PARISH OF ORLEANS.

Be it known that [illegible] herein set forth.

ARTICLE I.

The name of this corporation shall be The National Co-Operative Development Co., Ltd. Its domicile shall be in the City of New Orleans, Louisiana. It shall have corporate existence for [illegible] years from the date hereof.

ARTICLE II.

The object and purpose for which this corporation is organized are to buy, sell, rent and lease all kinds of lands and to acquire by purchase [illegible] oils and gas of any lands that may be in and underneath lands and to sell the same either in their natural condition or in a manufactured condition.

ARTICLE III.

The capital stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at one million dollars ($1,000,000), to be represented by one hundred thousand (100,000) shares of the par value of ten dollars ($10) each. Each share of stock shall entitle its owner to one vote, either in person or by proxy, at all meetings of stockholders. This corporation shall commence business and be a going concern when five thousand dollars ($5,000) of said stock shall have been subscribed for.

ARTICLE IV.

There shall be a board of six directors of this corporation, in whom all its corporate powers shall be vested, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum. They shall select from among their number a President, Vice-President, Second Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, no two of which offices shall be held by the same person. Citation shall be served on the President; in his absence on the Vice-President, and in the absence of both of these on the Second Vice-President.

ARTICLE V.

The first board of directors of this corporation shall be Edwin J. Larkin, Charles A. Celestin, Leon E. Marion, Ambrose J. Guidry, Sidney Story and Philip H. Mentz; of whom Edwin J. Larkin shall be President, Charles A. Celestin shall be Vice-President, Leon E. Marion shall be Second Vice-President, Ambrose J. Guidry shall be Treasurer, and Sidney Story shall be Secretary. All of these directors and officers shall hold office until their respective successors shall have been elected.

ARTICLE VI.

On the first Monday of January, one thousand nine hundred and ten (1910), and annually thereafter, the stockholders shall meet and elect a board of directors; the secretary shall give ten (10) days prior notice of said meeting by mail to each stockholder, in which notice he shall state the place, date and time of said meeting. As soon as said directors are elected, they shall meet and select the officers of this corporation to serve until the next election thereof shall be had. The failure to hold the elections provided for in this article shall not dissolve this corporation, in that event the officers and directors then in office shall remain in office until their successors shall have been elected.

ARTICLE VII.

No stockholder of this corporation shall ever be held liable for the debts, defaults or obligations of this corporation in any greater sum than the unpaid balance of any subscription due by him on shares of the corporation owned by him.

ARTICLE VIII.

This done and passed at my notarial office in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, in the presence of H. A. Mentz and Edwin O. Cook, competent witnesses residing in this city, who hereto subscribe their names with said appearers and with me, said notary, after due reading.

"PROVE ALL THINGS; HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD."

WHOLE No. 2791.

DOES THIS APPEAL TO YOU?

Good Friend: Our elegant administration building shown on this page is being supplied with modern desks, blackboards and other necessary outfit, through the generous contributions of those who love struggling boys and girls in their brave fight for obtaining an education. The debt on the property itself, valued at $10,000.00, is now practically provided for with the notes of friends good and true, payable next fall.

Without going further in debt, we are endeavoring to get contributions from our excellent people in Mississippi, whereby to secure the furnishings so much needed. Any amount is gratefully received and recorded in a book of remembrance kept for this purpose. Contributions thus far range from $100 down to one cent. Two dollars and twenty-five cents pays for one desk and it will bear the donor's (or any other desired) name on a metal plate.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE TRAINING SCHOOL, MONTROSE, MISSISSIPPI
(254 Students Enrolled)

We also need two pianos, five unabridged dictionaries, cyclopedias, and other books of reference. Books suitable for general reading are desired to supplement the present meager supply. If you have any of these things in your possession (or know of others who do), and will donate them, we shall gladly pay the freight.

A Loan Fund is being raised for aiding needy boys and girls in their commendable effort to secure the training necessary for their life work. The money is loaned them at five per cent. Life insurance policy and endorsement secures payment. Any amount you may contribute for this purpose will be sacredly administered by the President. Annual statement of the Fund's distribution will be sent donors.

Students are prepared for entrance into any college. We have Academic, High School, Business and Piano courses yielding diplomas. The location is in the healthful hill-country. Religious culture is emphasized. Board, with furnished room and fuel, is only $2.50 a week. Tuition is $30 a year, one-half in advance. Other fees total $6. Books at cost. Session opens Sept. 1st.

If you can send us any students of the deserving and desirable sort, it will be a much appreciated help. It is our Redeemer's cause, we are seeking hereby to promote and we confidently believe you will assist us in one or more ways and promptly. Faithfully.

DIRECTIONS.

Correspondents will please direct all communications intended for the paper to [illegible] New Orleans. All communications intended for the Business Department should be addressed to the Manager of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Write with ink and only on one side of the paper. No attention will be paid to soiled manuscripts.

The printed label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after two weeks, notify us and we will make it right. Papers will be continued unless subscribers order otherwise.

Glances at the World.

Within a few weeks two trusted men in New Orleans, one a notary public, and the other a bank official, have proved to be defaulters. Both seem to have followed the practice of a predecessor who went wrong six or eight months since. In both cases speculation was at the bottom of their troubles. Neither was content with the slow method of accumulating money by honest and patient toil. They must needs get rich quick. And would not resist the temptation to use other men's names and other men's money. As one might have expected, they were detected in their tricks and came to grief. And, sad to say, they do not suffer alone. Innocent members of good families suffer more keenly than the evil-doers themselves. How strange that men with the history of crime before their eyes can be deluded with the idea that they can do wrong, then cover up their tracks and escape detection. They know the old saying, "Be sure your sin will find you out," but they think themselves sharper than any who have ever gone before. They are [illegible] mistaken and come to grief.

Some queer things take place in royal circles in Europe. Two or three weeks since, after a courtship of two years, a Spanish prince, by the name of Alphonso, cousin of King Alphonso, married the Princess Beatrice, of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, a near relative of the Queen of Spain, and niece, if we are not mistaken, of King Edward of England. The couple married without the consent of the King of Spain, whereupon the Prince was degraded—cut off, not only from court society, but deprived of his rights as a member of the royal family. Something, it seems, had to be done to maintain the dignity of the royal family, but as the bride was quite as royal as the groom, if not more so, it is probable that the offending Prince would not have been dealt with so harshly if the Princess had not refused to repudiate her Protestant faith for the religion of Rome. The Queen of Spain, it is said, did her best to bring the young couple together. This gives them a powerful friend at Court, and if it be true that neither the German Emperor nor King Edward will accept the situation, in all probability King Alphonso will relent and restore the couple to their rights. Feeling runs high in three kingdoms over the affair. Young royalists have to be careful. But Cupid sometimes outwits the crowned heads.

A storm of great violence struck the coast of Texas about the middle of July, and did a vast amount of damage to property, and killed in the neighborhood of twenty persons. It was not quite equal in force to the storm that destroyed Galveston several years ago, but was quite sufficient to have done untold damage to the city had it not been protected by the great sea wall built since the last great hurricane. A heavy sea beat against the wall, but it stood immovable, and came through without damage. Thus have the enterprise and faith of the citizens and the wisdom and skill of the engineers been vindicated. Now that the great wall has demonstrated its strength and safety in time of danger Galveston will take on new life and become a greater city than ever. The recuperation of Galveston has been one of the wonders of the age.

Many flying machines have been built or are in process of construction in the known [illegible]. There are many and they continue to multiply, and some of them seem to be wonderfully successful. The Wright Brothers continue to astonish the people by making remarkable flights through the air. They are working for a prize offered by the government and [illegible] some time—possibly before this paragraph is put in type—will make the official test. The Daily Mail of London not long since offered $5000 to the first man to fly across the English Channel. The prize was won a few days ago by a Frenchman named Bleriot, who flew across the Channel from Calais, France, to Dover, England, a distance of twenty-one miles. Another Frenchman, one Latham, had prepared to make the flight, but while he slept, or rather overslept, Bleriot made the trip and won the prize. Bleriot proposes to be generous—has told his competitor that if he is successful in his flight across the Channel he will divide the prize money with him. The machines used are not balloons raised by gas and propelled by wind, but are heavier than air and actually fly. Are the men of to-day going to conquer the air?

The Indiana Farmer says: "Notwithstanding the rapidly increasing manufacture of automobiles, horses are increasing in both number and value. It is now pretty hard to see how the country could get along without both horses and autos. Some people thought a few years ago that the horse was passing and would soon lose his job. But look at the facts as gathered from every part of the United States by the Department of Agriculture. There are more horses in the United States today than there ever were before, they are worth more money than they ever were before, they are increasing in numbers and in value notwithstanding the electric street cars, the motor wagons, the bicycle, the automobiles and the adoption of steam and electricity as a motor power in farming and in every business and trade that requires locomotion. The number of horses in the United States January 1, 1908, was 19,992,000, and they are worth a total of $1,867,530,000, or an average of $93.41 each. During the succeeding year, ending January 1, 1909, the number of horses had increased to 20,640,000, their value had advanced more than $100,000,000 to the sum of $1,974,052,000, and the average price was $95.64, or $2.23 more than the previous year." The same may be said of mules as to the increase in numbers, save that mules on an average are worth $12.25 more per head than horses.

The foulest blot on our civilization is the traffic in girls, commonly spoken of as the "white slave traffic." This traffic is nothing less than the "barter and sale" of young girls for immoral purposes. Perhaps there is not a country outside of actual barbarism, that is free of the traffic. Just how so many young and innocent girls are entrapped or forced into the vile life, we do not know. But there is no doubt that hundreds of good girls going from the country to the city in search of honest work, are disappointed in their expectations, and come directly face to face with poverty and hunger, and under the conditions are approached by some flattering woman, or designing man, who entrap them and overcome them. This traffic is attracting universal attention, and thirteen governments have entered into an agreement and taken steps to stop it. A strict watch will be kept on all public places, especially on railroad stations and steamship landings—and on the ships where the trafficers are most likely to be caught. An eye will also be kept on all young women and all who need it will be looked after, and cared for. In the list of governments named, the United States does not appear. But it goes without saying that our government, probably more generally affected by the traffic than any other, will do its full share in [illegible] and punishing [illegible]ties.

The Times-Democrat [illegible] prohibition [illegible] good government [illegible] the workings of prohibition, even in [illegible] where prohibition is only partially enforced. The article [illegible] at least fails to mention one [illegible] drawback to the success of prohibition wherever it has been tried. That drawback is a [illegible] disregard of the public sentiment against [illegible] in the fact that men will drink liquor. Prohibition law does not say that men shall not drink liquor, but says only that men shall not engage in the sale of liquor. And wherever prohibition fails, it fails not because men love to drink liquor, but because [illegible], because men who are elected or selected to execute the law and promise under oath to do so, fail to perform their duty. If any man in any state, whether under prohibition or high license and regulation, engages in the secret or unlawful sale of intoxicants any length of time, it is because some officer fails to make an arrest, or because some executive fails to enforce the law. This applies with equal truth to Mississippi, where prohibition is the rule, and to New Orleans under the strict regulations of the Gay-Shattuck law. The truth seems to be, we regretfully acknowledge, that while the sentiment of the people, as expressed by their votes, is in favor of prohibition, the execution of the law is in the hands of those who either will not or have not moral courage sufficient to execute the law. In some places where juries are demanded non-suits or acquittals too often result. A few days since we read of an attorney who had eight or ten cases to try. The trial of the first case resulted in turning the prisoner loose. The jury brazenly told the attorney in open court that all the others arraigned on the testimony of the same witness would be acquitted. Whereupon the attorney dismissed the suits. That reveals a deplorable and fearful state of things. It shows, not the weakness of prohibition, but the moral weakness of the state. We think the Times-Democrat would do well to give the public a good, strong editorial on the duty of officers to enforce the law.

THE EPWORTH LEAGUE.

How to Make the Devotional Meeting Both Interesting and Profitable.

By Miss Nora Evans.

It seems to me that one of the most difficult problems which the League has to solve is that of making the Devotional Meeting both interesting and profitable. The reason this is so difficult is because we have young people to deal with. When dealing with young people we deal with life, a happy, carefree, vigorous, rushing, stream of life, life that pauses only to take the pleasant and interesting things. With this condition prevalent they will not accept the Gospel truths in their primitive simplicity. There are, probably, in every League, a few who may be interested and profited by the bare Gospel Truths, but to reach the multitude of our young people we must take these same truths and dress them in beautiful garments of righteousness till they will be glad to receive them. But keep ever in mind the fact that it is a Devotional Meeting. Have nothing that will not be a glory to God, and an uplift to humanity. Don't satisfy yourself with anything that will do no harm. Life is too short to waste with such things, but use only that which will do good. Make the Devotional Meeting pure and spiritual even at the expense of interest.

Before there can be any hope of an interesting or profitable Devotional Meeting, there must be a realization, on the part of the Leaguer and especially the Leader, of the great need of a Devotional Meeting. If you are not hungry you are not much interested in getting anything to eat, neither is it much profit to you to eat. So it is, if you do not realize the need of a Devotional Meeting it will not profit you very much. Oh, for a hungering and thirsting after righteousness on the part of our young people, then they will realize the need of a Devotional Meeting.

When you have realized the need of a Devotional Meeting, then you must have a leader. Here is one of the most important steps, and often mistakes are made. Be sure that you know your first Vice-President. Be sure that he or she is reverent, consecrated to God and the Church, and a loyal Leaguer. Be sure that he has bodily spirit, perseverance, and will feel his responsibility, for it is a great responsibility to be first Vice-President of a League. Don't select the oldest person in your League for this place if you have a younger one who will fill the requirements. Your young people will follow a consecrated one of their crowd before they will an older one.

The first Vice-President must have a committee of helpers. These should be selected with care for they are to share the responsibility of this department. They should be helpers who are able and willing to help in any way.

The committee with the Vice-President should meet once a week to arrange for the Devotional Meeting. They should meet to work and not for social pleasure. Begin each of these meetings with prayer. Never start without asking God's guidance. Each of the committees should have studied the topic before the meeting. The topic discussed in the Epworth Era from week to week is hard to improve on as a guide, but it is never meant to be used as a substitute. While, just as the Church services, the League services must assume some kind of form, still there are numberless ways of planning the programme to keep the meetings from growing stale or monotonous. One Sunday have your song service first, again have it in the middle, and another time have it last—and just here let me say, appoint a music committee and have pure, wholesome music to suit the subject. It helps the meeting so much. Sometimes begin with an organ voluntary, again with silent prayer or sentence prayers or with the Bible illustrations or a blackboard outline or begin with some abrupt remark on the topic. Try always to touch the highest theme in the opening moments. Always get your announcements and collections—if there be one—out of the way at the beginning. Don't kill what might have been a very profitable meeting, by a long list of announcements concerning every other department of the League. Select a short reading or hymn to be given by a younger member. Announce a week beforehand that everyone will be expected to give a quotation on the topic—Biblical or otherwise. Have a testimony meeting on the topic sometimes, and always give a few minutes for open discusion of the topic. Encourage every one to take part in this. Plan always to have something to relieve the meeting of stiffness and formality and give freedom and liberty.

Don't have the same kind of programmes every Sunday. One Sunday have a praise meeting, read Scriptures of praise, sing songs of praise, have testimonies of praise—use for benediction that verse in Psalms, "Bless the Lord, Oh, my Soul, and all that is within me, bless His Holy name." Again ask each one to give his favorite verse of Scripture or one that has been a special help to him, with his reason. Plan the programme so that the leader won't monopolize the time.

The leader is the most important one of that specific meeting which he has been asked to lead. He should be notified at least a week before he is to lead and should talk the programme over with one of the programme committee. When the day arrives he should be prepared by prayer, study and more prayer to lead the meeting. He should be there promptly, prayerfully, and interested. I believe by an illustration of what a leader should not be I can show you more clearly what he should be. One time I had a Devotional Meeting. My audience was scattered over a great big church from the door to the front seat, with the pastor on the front seat. I did not ask them to come nearer—I asked the organist for a song then I looked around and at my programme while she selected the number and announced it so that about half a dozen heard it. We sang and those in the back of the church talked. Then I announced the Psalm for responsive reading. The same crowd stood up and read, the others were occupied in the same way as before. Then I called on the Pastor to pray. Then we had another song, then I read the Scripture lesson and called for two or three talks, then we had a song, announcements and benediction. We didn't have much meeting. Do you wonder? The songs should be selected before the meeting. Let the leader announce the number so that every one can hear it. See that all of them have a book, ask every one to sing. Stand up a good deal when singing. It is conducive to better singing and rests one too. See that all have Bibles to read from. Don't call on the pastor to pray every time or talk either. He has plenty of both to do. We work our pastors to death and never do anything for them. Never read a Scripture lesson without offering some comment. Never call for a topic without giving introduction. Explain the object of each talk. Be saturated with the subject, always ready to comment, but don't use too much time. Be stocked with illustrations, often times they will impress a truth more deeply, and are always interesting. Don't be afraid to change the programme when you see that it will be helpful. Strive always to make the closing moments the most important. Have a song that will summarize the thoughts for the day or connect the truths yourself in a tender, systematic way. Often it is not out of place to close with a short prayer.

But leaders or first Vice-Presidents alone cannot make the Devotional Meeting interesting and profitable. Every Leaguer must be loyal and ready to lend a helping hand. It is an utter impossibility to have an interesting and profitable meeting without the hearty co-operation of the Leaguers. For instance, suppose the leader called for a testimony meeting. Well, he gives his testimony, the first Vice-President gives his testimony, each of the committee gives a testimony, and that is the end of it. Now the leader can't make you testify, neither can he make it interesting without your testimony. A great part of it rests with you, dear Leaguer. I think Paul had in mind an ideal Devotional Meeting when he said, "When ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation—and as he exhorts us, "let all be done unto edifying." Let us be "All for Christ."

Fourteen Good Reasons for Patronizing Grenada College

First—The unexcelled Home Comforts, unequaled anywhere else in the State.

Second—The Health Conditions; we rarely require the service of a physician.

Third—Our unusually skilled corps of teachers, whom we were able to secure only by paying a salary much above that paid by other girls' schools of the State.

Fourth—The Fine Arts Department, unequaled in the State and unexcelled in the South. Our teacher of Art studied in Germany and France, and our teachers of Music are graduated from the best Conservatories of America.

Fifth—See Descriptive Courses of Study, which is conscientiously carried out as indicated.

Sixth—The Lyceum Course, which is superior even to that sustained in the University of Mississippi.

Seventh—The Library, which is fuller and better adapted than that of most girls' schools of the South.

Eighth—Strong Christian Influence dominating all instruction.

Ninth—Personal attention to the individual pupil, with a view to develop the best, even out of peculiarities of character.

Tenth—A superior Student Body as Associates, since most of the indifferent have been eliminated.

Eleventh—The Rates are lower than those of any other school doing the same grade of work owing to the Conference Assessment, which gives us an income not possessed by other schools; further, we have no stockholders to whom we are forced to pay dividends, as are some private schools. Our patrons receive back in excellence of service more than they pay in.

Twelfth—We place but two girls in a room, while most schools put from two to six.

Thirteenth—We require our teachers to continue study. Two are in Europe, two in Chicago, others at other schools in the North and East.

Fourteenth—All these superior features enable us to turn out a larger percentage of graduates, who take high stand in the educational world, than any other school in the State. It means something to hold a diploma of the Grenada College.

A MUCH APPRECIATED MESSAGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: During the recent encampment of the Mississippi National Guard, I, as chaplain in charge of the Y. M. C. A. tent for the soldiers, received the following letter. As there was no name signed to it other than here appears, it was impossible to answer it, and I wish to give publicity to it, and take this method of expressing the thanks of all concerned, for this interest taken in our soldier boys by these ladies. The letter was addressed to me in my official capacity as chaplain:

"The Brooksville ladies prayer meeting had special prayer to-day for the chaplains of the Mississippi National Guard. We wish you to know that each day we shall pray that God will fill you with the Holy Spirit and that many souls shall be saved during encampment.

"It is right that our boys should be taught to be good soldiers for the flag, but at the same time they are surrounded by influences that do not tend to make them good soldiers for the cross. By your efforts, we pray that these temptations may be removed.

"Your Co-Workers in the Master's Cause.

"Brooksville, Miss., July 9, 1909."

This work, started by myself six years ago in a small tent 16x30 feet, purchased with money which I raised after many disappointments, has grown in popularity and influence, till, during the encampment just closed, we were in a tent 40x60, with every thing furnished by the state which we felt we had a right to ask for, and a recorded attendance of 20,500. Since the inauguration of this work many of the boys have publicly asked for prayer that they might become Christians. This letter from the thoughtful women of Brooksville was most cheering. May God bless them for their interest in this great work.

INTERCOLLEGIATE GAMES.

By Rev. Jno. W. Ramsey.

On the first page of the Advocate of July 1st there is a paragraph concerning intercollegiate baseball in its relation to Sabbath desecration in which you say: "The students of Christian colleges often spend the day going to or returning from some town to meet an engagement to play an intercollegiate game. Only a few days since one of our Methodist exchanges gave the names of students of a Methodist college who left Sunday morning to go to a distant city to engage in games scheduled for Monday and Tuesday. This temptation to violate the sanctity of the Sabbath by all-day traveling is one of the principal reasons why our Methodist Conferences array themselves in deadly opposition to intercollegiate sports."

I quote the above part of the paragraph referred to for several reasons. First: That it may appear again in your columns for the sake of emphasis. Secondly, to express my approval of your condemnation of such laxity upon the part of church colleges. Thirdly, to object to your use of the term "Christian Colleges" in connection with the Sabbath desecration of which you speak. The term "Christian Colleges" as you here employ it, is a misnomer." Colleges that allow this form of Sabbath desecration may be church colleges, but certainly they are not Christian colleges. To call them such is to rob the word Christian of all of its Scriptural significance. It is a high and holy word, gathering about itself the purity and beauty of the lives of all the good men and women of all the passing years since the disciples of our Lord "were called Christians first in Antioch." And to call colleges which permit Sabbath desecration, especially the form you mention, Christian," is to take from that word all the signficance which the history of the Church's progress and Christian biography have poured into it during twenty centuries. Hence I strenuously object to such colleges being called Christian; and the Church ought to be ashamed to have them called church colleges. Let's call them something else.

You say, "The temptation to violate the sanctity of the Sabbath by all-day travelling is one of the principal reasons why our Methodist Conferences array themselves in deadly opposition to intercollegiate sports." I am very glad indeed that our Conferences are so planting themselves upon the right side of this question that it can be said that they "array themselves in deadly opposition to intercollegiate sports." So far as this may have reference to baseball, I desire to say that this game is a national craze, a local nuisance, and an unmitigated evil. It is a national craze—it affects the whole nation, including the president. It is a local nuisance—fathers being unable, through the excitement created by the coming of a match game, to keep their boys at work. Many young men spend their small salaries on even the legitimate expenses of the game, and when that is gone, the temptation presents itself to use the money of their employers. But the legitimate expenses are not all—it is a gambling game. How men can condemn gambling on horse-racing and support baseball, is a mystery to me. It is a worse evil than horseracing, because it is more widespread and effects more localities. It is a worse evil than the Louisiana Lottery, because the lottery was outlawed, and we are told that a man might as well throw himself across a railroad track expecting to stop the coming train as to oppose baseball. The lottery was ousted by the governor, an old, one-armed soldier, who refused to sign a bill enacted by the legislature for its perpetuation. The old soldier said: "I will loose my other arm before I will sign that bill." In like manner, let the Church of God throw herself with all of her consecrated powers across the track of this national craze, even though she rise with loss of limb and mutilated form. Besides gambling, profanity, rowdyism and other evils attend this godless sport.

I can take you to a town where the keeper of the hotel has refused to lodge these godless sports of the visiting team till the arrival of the train because of their rowdyism. After the refusal of the hotel to give them entertainment, they went from one boarding-house to another, each refusing to keep them after one night's experience. This is the sort of conduct that even some Methodist preachers endorse by their attendance upon the games of these sports.

I quote again your words: "A letter received at this office a few days since from a young preacher pleads for intercollegiate games." Now, put along beside this the statement from a report of a certain District Conference: "A young preacher, who is also a student, introduced a resolution that the question of intercollegiate games be left to the college authorities, and it was promptly tabled." Add to this the significant fact that one District Conference has voted that this whole question ought to be left to the decision of the college administration. Now, what does all this indicate? I may be mistaken in thinking so, but to me it seems there is a purpose or movement to create in the District Conferences a sentiment which, when it reaches the Annual Conference, will be sufficiently strong to recall their previous requirement that our colleges do not permit intercollegiate games. If the restraining influence of our Conferences be withdrawn we all know what the result will be.

You will notice that the movement alluded to above seems to be directed by young preachers who are, or have been "students." The Methodist Conferences, as you say, "array themselves in deadly opposition," but how long will this "deadly opposition" continue if these very Conferences continue in power over our colleges, men who are in opposition to the Conferences who placed them in authority, and who, through the colleges, are constantly sending out a stream of young men, both in the ministry and laity, who, with sentiment born upon the college campus, will become members of our Conferences and at last shape and direct the future policy of the Church?

A young preacher, whose letter was received at the Advocate office, "pleads for intercollegiate games" and "asserted that the fate of the college depends upon them." It is not my purpose to advertize any college, but I know a college which began its history with the requirement coming from the president of its Board of Directors that there should be no intercollegiate games. Despite prophecies of failure by college men, and with only a brief existence behind it, it is almost as large as any college in the State where it is located, though it has not a cent of endowment and has to compete with other institutions which have large endowments, and immense State appropriations. The secret of its success is to be found in the fact that fathers and mothers all over the land are seeking everywhere for such institutions as do not allow intercollegiate games, and where the religious atmosphere is charged with spirituality.

I cannot find a more appropriate concluding statement than your closing utterance: "A college that cannot live without intercollegiate games ought to die."

"MINISTERS," OR "PREACHERS," WHICH?

By J. N. Tucker.

At the recent session of the Meridian District Conference, held at Shubuta, Miss., a resolution was presented, and adopted, favoring the appointment of ministers of our church by our Bishops to institutions of learning not under our care, whereupon I moved (or tried to move) that the word "preacher" be substituted for the word "minister, it being more comprehensive in meaning and more in harmony with the phraseology of our church. But the motion was not so much as seconded; instead, there was an inquiry made as to where I got the information, to which I answered that I thought the information was common property—that is, it is to be found in Webster's Dictionary and in our Discipline. However, not wishing to prolong the discussion, I did not quote either; but let the matter drop.

As it is always better to be correct than incorrect, and better to conform to Methodist phraseology than not to do so, I ask the privilege to give the information desired. The words as defined by Webster are as follows:

(1) Minister (def. 4): "One who serves at the altar; one who performs sacerdotal duties; the pastor of a church duly authorized or licensed to preach the gospel and administer the sacraments."

(2) Preach: "To pronounce a public discourse on a religious subject, to deliver a sermon."

(3) Preacher: "One who preaches; one who discourses on religious subjects."

That our Discipline recognizes this distinction may be seen by its use of these words—minister and preacher.

In speaking of a licentiate, the Discipline invariably speaks of him as a "preacher" (see par. 167); but in speaking of minister, it always recognizes him as an "ordained" preacher. (See par. 174-177, inclusive.)

So we learn, both from the dictionary and the Discipline, that a "minister" is an ordained preacher, and a "preacher" is one licensed to preach, but may or may not be ordained to orders.

And because of this distinction between the two words our church has adopted the word "preacher" to be applied to both ordained and unordained preachers, and is used thus in this very connection—that of appointing preachers to "seminaries of learning not under our care." See par. 99.

From the foregoing one can clearly see that the word "preacher," in the resolution referred to, would have expressed the mind of the Conference better, and at the same time been in harmony with good English and the Discipline, too.

But, as it is, for our Bishops to grant the expressed pleasure of the Meridian District Conference in its resolution, they will need to conform their appointments to institutions of learning not under our care to "ordained" preachers only.

Meridian, Miss.

THE LAYMEN MOVING.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I believe our laymen of Como have the correct idea of "the Laymen's Movement" and in the spirit of the Master are carrying out the designs of our great leaders. On Sunday morning I told them of a preacher in this district who has broken down in health and was unable to carry on the work on his circuit of three churches. In just a few minutes they had given me thirty dollars to send to him and the Leader instructed me to write to the presiding elder and tell him the appointments on the circuit would be filled by laymen from Como (if needed) without expense to the charge, so the pastor could go to a resort and recuperate, the charge keeping his salary paid as though he were doing the work as usual. To my mind this is the Laymen's Movement, moving. May God bless the laymen. Thank God for their intelligent consecration and willing co-operation with their pastors!

THE VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Vicksburg District Conference was held at Utica, Miss., from the 20th to the night of the 23rd, instant. The opening sermon was preached on the night of the 20th, by Rev. H. L. Norton, of Hermanville. He made an earnest plea urging the importance of growing in grace and in the knowledge of the things of God.

The Conference convened on Wednesday morning at 8:15 o'clock. Rev. G. P. McKeown of the Satartia charge was elected secretary. Our presiding elder, Rev. G. H. Galloway, conducted the opening devotional exercises and made an earnest talk urging the preachers to preach the Word of God as it is given there. He spoke of some of the higher criticism as criticism of the highest. That is, as criticism of God and his truths.

Rev. W. T. Griffin was present and spoke of his work at Gulfport in trying to help the sailors. Judging from his address, he is meeting with encouraging success in this special line of work.

Rev. W. M. Williams, manager of the Methodist Orphanage, was present the first day and was given the 11 o'clock hour to represent the home. He is full of enthusiasm and works in behalf of that great institution.

The most of the first day's session was taken up in hearing reports from the different charges in the district. Nearly all the pastors are hopeful and courageous. The finances are very much behind, but most of the brethren seem right confident that they will have full reports at Conference. There have been a good many accessions on profession of faith during the year.

Rev. H. G. Hawkins was present and spoke very encouragingly of the prospect for the Port Gibson Female College. He thinks that there will be a large attendance next session.

Dr. J. M. Sullivan was present, and in a very earnest and forcible way spoke of the work of Millsaps College.

Rev. R. Selby was with us and preached a most excellent sermon on Christian Education. He declares that there is a decided advance in the educational line in the Mississippi Conference.

W. W. Ellis, of Utica, M. M. Goodwin, of Mayersville, Rev. J. C. Dungin, of Hermanville and A. Foulke, of the Warren Circuit, were elected delegates to the Annual Conference.

Rev. C. N. Guice was recommended to the Annual Conference for re-admission into the travelling connection.

Rev. G. H. Galloway, our esteemed presiding elder, looked well into the interest of the entire district. The greatest burden, that seems to rest on his heart is that souls may be saved from sin, and he does not hesitate to stay with his preachers and help them in special services wherever it is possible for him to do so. He is not at all afraid of work and whatsoever his hands find to do he does it with all his might. They say that he has made many improvements on the district parsonage with his own hands and without any expense to the district. Brother Galloway is truly a man of God and very earnestly, and emphatically stands up for what he believes to be right on all questions.

The Utica people were very kind and hospitable in their entertainment of the members of the District Conference.

Rev. C. M. Crosley did everything in his power for the accommodation of those attending.

Really, everybody seems to think that this was as pleasant a session of the Conference as they had attended in a long while.

W. A. TERRY.

MONROE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Monroe District Conference met at Mer Rouge in the Methodist Church, July 6. After religious services conducted by Rev. S. S. Keener, the presiding elder, the session was called to order. Three of the preachers in the district were absent on account of sickness. A pretty good attendance of laymen considering the busy season of the year. Not a pessimistic note was heard and the fellowship among the brethren most pleasant and helpful. The following brethren addressed the Conference and represented their respective interests. Revs. Robt. W. Vaughan, Agent Louisiana Orphanage at Ruston, La.; C. B. Carter, Commissioner of Education, Louisiana Conference; N. E. Joyner, Missionary Evangelist; H. W. Knickerbocker, the American Bible Society, and Prof. W. L. Weber, President of Centenary College at Shreveport.

Rev. R. H. Wynn preached the opening sermon on "feeding the multitude." The rest of the preaching was done by Revs. S. W. B. Colvin, L. A. Humphries, H. W. May, and W. L. Hunter.

The following lay delegates were elected to the Annual Conference: C. M. Noble, S. M. Collins, R. O. Randle, W. R. Baker.

Lake Providence was chosen as the place of meeting of the next Conference. A resolution of thanks was unanimously adopted for the bountiful hospitality accorded the Conference by Rev. V. D. Skipper and his kind people.

Dr. Keener presided with his usual grace and dignity as he is a veteran in the chair.

The Conference in adopting the report of the committee on the spiritual state of the church unanimously recommended the importance of urging our people to erect family altars and consecrating their homes to God.

DR. WINTON AND "CHURCH OWNERSHIP."

The frown of Caesar having failed to awe the provinces, Dr. Winton now seems willing to join issues with the Editor of the Epworth Era on the "Church Ownership" question in other newspapers than the Christian Advocate, the one which he edits and the one in which his astounding theories of Church ownership were at first exploited. In this matter of "Church Ownership" Dr. Winton is at sea in an open boat without sail or oar. It was his right and duty to make out as strong a case as he could for the Church—that is, as strong a case as the law, the facts, and court usage justify. Instead he made out the weakest possible case for the Church—one not justified either by the law, the facts, or the court usages, and one which if admitted would leave the Church powerless to protect itself in its ownership of any property claimed by it from a chapel to a university. This consequence of his theory was made clear in our strictures on his editorial. If the Advocate can make no better defense in law of the Church's property titles than was made in that editorial, nearly two millions of Methodists may well pray to be delivered from their lawyer.

Dr. Winton pleads against our stricture the non sequitur that his editorial did not refer to Vanderbilt University, but to something else (what he does not make plain), something vague, far off, out of sight. As a matter of fact, Dr. Winton did admit to this Editor (when he asked for the simple right to print a line in the Church organ) that the last two sentences of his editorial referred to Vanderbilt University. On this statement of his we shaped our reply, striking out several sentences to conform to the statement. This we did not mean to mention, but his disclaimer makes it pertinent to mention it now. If his whole editorial did not refer to the Vanderbilt property controversy, then it had "little relevancy, little meaning." Dr. Winton may understand what good is to be accomplished by these exploitations, but we doubt if anybody else does. Both on his own account and that of the Church we deeply regret that he should have written what he did.

BROOKHAVEN, Miss., July 22, 1909.

My Dear Dr. Cooper:

Knowing and valuing Whitworth College as we do, we desire to express our appreciation in a way that you can use as you see best.

We know of no safer or better place for young ladies than Whitworth College. Its faculty is thoroughly competent, being selected with greatest care. Its moral tone and atmosphere are all that could be desired. Its buildings are commodious and comfortable, its grounds are beautiful and kept in most excellent condition. The health of the students has been exceptionally good. We believe there is no healthier place in Mississippi than Brookhaven, and there is certainly no healthier place in Brookhaven than Whitworth College. No institution with which I am acquainted keeps its buildings and grounds in better condition. The young lady is fortunate, and to be congratulated, who shares the splendid advantages you are offering in Whitworth College.

Yours very cordially,

NO SLAUGHTER OF THE INNOCENTS.

By Rev. W. S. Harrison

Some may think it inexcusable egotism for one in this age to call in question the basis of a belief which has been universal from the days of the early fathers until now. But error gains no sanctity by time, however long, and truth discovered only to-day is as valuable as though it had been recognized through all the ages.

Investigation has led me to believe that Matt ii.16, in regard to what Herod did to the children of Bethlehem, has had the wrong interpretation since almost the beginning of the Christian era. Our translation says: "Then Herod * * * sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under." The word translated slew is aneiler, 2nd aorist of anaireo, Now for the meaning of that word. Grove's Dictionary says: Anaireo (for ana up and aiero to take) to take up, or away; to bury, to undo, abolish, annul; to overturn overthrow, subvert; to kill, cut off, to make war, etc. We see that to kill is by no means the first and most obvious meaning of the word.

Donegan is equally clear. He says: Anaireo, to take up and remove; also to take, in its general sense to take up and remove; to bear away, as a prize at games; to take up, as a cup in order to drink; to take away to destroy, to kill. We see clearly that the primary sense of the word is to take. People so often took things, including men, in order to kill them that the word finally came to have the secondary meaning, to kill. But why force this meaning on the evangelist? Why not give the word its plain and obvious meaning? Then the text would read, "Herod sent forth and took all the children of Bethlehem," obviously with a view to finding the one Child he wished to destroy.

This view is strengthened by reference to Jer. xxxi:15: "Rachel weeping for her children and would not be comforted, because they are not." St. Matthew quotes only this far, and this gives coloring to the idea that the children were slain. But why not take the whole paragraph? The prophet proceeds: "Thus saith the Lord, refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord, and they shall come again from the land of the enemy. And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border." And this, doubtless, was also "fulfilled" when the babes of Bethlehem were returned to their mothers, after the fruitless search of Herod for "the young child's life to destroy it.'"

This view is sustained by the use of the word elsewhere in the New Testament. Acts vii:21. "Pharoah's daughter took him (Moses) up, aneilito, and nourished him for her own son." Here the word is used in its most literal sense. Heb. x:9. "He taketh away (anairei) the first (covenant) that he may establish the second." Here the word clearly means to annul or abolish. As already stated this word anaireo is derived from ana up and aireo to take and primarily means to take up. Aireo is not used in the New Testament; but the root-word, airo, is often used, and almost invariably means to take.

It has always been the crux of interpreters to suggest reasons why such a monstrous outrage as the slaying of "all the children, two years old and under, in Bethlehem and all the coasts thereof," should not have been mentioned by secular historians. How such a writer as Josephus, for instance, could fail to record such a fact is surely hard to explain.

Now the whole evidence in the case rests on the proper meaning of the one word anaireo as used by St. Matthew. To give this word its primary meaning, and to my mind its true meaning in this place, is to obviate all the difficulty.

A WORD IN BEHALF OF OUR DOMESTIC MISSIONARIES, AND ELSE.

To the Pastors and Laymen of the Mississippi Conference:

Dear Brethren—Through the kindness of Brother Linfield, the treasurer of our Board of Missions, who has furnished me the figures, I give below a comparative statement as to collections for Foreign and Domestic Missions last year and this year:

1908 (to July 11, inclusive)—

	Foreign.	Domestic.
Brookhaven District	$440.85	$474.55
Jackson District	693.10	250.45
Meridian District	159.25	104.29
Natchez District	136.29	98.00
Newton District	178.00	140.55
Seashore District	409.00	512.00
Vicksburg District	189.00	296.50
	$2202.59	$1876.25

1909 (to July 11, inclusive)—

Brookhaven District	$295.50	$311.00
Hattiesburg District	198.00	192.50
Jackson District	197.50	227.39
Meridian District	269.09	132.04
Natchez District	79.89	74.55
Newton District	274.70	251.25
Seashore District	394.88	448.50
Vicksburg District	153.50	206.85
	$1863.06	$1843.99

These figures speak for themselves. We are doing a good deal better than we did two years ago, but not quite as well as last year to date. Evidently, there is need for us to bestir ourselves, especially as our large-hearted laymen at the Chattanooga Conference last year set the figure for missions at one million dollars for the present year. In a recent appeal to the church, our General Secretaries at Nashville declared: "The time has come for a great advance in missions. This conviction is deepening throughout the church. We are not making the progress we should, and yet the demand for an advance in every field is the greatest in our history."

Many of our domestic missionaries are serving hard appointments, which pay them very little till late in the year, and hence, unless the Mission Board can give them relief, they are sure to be, and often are, in sore straits. Some of our most faithful and efficient men are seriously embarrassed because of inability to meet current expenses, and, of course, are unable to do their best work. Over one-half of the year is gone, and yet, as a Conference, we have raised only about one-sixth of our missionary assessments. Because we have pursued a dilatory policy in other years to the hurt of consecrated men in the field, is no reason why we should continue to do so.

Despite the hard times, church members somehow find plenty money for amusements and self-indulgence, for the things they are most interested in. Many are going on summer outings and pleasure trips, more or less extensive. Wholesome recreation is proper and necessary, but is it just to spend fifty or one hundred dollars in this way, and not give a dollar to the mission cause, as is true in many cases, till the end of the year? Brother layman, if you are planning a trip somewhere, will you not, before you leave home, hand your pastor five or ten dollars, or whatever amount you can spare, for domestic missions, to be sent on at once? Such a gift would bring gladness to many a needy worker, and you would enjoy your vacation all the better.

It is to be hoped that no pastor will be content to let his own salary be paid in full, or nearly so, every month or every quarter, and let the domestic missions assessment go by default till just before Conference. If one hundred pastors, during the next thirty days, will put this matter before their congregations, and raise an average of fifteen dollars for missions, it would put fifteen hundred in the treasury, and greatly relieve the situation. "We can do it if we will." Yours fraternally,

M. M. BLACK,
Sec'y Board of Missions, Mississippi Conf.

TO THE LAYMEN OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I wish to call special attention through the Conference organ to the three great Training Conferences for the South to be held shortly. Beginning in October next, fifty missionary conventions, within six months, will be held in the United States, concluding with a National Missionary Congress in April 1910. A great missionary campaign for world-wide evangelization is to be carried on during these six months, and these three Training Conferences are for the special purpose of training those who are to take part in this campaign. One of these conferences will be held at Hot Springs, Ark., Aug. 10-12. One will not only get the edification and inspiration of a great conference, with its wonderfully instructive speeches and teachings, but will also have the delight of a great health resort. For the Louisiana, Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences this is not only an ideal place but a very accessible one. The other two Training Conferences are to be held at Monteagle, Tenn., Aug. 13-15, and at Montreat, N. C., Aug. 17-19. All these places are high up in the mountains, and for summer assemblages of any kind they are not to be surpassed.

I want to impress upon every lay leader of the Mississippi Conference, church lay leader and district lay leader, the great importance of attending one of these great Training Conferences. All the railroads have granted reduced rates to these places, and it is to be hoped that not only the leaders, but other laymen of the Mississippi Conference who wish the Laymen's Missionary Movement well, will take advantage of these occasions to give support and encouragement to the same.

RATHER HAVE HALF.

The difference between common sense and mathematics was illustrated in a remark which was made in a school one day.

It was the mental arithmetic class. The master asked Smith, "which would you rather have, half an apple or eight-sixteenths of an apple?"

"Wouldn't make any difference," said Smith.

"Why not?"

"Eight-sixteenths and one-half are the same."

At this reply, Jones, who was sitting near, sniffed scornfully. The master heard him.

"Well, Jones," said he, "don't you agree with Smith?"

"No, sir," said Jones; "I'd much sooner have one-half an apple."

"And why, please?"

"More juice. Cut up half an apple into eight sixteenths, and you'd lose half the juice doing it!"—Children's Answers.

"MY COUNTRY, 'TIS OF THEE."

The following account of a nationally interesting incident is sent us by Henry L. Mason, who is now writing a "Life of Lowell Mason," the well-known educator, and the composer of "Bethany" ("Nearer My God to Thee"), "Olivet" ("My Faith Looks up to Thee"), the Missionary Hymn ("From Greenland's Icy Mountains"), and many other solid and universally known hymn tunes:

It seems that in 1832, Dr. S. F. Smith, who had just written "America," gave the manuscript to his friend, Dr. Lowell Mason, to whom, in fact, he was in the habit of giving hymns as he wrote them that they might be set to music. Dr. Mason took the poem, destined to become our National Hymn, and for some few months said nothing to Dr. Smith regarding it. He had not been idle, however. A born educator as he was, Dr. Mason had but shortly prior to this introduced music into the public schools of Boston, and now having adapted the stirring stanzas of Dr. Smith to the tune of "God Save the King," he trained the school children to sing it, and finally, quite out of a clear sky, he invited Dr. Smith, among others, to hear the school children sing (without saying anything in regard to "America," which he held as a surprise) on the Fourth of July, 1832, at Park Street Church, Boston. There were some 500 school children in all, and as the great chorous burst out in unison with "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," the effect must have been inspiring. Imagine the profound feelings of its author, taken by surprise as he was!

A great audience filled the church, and among those present was one lad, but ten years of age, who had been born on Tremont Street, almost in the shadow of Park Street Church spire. That boy had been on Boston Common all of the morning celebrating in boyish fashion the day which marks our independence. That boy was destined to hold sway over thousands of hearts and souls in after years. That boy, grown to grand old age, passed away June 10, mourned not alone by his own country, but universally throughout the world, and his name was Edward Everett Hale.—Zion's Herald.

WHY SMITH SOLD OUT HIS SALOON.

"I hear that Smith has just sold his saloon," said one of a couple of middle-aged men who sat sipping their beer and eating a bit of cheese in an American saloon.

"Yes," responded the other, rather slowly.

"What was the reason? I thought he was just coining money there."

The other nibbled a cracker abstractedly for a moment, and then said: "Smith, you know, lives on Mt. Washington, right near me, where he has an excellent wife, a nice home, and three as pretty children as ever played outdoors. Smith is a pretty respectable sort of citizen—never drinks or gambles, and thinks the world of his family.

"When he went home one afternoon last week and found his wife out shopping, he went through the house into the back yard, and there under the apple tree were the three little fellows playing. They had a bench and some bottles and tumblers, and were playing 'keep saloon.' He noticed that they were drinking something out of a pail, and that they acted tipsy. The youngest, who was behind the bar, had a towel tied around his waist, and was setting the drinks up pretty freely.

"Smith walked over and looked in the pail. It was beer, and two of the boys were so drunk that they staggered. A neighbor's boy, two years older, lay sleepless behind the tree.

"'Boys, you must not drink that!' he said, as he lifted the six-year-old from behind the bench.

"'We's playin' s'loon, pap'; an' I was sellin' it just like you,' said the little fellow.

"Smith poured out the beer, carried the drunken boy home, and then took his own boys in and put them to bed. When his wife came back she found him crying like a child.

"He came down town that night and sold out his business, and says he will not sell or drink another drop of liquor. His wife told mine about it, and she broke down crying, while she told it."

This is a true story, but the name was not Smith.—Christian Scotsman.

THE DEFERRED FISHING.

"Hello, there, over the fence—get your fishin' pole," and Tom Joliet—Jolly Tom, as the boys called him, good-natured, generous and friendly with everybody—placed one foot on the lower stringer of the front gate and shook his own pole invitingly.

Freddy Wilbur had just come from the bathroom and stopped for a moment at the front door to look out. His face was shining and curiously suggestive of vigorous scrubbing with hot water and soap, his clothing was neat and carefully brushed and his shoes were shining. But as he saw the careless, happy figure outside the gate, jacketless, barefooted and with tousled hair, unfamiliar with comb and brush, something of his own irreproachableness seemed to oppress him, for his shoulders dropped a little and his eyes sank. But only for an instant; then this form straightened and his gaze rose squarely to meet the quizzical look of his particular friend and chum.

"Can't, Tommy," he answered. "It's the wrong day of the week for fishing. I'm just getting ready for Sunday School."

"Oh, huh!" expostulated Tom. "Sunday School ain't nothin' to-day. The preacher's off on his vacation, an' our teacher an' your pa an' ma have gone to the convention. The school won't be half open, an' our class will be crowded into some other or maybe it won't be teached at all. What's the use to waste the day that way? I've seen most of the boys, an' they're goin' to stay home or go off somewhere."

"Why don't they go with you?"

"Didn't ask 'em," shortly; "don't want 'em. I want you. You're the best feller of the whole lot, an' more fun; an' you're my chum. An' there's another thing,"—lowering his voice a little, "they're goin' to start on a new dam over to Back River Monday mornin', an' they drawed the water off last night. Where the river was deepest an' widest is only just puddles between the rocks, an' they're jumpin' with fish. I wa'n't goin' to tell you till we got there, so you'd be surprised. Why," with a long breath, "we can catch all we can bring home, an' more. Oh, Fred! won't you come?"

Fred's eyes were shining, but he shook his head.

"Can't, Tommy," he repeated. "It's Sunday. And if most all the class stays away, that's no reason why we should. Some of us ought to go all the more, I think. It would look funny for the whole class to be absent."

"Did your pa and ma order you to go?" sourly.

"No, they never mentioned the subject," frankly. "I suppose they feel they can trust me. But why don't you ask some of the other boys—just this once?"

"Don't want 'em. They're no fun like you."

"Well, look here!" cried Fred suddenly; "why can't you come with me to Sunday School, then, and leave the fishing till to-morrow morning? The bath tub is all ready for you, and I can let you have a suit of my clothes. We're the same size, you know. Then you'll come back with me and stay all night, and we'll wake up and start for Back River by four o'clock. It's plenty light then, and we can fish till eight. That will give us four hours, and we'll be back pretty near as early as we generally get up. And you know morning fishing is always the best. What do you say?"

Tom hesitated a moment, then opened the gate and entered the yard.

"All right," he answered. "I'm willin', long's I have you to go with me." Then, as they started toward the bathroom, "An' I guess we'd better tell all the other boys after all. They ain't so much fun as you, but there'll be a lot of fish, an' we may as well share 'em 'round."—Frank Sweet, in The Advance.

"Power for Service."

This is a book of 270 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

THE "MIDLAND" AND CHURCH DEMOCRACY.

We have no desire to say anything more on "The Democracy of Our Church Government," and would not but for the fact that the Midland Methodist misread one of the paragraphs in our article on the subject. Part of that paragraph reads as follows: "We are not in sympathy with those who attribute failure anywhere or to any extent to the lack of democracy in our church government. That is the biggest kind of a humbug turned loose to buzz about among the people in the effort to make them believe that they are deprived of their share of government in the church."

In the above language there is no reflection on the principle of democracy, nor a denial of its efficiency in church government; and Brother Schuler, in saying "that democracy is a 'humbug' in this democratic country is news," as though we repudiated democracy, reads into our words something that is not there. His conclusion is not legitimate. The term "humbug" was not applied to democracy, but to the argument of those who charge failure in the working of our Methodist machinery to the lack of democracy.

If Brother Schuler will give our editorial another reading, we think he will see our purpose was to show, not contempt for democracy, but that, having democracy sufficient, what is needed is more personal life and energy rather than larger personal control in church affairs, and that if our machinery, as it is, could be kept in motion according to directions in the discipline, the friction would be so slight, and the results so wonderful, the defects would escape notice.

We have all confidence in our lay brethren, and could trust them to nominate, as well as to elect church officers, but we cannot see that it would make us any more democratic than we are, and we feel sure the church would receive no better service than it is now getting under officers nominated by the preacher. As to the Church Conference, we feel free to say that a careful study of the order of business will show that it is charged with as much responsibility in the management of the local church as it can well afford to carry. If question 5 in the second division of the order does not give the Church Conference all the latitude it can reasonably ask, we would like for some intelligent layman who knows something about the work and worth of a Church Conference to tell us what more is needed. Its latitude is away beyond anything granted either to the Quarterly, District or Annual Conference. A fifth wheel, indeed! The Church Conference might well be called the pilot wheel.

ALIEN IMMERSION.

Alien immersion is a term frequently used by certain Baptists. They mean by it the immersion of believers by preachers other than preachers of their own faith and order. They call themselves "regular Baptists"—assuming that by virtue of succession their churches are the only divinely authorized keepers and administrators of gospel ordinances. Where to find this order of Baptists is more than we can tell. It is no trouble to find Baptists called by that name, but whether they are "regular" according to their method of reckoning, we are not so sure. But the question is neither here nor there so far as "alien immersion" is concerned, which just now is giving the brethren no little uneasiness. The "stand-patters," or those who used to be called "landmarkers," are worried because so many of the churches are receiving into fellowship persons immersed by preachers of other denominations. Whether this is the result of letting go their hold on the idea that the validity of baptism depends on the authority of the administrator, or is a concession to the consciences of individuals baptized by alien preachers, is to us a matter of indifference. In either case the "land-markers" feel that the Lord is being wounded in the house of his friends.

We have no quarrel with those who hold to believers' baptism, not even with those who go so far as to reject, not only sprinkling and pouring, but immersion also when administered by others than "regular Baptists." Our contention is with the man who, in rejecting baptism administered by pedo-Baptists, misrepresent them as to the grounds upon which they administer the ordinance. Giving to all who do so credit for honesty of purpose, we are bound to say, nevertheless, they do not understand the position of others whose baptism they undertake to assail. Not one, we hope, would purposely set up a false position in order to show how easily it may be overthrown. But why should an honest Baptist preacher, in fighting alien immersion, make use of the following language, which so miserably misrepresents his fellow Christians:

> "Baptist churches admit only such as profess to be saved—dead already to sin. Others do not seek to have saved persons only join them. All Arminians admit those who are candidates for salvation. They think none are saved before death, and, as death takes them out of their churches, none are saved while in their churches, therefore they do not immerse the individual because the individual is not dead to sin, already saved, but upon a prospective hope of salvation to be consummated at death. Such immersion cannot be valid."

As a Methodist, commonly classed as an Arminian in theology, we deny that the above applies to Methodist administration in the ordinance of baptism. That we take "seekers of religion" under "watch-care" is true. They are entitled to it because "they have a desire to flee from the wrath to come and to be saved from their sins," but no preacher among us is authorized to receive candidates into full fellowship in the church by baptism until satisfied of "the genuineness of their faith." If any administrator proceeds otherwise, it is because he fails to understand, or ignores the rules of the Church.

When, therefore, we baptize adults we do so because they "profess to be saved—dead already to sin." Our Baptist brethren can do no more than that—they can require no more, especially as, like the Methodists, they hold that "faith only" is the condition of justification and salvation. Methodists and Baptists take their candidates on faith—that is, they take them at their word, for we have no method at the time of determining the true from the false. And we gather in both good and bad.

Methodists baptize nobody "upon a prospective hope of salvation." Such a thing, as far as this writer knows, is unheard of in Methodist circles. We wonder how our Baptist brother got hold of the term. We baptize infants, but not "upon a prospective hope," for if ever an administrator of baptism is sure of anything, he is sure that infants are in a saved relation to Christ. Otherwise he would not baptize them. Methodists do not believe in baptismal regeneration.

BEARING FRUIT.

The open letter in last week's issue is bearing rich fruit. Several have hastened to pay up what they owe us. Dear reader, if you are behind, do likewise. Our brother wants that letter read and reread by all who are in arrears on their subscription. It did him good, and he believes it will do others good.

THE GALLOWAY MEMORIAL.

We desire to keep before our readers the Galloway Memorial Church. Nobody will object. We want every admirer of the great and good man to have a brick in that house. Dear friends, if you intend to have any part in it, send in your money right away. Every dollar you send will be placed in a savings bank and draw interest until the day it is needed to pay for work and material. If you are unable to send much, send a little—as much as you can. Do it now. Remit to the treasurer, J. R. Bingham, Carrollton, Miss.

DO NOT WAIT.

We have received several letters saying, "I would have renewed my subscription before now, but I was waiting on my pastor to raise a club for the ADVOCATE."

One of the many reasons that has induced us to change the price of the ADVOCATE from $2.00 to $1.50 has been to meet such instances. The ADVOCATE has no words of complaint to raise against its friends, the pastors. Were it not for them, it could not live. But there must continually arise instances where it is not convenient for the pastor to handle an ADVOCATE club at the time that it is convenient for some particular subscriber to pay. So we have brought the club rate and the full price near enough together that you can afford to pay the full price without waiting for the club.

If the label on your paper shows that you are behind, pay now. It is a little thing to you, but a thousand subscribers awaiting a convenient season make it very inconvenient for us. If your label reads July '09, it means that your subscription expired with the first day of July, 1909.

This is the only record we keep, and you can read this record as well as we. It is not necessary to write to us to ask when your subscription expires. We place the record before you every week. Look now! If you are behind, send in $1.50 to renew, to-day. Remember that all subscriptions are payable in advance.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. E. Denson, of Sulphur, La., in a postscript to a business letter, gives this bit of good news: "The work moves on nicely out here."

Prof. J. M. Sullivan, of the chair of Chemistry and Geology, Millsaps College, gave us a pleasant call last Wednesday. During vacation he has been working in the interest of the college, and reports the prospects good for the coming session.

Rev. W. M. Young informs us that Brother L. B. Hankins, who has been sick so long, at the advice of his physician, has "gone to the mountains." His address is Sulligent, Ala. Let the brethren remember in prayer this faithful servant in the Lord.

Rev. C. A. Battle, Jennings, La., after spending two weeks of July with friends and relatives in Georgia and Alabama, is again at home and at work—for the Advocate, as well as for other interests. He sends us a list of subscribers with promise of "more to follow."

The man of all men having correspondence with this office standing the least in need of a typewriter, has provided himself with a machine, and now denies us the pleasure of seeing his beautiful handwriting. O that he would turn it over to one of his neighbors!

Rev. J. B. Gonzales, superintendent of the Sunday school and missionary work of the Congregational Church in Texas and Louisiana, dropped into our sanctum, bringing with him a touch of the large life and breezy atmosphere of Texas. He spent a few days in New Orleans.

Rev. J. B. King tells us that he is expecting a camp meeting, which begins at Topisaw Friday, Aug. 6. The people are in happy expectation. Rev. W. G. Harbin will be the principal preacher. He will give them sound gospel preaching, which, we trust, will reach many souls.

Dr. J. J. Lafferty, long known as editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate—a perfect wizard in the use of pen or tongue—after a long illness, died July 23, at his home near Crozet, Va. He had been an itinerant preacher nearly fifty-two years, having joined the Virginia Conference in 1857.

Rev. A. H. Williams has been diligent in serving on the Mayhew charge the present season—has large and interesting Sunday schools—large for the population. At this writing he is engaged in protracted services at Artesia (Miss.), with Rev. L. M. Broyles, of Corinth, to assist him. May he be blessed with a great revival.

Rev. J. A. Poe, Montpelier, Miss., writes us that the contract has been let and work commenced on a new church at Woodland, a new and thriving town on the K. C. & J. Railroad. Some first-class Methodists live at Woodland, and we are glad to know that they are going to have a handsome and commodious house of worship.

Rev. A. S. Lutz informs us of the death of Mrs. W. H. Timmons, of Sodus, La., a sister of his wife. She died in Shreveport July 26, after thirty days of intense suffering. She was an active member of the church and a beautiful Christian character. Brother Lutz and his wife was with her during her last days. The bereaved family have our sympathy and prayers.

The presiding elder of the Corinth District expects to "carry a clean balance sheet to Conference next fall." For licensing preachers and sending them into the itinerant ranks, the district has broken the record. At the recent session of the Conference seven men were granted license, and five recommended to the Annual Conference. That sounds like old times.

At Crystal Springs Chautauqua last week, in the intercollegiate oratorical contest, the medal was won by Mr. Jno. W. Crisler, Jr., representative of Millsaps College. The winner is a son of Rev. J. W. Crisler, of the Mississippi Conference. The sons of the parsonage often make good. We congratulate this one on his merits, and on his good fortune. May he always deserve well.

Rev. W. G. Harbin requests us to correct a typographical error in a recent communication to this Advocate. In said communication we printed "inimicable," whereas it should have been printed as written, "inimical." There is no such word as "inimicable." All who noticed the mistake, of course, blamed the Advocate, not Brother Harbin. It was simply an overlooked typographical error.

We have had several good things said recently in our paper about the Enochs family. But the good was mostly said about those of a former generation. There are some good ones still living. One of them, P. H. Enochs, resides at Fernwood, Miss. He has lately sent us thirty-four subscriptions to the Advocate. He must be a good man. Such laymen are worth much to the church and to society.

We do not know the size of the town of Collins, Miss., but the minutes of the last Conference report a membership in our church there of 262. Dr. B. F. Jones is the efficient and accomplished pastor. He tells us in a private note that he has "two adult Bible classes" in his Sunday school," "with forty women in one, and forty-two men in the other." Can any one of our larger towns make a better showing?

The meeting in Asheville, North Carolina, in which Dr. Theo. Copeland is engaged, begun well. Large congregations greeted the preacher in the beginning, and have increased all along. It is too early in the engagement to report results. Our General Conference will meet in this city of churches next May, and already the good people there are beginning to plan for the meeting. They will give the Conference a royal reception.

A notice from Rev. John W. Crisler in regard to Henning Camp Meeting at Crystal Springs, Miss., reached us after last week's paper had gone to press. The meeting will begin before this issue reaches our readers. The preaching will be done by Rev. John T. Sawyer, of New Orleans, and Rev. W. M. Sullivan, of McComb City. Rev. C. N. Guice is the leader in singing. We are sorry the notice did not reach us in time for last week.

Rev. F. T. J. Brandon, a superannuate of the North Alabama Conference, died in Birmingham on the night of July 31, in the 78th year of his age. Though a superannuate he held the position of chaplain to the convicts at the mines. The length of his connection with the itinerancy we do not know, but it could not have been less than fifty-five years, as he was ordained elder in the fall of 1854. His was a long, honorable and useful career.

We would be glad if our brethren in Louisiana and Mississippi would clip from their local papers any personal notes, or notes of their charges, and mail them to us. We do not get in exchange all the papers in either State. We could not read them all if we did. When personal notices of a preacher, or items concerning his work, are not purposely flattering, his modesty should not hinder him from letting his brethren know how he fares. Send us the notes for the work's sake.

Rev. B. E. Meigs, Carthage, Miss., has recently closed a successful meeting, which resulted in "several bright conversions and some additions." The work in other respects "moves nicely." Brother Meigs sends us a list of twelve subcribers, for which we thank him. He adds this word: "I have been rather slow in looking after the interests of the paper this year, but have been very busy otherwise. You can expect at least a list of thirty subscribers from me before the Annual Conference meets." Good!

At the recent session of the Baton Rouge District Conference a board of trustees was appointed and authorized to locate and purchase a district parsonage. The board met and considered two points, Denham Springs and Hammond. The latter place was selected; a neat and commodious house, located on one of the best streets of the town, was purchased, and two weeks ago, the presiding elder, Rev. C. C. Miller, and family moved into the new home. They will add much in every way to our church in Hammond.

We have received from Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., a copy of the "Thumb-Indexed Pastor's Book," prepared by Rev. I. E. Thomas, of the Texas Conference. It is a systematically and conveniently arranged book, with a place for everything to be noted with which a Methodist preacher has to do. We thank the agents for kindly sending us a copy. We shall lay it by for future use, if a kind providence and Bishop Hoss work together for our good at the coming session of the North Mississippi Conference. The price of the little book is 50 cents, at Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Texas.

A special to the Shreveport Journal from Keachi, La., July 26, says: "Rev. B. J. Harp, of Shreveport, has been our pleasant guest for two days. He preached at the Methodist Church Saturday evening and Sunday morning and evening. All of these sermons were rare treats to Mr. Harp's friends. He has a score of friends in this vicinity. Mr. Harp was pastor of this work more than sixty years ago; then fifteen years ago he was pastor here for four years, and it is always a great pleasure to have him with us." The Shreveport Times of July 28 contained a similar notice of our venerable brother.

THE LONGEST RAILROAD IN THE WORLD.

An interview with F. von Gheel Gildemeester, chief engineer of the Cape Town to Cairo Railway syndicate, published in the New York Times gives the following facts:

There is at present a stretch of about 2500 miles to be completed in the railway; it lies between Khartum, in the British Egyptian Sudan, and Broken Hill, a town in Rhodesia. It is estimated that this remaining mileage will be completed within three years, and then the longest railroad in the world, covering in the neighborhood of 6400 miles, will be finished. The total cost will be very close to 200,000,000 pounds sterling, or about $1,000,000,000—a comparatively small amount when it is considered what a glorious thing it will be for Africa, one of the greatest and richest countries of the world. It will be possible for the traveler to journey from Berlin or Paris to Cape Town in ten or eleven days. Where now in traveling from Paris a business man is compelled to take a long sea trip, he will be able, after the completion of the road, to take train to Brindisi, Italy, thence by boat to Alexandria, Egypt, and a short journey to Cairo, where he will take the train that will land him in Cape Town, at the southern extreme of Africa, in eleven days.

TOPIC FOR AUGUST [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] not blind.

So we have here unwilling blindness, which Christ easily healed, and a willing blindness, which was hopeless. This is an inevitable law. No [illegible] naturally and rightfully God's way.

Naturally, God's way—that is, Nature's law or way. The man who is sure that he knows cannot be taught. Only he that confesses his ignorance can be taught. The egotistic pupil is a very poor learner. No teacher wants what men in ridicule call a smart aleck, for a pupil because he cannot be taught. The self-righteous Pharisees could not be taught even by Christ the best teacher earth ever saw, because they were willingly blind.

The disciples asked of Christ a very strange question: "Who sinned, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" We wonder how an unborn man could sin. These ignorant Galilean fishermen had evidently imbibed from somebody the pagan doctrine of metempsychosis, a notion that men have lived somewhere before, and that in that former earth-life they may have committed sins for which they suffer in this. They also believed that men are punished for the sins of their parents. The disciples believing these things wished to know whether the man's blindness had come because of his sins in a former earth-life, or because of his parents' sins.

The language of the Master does not mean absolutely that both the man and his parents had been sinless; but that his blindness was not because of any sin of his parents.

The Pharisees argued that Christ sinned in healing the man on the Sabbath. It is strange that it had not occurred to them that one who could exercise divine prerogative and power must surely have such a knowledge of right and wrong, and such a regard for right that he would not certainly do wrong. It is strange that these men did not suspect that their notion of what might or might not be done on the Sabbath might not be right. Men who are self-righteous are strangely blind.

IUKA STATION.

Mr. Editor: We have just closed a great meeting. Rev. W. M. McIntosh has been doing the preaching and he has with him Brother G. T. Tatum, of Jonesboro, Ark., to sing and talk. Brother McIntosh is held in very high esteem in his own town. The churches have been built up, sinners converted, backsliders reclaimed. To God we give all the glory.

The work done here cannot be estimated, eternity alone will reveal it. God has wonderfully blessed the labors of Brother McIntosh. Brother Tatum is a sweet-spirited, effective worker. Our church here is thoroughly organized and doing faithful work. There are some very devoted people in this church. I have received 104 members in one and a-half years, eighty on profession of faith. The assessment for domestic missions has been paid in full and seventy-five per cent. of the foreign mission assessment has been paid. "The Lord has done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Four copies of the New Orleans Christian Advocate were coming to the church here when I arrived. We now have twenty-nine copies.

Our efficient Sunday School superintendent, Geo. P. Hammerly, is loved and esteemed by all for his godly life and conversation. He has been on the official board for forty-five years and has been absent from only four Quarterly Conferences.

O. L. SAVAGE.

BISHOP CHARLES B. GALLOWAY

Resolutions by the Durant District Conference.

The death of our beloved Bishop Chas. B. Galloway, makes it eminently proper, for this Conference to pay tribute to the memory of this eminent divine. Death in whatever form it may come, (irrespective of its victim) casts a dark shadow over the living. This Conference recognizes that in the person of Chas. B. Galloway, was one of the most princely men of our day. That he possessed in a high degree amiability and true greatness. His love for humanity was rarely equalled and his zeal for Christianity was the limit of his ability. This Conference feels that no man could have been taken from our great church who would have been a greater loss, and more sincerely mourned and none more universally loved and revered. How true, that "a great prince in Israel has fallen."

Therefore, be it Resolved, that the secretary of this Conference be ordered to spread the above tribute on the Conference Minutes and forward a copy to the New Orleans Advocate for publication.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Our new church house at Blue Mountain was opened for service the first Sunday in last month (July) and we had a weeks' meeting with splendid interest and good attendance. Our membership has grown from thirty-four to fifty and we have a good Sunday School with fifty-three to begin with and new ones added each Sunday.

The whole community seems to be glad of our beautiful little church house, and our people there are going to do well. We are now turning our attentions to the debt that remains on our house and hope our friends will continue to help us.

HOME COMFORTS.

Every man and his family wants home comforts and spends a great deal of money for them. Now that the city is putting in the sewerage system and connecting all property with the water pipes free and the firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co. are doing the same with the sewer pipes, there is no reason that any family in the city owning a home should not have these comforts, especially when they go farther and do all kinds of plumbing work on contract and on the smallest monthly payments, giving the property holders every chance to enjoy these comforts and pay for them while enjoying same. If you are a property holder see them and get them to tell you the cost, and the liberal terms will cause you to have the work begun at once.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

A TRIBUTE TO AN ELDER SISTER.

Miss MARY ELIZABETH WIER was the daughter of the late Rev. William Wier, of the old Alabama Conference, and of Elizabeth Lipscomb Wier. She was born at Abbeville Courthouse, S. C., September 19, 1822, and after protracted sickness died in Muskogee, Okla., April 18, 1909, at the home of her niece, Mrs. A. E. Bonnell, with whom she had resided for several years past. While yet a child her parents moved to Green County, Ala., and thence, after a few years, to Columbus, Miss., where Mary Elizabeth was mostly educated and grew to young womanhood. In her bright girlhood my sister came out openly on the side of the Lord, joined the Methodist Church, and through her long life never wavered in her devotion and love for its doctrines, its usages and its fellowship. Though quiet and unpretentious in her Christian life, yet she was decided and firm in her religious profession and principles. She loved children and young people, and in earlier womanhood was a meritorious and successful teacher.

She loved her family and kindred with a fond and ardent devotion, and being the eldest living of the connection, it was a great comfort to feel that we had such an one to care for us and to love us. My daughter, Mrs. Bonnell, said she was often made to think of aunt Mary in connection with our Savior's words: "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." She was never happier than when doing something for others.

The affection bestowed upon her kindred did not exhaust the wealth of her generous nature, and she made friends outside the circle of her kindred. Sister Smith, a visitor to her sick room, said that "she never left her without feeling that the visit had been a benediction."

Rev. O. E. Goddard, her pastor, in a memoir of her, said: "She left a good name and a multitude of friends in Muskogee, who look forward with pleasure to meeting her on the other shore." Rev. S. G. Thompson, a former pastor in Muskogee, writing to my son-in-law, Dr. Bonnell, said: "My heart was touched when you told me of 'Aunt Mary.' She was always a favorite with me. * * * Her saintly character, unpretentious faith and abiding interest in the affairs of the church were points of great attraction to me. There was always an inspiration about her."

Though feeble in body, by reason of advancing years and occasional severe sickness, yet her mind remained alert and bright. She did not grow old in spirit. She still kept in touch with the life currents about her. She was fond of reading, and though deprived of the privileges of God's house much or all of the time for several years past, yet she found comfort and help in the church papers in devotional reading, and in her Bible. The well-worn volume, and the pencil marks in her Testament and Psalms evidenced her frequent companionship with the Word of God. A little volume in verse on the twenty-third Psalm which I sent to her last Christmas, has written on the blank inside cover in pencil, these words: "Thank you dear brother for the comfort this little book has given me."

She appreciated the prayers and religious services of friends visiting her sick room, and on one occasion said she "wanted to go on to her heavenly home." Our evening family worship in her room was a joy and comfort to her, and at its close she was wont to express her enjoyment and gratitude by a hearty "thank-you."

For some days before she died, it became evident that the end was not far away. It was during this part of her sickness, as remarked by a dear one watching in her room, that she seemed to have a bright vision of the heavenly world. Later I asked her what message I should bear to one or more absent loved ones. I caught only the last word of her answers, and that was, "heaven." This was the last word I remember from the lips of my dear sister.

On Sunday morning, about 3 o'clock she fell on sleep and rested from her labors. In the afternoon of the same day a funeral service was conducted at the residence of Dr. Bonnell by Rev. O. E. Goddard, assisted by Rev. T. L. Rippey of St. Paul's Methodist Church, and Rev. W. F. Dunkle, presiding elder of Muskogee District.

It was her wish to be buried in Columbus, Miss., near the sacred sleeping places of her father and mother and other loved ones. And on Tuesday, April 20, near the close of the day, with appropriate service by Rev. J. M. [illegible], in keeping with her wishes, we laid her body to rest in the cemetery at Columbus.

Her passing away from our earthly associations leaves us in deep sorrow, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. And we give thanks to our Father in heaven for her long, loving Christian life.

T. C. WIER.

DUMAS, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We are having good congregations at our churches and good services. While we have been rained out a few times, still the people will come at some of our churches. We have seven Sunday Schools, some of them are doing fine work. The young people are taking more interest in church work than the older ones. I would like for some-one to tell me how to get the old people to take an interest in the Sunday School. I find some places where they will come to the church, but will not come in for Sunday School. Will someone tell me what to do for better things on this point. I have a prayer meeting that is mostly run by the young people. I have some fine young people on my work, but they do not get that encouragement from the older ones that they ought to get. If mothers and fathers fail to encourage their children in this great work of the church, how can they expect them to do what they ought to do? Will someone tell me what to do?

BABY SAVED HER

"I was sick for three years," writes Mrs. Nolie Jones, of Russellville, Tenn. "I had a doctor and took medicine regularly, but grew worse, until last spring I was past going out and was just skin and bones.

"One day I noticed my baby playing with one of your Ladies Birthday Almanacs. I picked it up and from it learned of your Wine of Cardui.

"I have taken 4 bottles of Cardui and am well and hearty. Weigh 145 pounds. I believe Cardui saved my life and I hope all women who suffer as I did will try it."

Cardui is a pure, vegetable medicine for women. It has been found to relieve or cure nervousness, headache, backache, pain in the side and other female ailments.

If you are suffering, try Cardui at once. Thousands of letters come to us, from grateful women who have found relief in Cardui. If it has done so much for them, it surely will help you—just one more. Try it.

All reliable druggists sell Cardui, with full directions for use inside wrapper.

N. B. We will be glad to send you one of our Ladies Birthday Almanacs, if you will send postal card asking for it. Address: Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

LESSON FOR AUG. 8, 1909.

PAUL'S INSTRUCTIONS TO THE THESSALONIANS.

I Thess. v:12-24.

Golden Text: "See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good." I Thess. v:15.

The selected Scripture for this lesson is a beautiful picture of silver, in which the apples of gold appear, to satisfy the longings of him who would ever follow "that which is good." Paul wrote this Epistle from Corinth soon after he arrived there, and after Silas and Timothy came to him; and the words, as they are written, speak to us of the wonderful calm and peace that abode in his soul. They seem like an echo of the Lord's comforting assurance that was given to Paul in the vision. He remembered no more the night in which he had to flee from Thessalonica, it was all forgotten and forgiven, for he sends back a message of love, just as the great Master would have done. The message is for us also, and let us take it for our very own, and build upon it "our most holy faith." He means for us to know most intimately the ministers of Christ, so that they can be assured of our aid and support; and that we may the more readily receive the word of life. Especially when a preacher first comes to us from Conference appointment let all advances in intimacy be made by the church membership, going away beyond half-way to make acquaintance; seek the preacher, rather than compel him to seek the acquaintance of his people. Let the minister be "esteemed very highly in love" for his work's sake. He is the minister of Christ, and as we love our Lord, we should love him and aid him all in our power. The Church of Christ is the abode of peace; and in fostering peace the unruly should be kindly warned; love is a power in enforcing discipline. In the church there are many that are feeble-minded, not deficient in intellect, but poor in faith, only grasping a form of godliness, and not yet being assured of the power thereof; these need to be comforted, and reminded that the Comforter dwells within the heart. There are those that are weak, "cast about with every wind of doctrine" and an easy prey to temptation; to them must come the strong, having in mind the command, "Bear ye one another's burdens." All must have that patience that the God of Patience gives in answer to prayer. How can we render evil for evil, if we follow the golden rule as laid down by our Royal Master? Rejoice now, for God, for Christ's sake, has forgiven you of all your sins; rejoice now and continue evermore; for the sacrifice made for your sins is once for all; so as you rejoice, fall to your knees and pray. Pray without ceasing, not continually upon your knees, but let the heart always be bowed in prayer. Continue in the spirit of prayer. Whisper your prayers to the ever-listening Father as you go about your daily work. "Let no prayerless gap intervene between the times of prayer."

Give thanks to God for everything, for "it is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." We do not know how God moves "his wonders to perform," but we do know that he is our Father, and that we are his children; and what father on earth would work ill to his children? How much more then will the Heavenly Father always work for the good of them that love him? We have the witness in ourselves, the Holy Ghost abiding within our hearts. When we feel impelled to serve the Master more faithfully, or when we feel that our course of life is not up to the Christian standard, it is the fire of the Spirit, that warns our hearts to obedience; quench not the fire. Quench it not by halfhearted resolution, for if it is quenched in you it may burn low in your brother.

Heed the signs of the times; see God in every happening; and in the light of God's Word, learn the spirit of prophecy. Cast not aside the words of him who would warn the world of a judgment to come. It is true that we know not the day or the hour, the more reason why we should be ready, "for the Son of Man cometh in an hour that ye think not."

While we live, while we are in the world, in this probation, as we deal with life, and the things of life compass us, let us "prove all things" and "hold fast that which is good."

The godly man must walk uprightly. No questionable line of conduct, none that has any appearence of evil, becometh him, as he is answerable to God for the influence he exerts. For those who follow these precepts, the apostle prays most earnestly: "The very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God, your whole spirit, and soul and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Obituaries

[illegible] Brother Tinsley united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at [illegible] Church, in Kemper County, Miss., and proved a true and faithful member until he moved to Lauderdale County. There he remained a member of Bible Chapel Church until his death. Brother Tinsley loved his church and was true to its vows and faithful in its teachings; he always responded liberally to the calls for the support of his pastor, and the institutions of the church. He was always anxious for all the claims to be paid in full. He was a good counselor and a true friend. He will be greatly missed, not only in the home, but in the community and church. His home was the preacher's home. Many of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference can testify to this fact. [illegible] He was a true and faithful soldier, never flinching in the battle of the Master. He was always ready [illegible] at roll call. [illegible] It was the delight of his life to attend the services of the church and meet his old comrades, [illegible] that will never break up. [illegible] your tears, weeping ones, and [illegible] in hope of that happy reunion that will be by and by if we are as faithful and true as he was. He is now resting and waiting for us at the beautiful gate. His pastor,

C. C. GRIFFIN.

ELIZABETH D. YOUNG HERRING was born in North Hampton County, Va., Dec. 22, [illegible], and died at her home in Vicksburg, Miss., June 7, 1909. Mrs. Herring was twice married, first to Mr. J. B. Young, on May 26, 1852, afterward to Dr. B. S. Herring, on March 2, [illegible]. Her last illness was a long and painful one. For more than two years she was practically an invalid during which time she suffered much. In the midst of it all, though there was no word of complaint, and her patience and resignation were an inspiration to those whose privilege it was to attend her. She united with the Methodist Church when but a girl, and throughout her long life was a faithful and devoted member of same. The interment was at Edwards, Miss., her former place of residence. HER PASTOR.

Rev. and Mrs. A. D. Breeland have recently passed through a most trying ordeal in the death of two little ones. EMMA CATHERINE, aged eight months, passed away July 2, 1909. ANDREW DENNIS, aged one year and eight months, was called to go July 10. While their little bodies are resting in the quiet cemetery at Pleasant Hill, their pure little souls are playing about the pearly gates of the beautiful city of God. Our hearts go out in sympathy to Brother and Sister Breeland in their sorrow. Their bereavement is sad, indeed, yet they manifest a resignation beautiful and complete, knowing it is best, "best for [illegible] They have only one little one left to lighten their sorrow with her sweet, innocent prattle and loving touch. May she continue with them a comfort and blessing in the coming years. May heaven's precious blessings be with them. While the parting here is [illegible], yet the sorrow has no mingling of bitterness, for when father and mother [illegible] join them in the land of joy and song, [illegible] shall be spoken.

[illegible], Miss.

JOHN M. HIGGINS, M. D., was born in Rutherford County, Tenn., June [illegible], and died at his home in [illegible], Miss., June 23, 1909. He was among the early settlers of Marshall County, removing here in [illegible]. He graduated in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania in [illegible] and located the following year in [illegible], Tenn., where for many years he practiced his profession, and also conducted a general store. In [illegible] his community was visited by a disastrous cyclone which demolished his place of business, after which he returned to this county. He was married on the [illegible] day of January, [illegible], to Miss Mary E. [illegible], of [illegible], Tenn. Eight children blessed the union, of whom [illegible] three preceded the father into the spirit world. In his early manhood he united with the Methodist Church, whose doctrines he [illegible] advocated to the last. As a physician he had few equals, [illegible] and more than [illegible] for the [illegible]. He died suddenly in his own home and was buried in the [illegible] cemetery, where his ashes will repose until the resurrection morn.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT

This tribute of respect to the memory of Mrs. MAGGIE, wife of R. B. [illegible]. We, the committee appointed by the Sunday School of the M. E. Church, South, at Harrisville, Miss., to draft resolutions to the memory of Sister Maggie [illegible], who departed this life June 24, 1909, report as follows:

First. That we deplore the loss of our dear sister, and we take this method of expressing our appreciation of her worth. She was a Christian lady, a loving wife, a kind, affectionate and indulgent mother, and loving sister, in all the relations of life. She tried to be true in the performance of her duties.

Second. That we extend to her bereaved husband, children, brother, and sisters, our heartfelt sympathy. We mourn with them in their hour of sorrow.

Third. That we request that these resolutions be spread on the Sunday School Record, and that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and to the Simpson County paper.

MRS. NETTIE TAYLOR,
MISS IDA BARLOW,
MRS. R. T. NOLEN.

On May 23rd, 1909, LUCY ANN, wife of ex-State Senator J. M. Byers and daughter of F. C. and Jane Hunter, entered triumphantly upon her heavenly reward. A genuinely good woman and one full of faith and righteous deeds has ceased to suffer and to wait. She was trained by godly parents and in childhood's bright morning gave her heart to God. Her devotion to the Christ who redeemed her was continuous. Her allegiance to truth was never questioned; her courage and Christian fortitude was equal to the most trying ordeals; her spirit of self-sacrifice was as an "ointment poured forth." She literally lived for others. She took the place of mother to the writer during the years of babyhood. For thirty-five years she was the constant nurse of an invalid mother. Her relation as wife and stepmother was as nearly perfect and as universally Christ-like as we shall see again. The devotion and constant solicitude of her husband and his children [illegible]

J. F. McCLELLAN.

J. F. McCLELLAN.

Mrs. SARAH P[illegible], wife of Mr. A. T. Martin, was called from earth to that country from which no traveler ever returns. Sister Martin was sixty [illegible] years old, and had been a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, since [illegible]. She had been a faithful wife since [illegible]. She leaves a husband that must soon follow her, and several children to mourn her death. She was a good neighbor. [illegible] she lived a consistent member of the church until her death. She was a consecrated Christian woman, and died the [illegible] day of July, 1909. She was kind and affectionate and leaves no enemies. Surely Brother Martin and the remaining children will miss her. But they mourn not as those who have no hope. And a sure trust in God under all circumstances makes the burdens of life light and easy to bear.

ARTICLE III.

The capital stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at the sum of [illegible] dollars [illegible] to be represented by one hundred thousand [illegible] shares of the par value of ten dollars ($10) each. Each share of stock shall entitle its owner to one vote either in person or by proxy at all meetings of stockholders. This corporation shall commence business and be a going concern when five thousand dollars ($5,000) of said stock shall have been subscribed for.

ARTICLE IV.

There shall be a board of six directors of this corporation, in whom all its corporate powers shall be vested, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum. They shall select from among their number a President, Vice-President, Second Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, no two of which offices shall be held by the same person. Citation shall be served on the President; in his absence on the Vice-President, and in the absence of both of these on the Second Vice-President.

ARTICLE V.

The first board of directors of this corporation shall be Edwin J. Larkin, Charles A. Celestin, Leon E. Marion, Ambrose J. Guidry, Sidney Story and Philip H. Mentz; of whom Edwin J. Larkin shall be President, Charles A. Celestin shall be Vice-President, Leon E. Marion shall be Second Vice-President, Ambrose J. Guidry shall be Treasurer, and Sidney Story shall be Secretary. All of these directors and officers shall hold office until their respective successors shall have been elected.

ARTICLE VI.

On the first Monday of January, one thousand nine hundred and ten (1910), and annually thereafter, the stockholders shall meet and elect a board of directors; the secretary shall give ten (10) days prior notice of said meeting by mail to each stockholder, in which notice he shall state the place, date and time of said meeting. As soon as said directors are elected, they shall meet and select the officers of this corporation to serve until the next election thereof shall be had. The failure to hold the elections provided for in this article shall not dissolve this corporation. In that event the officers and directors then in office shall remain in office until their successors shall have been elected.

ARTICLE VII.

No stockholder of this corporation shall ever be held liable for the debts, defaults or obligations of this corporation in any greater sum than the unpaid balance of any subscription due by him on shares of the corporation owned by him.

ARTICLE VIII.

This done and passed at my notarial office in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, in the presence of H. A. Mentz and Edwin O. Cook, competent witnesses residing in this city, who hereto subscribe their names with said appearers and with me, said notary, after due reading.

WHOLE No. 2792.

Both houses of Congress having agreed on a constitutional amendment to allow the Government to levy a tax on incomes, the matter is now before the country. The Alabama Legislature now has the matter under consideration, and will doubtless concur, as will probably all the Legislatures of the South. But the measure does not meet the approbation of all the leading men of the country. Justice Brewer, of the United States Supreme Court, though admitting the right to adopt such an amendment, is outspoken in his opposition to the tax itself. In a public address he held the following language: "Supposing Congress sees fit to levy taxes on all the income derived from substantial personal property and real estate, what will the states do in case they need large sums? The power to tax, as Marshall said, is the power to destroy. If once you give power to the nation to tax all incomes, you give it power to tax the states, not out of their existence, but out of their vitality. Chief Justice Chase, in a memorable opinion, said the whole thought of the situation was of an indestructible union of indestructible states." Justice Brewer's words, considering his exalted position, are bound to attract attention.

Automobiles are good things. We would be glad if every man in need of a conveyance could own one. But too many owners are unfit to drive them. They are puffed up with the idea of their own importance, and wholly disregard the rights of others. It is fun to them to scare a horse and make it run. It may not be fun to run down a man, but in many instances they never stop to see whether they have killed their victim or not. The recklessness and indifference of drivers is noticed and commented on wherever the machines are in use. What the Brookhaven (Miss) Leader says is applicable to other places: "It is manifest that it is going to be a most difficult thing to preserve feelings of amity between auto operators and members of the rest of the community who do not own autos, unless the drivers of these machines show a greater consideration for the rights and safety of the rest of the public. Few things are more suited to arouse the resentment and hostility of the general public toward the use of autos than overspeeding and the reckless, not to say wanton frightening of teams by auto operators who are lacking in consideration for the rights and privileges of others. Against the way some auto owners operate their cars nothing can be fairly said. They are both careful and courteous in their consideration for others. There are others who appear to be blind to the rights and interests of everybody else and bent on giving trouble or inviting it."

It is said that on an average, convicts in Louisiana who are sentenced for life do not serve longer than fourteen years. The following from the Magnolia Gazette would indicate that something like the same length of service or shorter is the rule in Mississippi. The Gazette says: "The publication this week of the names of men who are now serving life sentences in the State Penitentiary reveals the interesting fact that one man sent up from his county in May, 1900, is now the oldest convict in the penitentiary in point of service, with the exception of one who went there the preceding March. That there are no life-servers in the penitentiary now who have been there as much as ten years is a striking commentary on the inefficiency of imprisonment for life, yet it is a favorite method of punishment for murder by Mississippi juries." We have no doubt that many convicts under the influence of a faithful chaplain and a humane superintendent, repent and reform, and, pardoned, make good citizens. We have no doubt, either, that pardon boards are better qualified to determine the penalty due one who has committed a crime than juries sometimes are; for juries are often too severe, and often too lenient. But nothing justifies the wholesale pardoning of criminals. It is not best for the interests of the State.

We called attention in this department several weeks ago to the fact that a youth had, through the use of wireless telegraphy, exploded a composition of his own device at a distance of several miles. Now comes the news that another young man has been successful in a like experiment, exploding buried mines at a distance of seven miles. Army officers were witnesses of his experiment, and "both army and electrical experts declare that the invention will revolutionize modern warfare." News also is given out to the effect that "an officer in the American Army, stationed at Fort Omaha, has worked out an electric invention which is likely to paralyze all other existing or proposed engines of war. The machine is said to project through the air a column of electric energy of almost any desired strength at any given object for a distance of many hundred yards." It is further said that "such an electric column would queer every mechanism on a warship, stop the engines, annul the dynamos, kill the signaling apparatus, make the guns unworkable, slay hundreds of men by shock alone, and might even explode the magazines. Its possibilities for offensive warfare are almost unlimited." General Forest used to say that success in battle depended on getting there first with the most men. If all that is said of this machine be true, success would always be on the side of the army that could deliver the first shock. Surely, if as Mr. Roosevelt declared "ample preparation is the best defense against war," these "shocking" machines will not only act as deterrents, but actually shut out all talk of war. Then will come to pass the prophecy "They shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Nowhere in the South is there a disposition to backslide on the temperance movement. The victory of the liquor forces at Bristol, Va., was not a setback. Had the victory been a clear and honest gain for them, it would have amounted to but little, for Bristol, Va., is only a small town—in fact is but half of Bristol, the other half being in Tennessee. But when it is considered that the liquor men arrayed their forces—brewers and distillers and sellers—and put up large sums of money to carry the election, it goes without saying that every purchasable vote was bought. The election is being contested, and it may be that Bristol will not go back into the wet column. At present the Alabama and Georgia Legislatures are in extra session, and are showing no signs of weakening their prohibition laws—on the contrary, they are being strengthened. The prohibition column is "marching on" in Florida, and the prospect is that South Carolina, on the 17th, will wipe out nearly all of the State Dispensaries. And one of the best indications of the success of prohibition is found in the internal revenue for the year ending July 30. The report shows that the "whisky tax collections last year were $134,868,034, as against $140,158,807 for the preceding year. The receipts for beer and other fermented liquors amounted to $57,456,411, a decrease of $2,351,205, compared with 1908." The total decrease in the liquor revenue was $7,315,196. And yet liquor papers try to make believe that more liquor is consumed in prohibition territory than when the sale is allowed and encouraged.

Some time since a correspondent stated in our paper that it was not safe in some portions of Mississippi to show too much zeal in the enforcement of the law against "blind tigers," etc. We thought at the time that the danger was overestimated. Of that, however, we are not sure. But we are sure, if reports in the daily papers are reliable, that there is much lawlessness and open defiance of the law in the State. Open defiance of the law is worse than lawlessness on the part of those who, through fear of the law, violate it in secret. Nothing can be worse than the news that came from Biloxi to the Times-Democrat on August 1. According to the dispatch, Judge Hardy, of the Second District Court, issued an order to the sheriff of Harrison county "to instruct his deputies to enforce the Sunday law as it is written, and to arrest all violators." The report says "the order was ignored. All places of business that formerly kept open on Sunday did business as usual. Not an arrest was made. Biloxi has always enjoyed the distinction of being one of the wide-open towns of Mississippi, and the next step of Judge Hardy will be watched with interest." Ignored, was it! Who ignored it? Those who kept their places of business open on Sunday broke the law, but on this particular Sunday they were no more guilty than on other Sundays. Nor were the deputies only at fault. The responsibility falls on the sheriff, who had specific and mandatory instruction, which instruction, if within the law, he chose to ignore. We hope there is some mistake about this report. If true, then what? Simply this: We can have no good government as long as chief officers ignore the law. And the "next step of Judge Hardy will be watched with interest." We rather think it will.

"MOSS FROM A PERIPATETIC PEBBLE."

By Rev. Briscoe Carter.

When this writer went home from Conference it was with a feeling distinct from any he had hitherto had. There were several things that contributed to that sensation, which I can best describe as a sense of vagueness. It never dawned upon me until I started to pack up to move where I could best serve my work that the sense of this vagueness was due to the fact that I was a "preacher without a people." For a preacher who has all the time had a people whom he looked upon in a peculiar sense as his people, and whom he has loved and endeavored to lead in all things pertaining to their present and future good, to awaken to the fact that he is—in its truest meaning—a preacher without a people, is a very lonesome feeling.

So, when things conspired to delay my removal from Ruston at the time I expected to, neither I nor any of my family were sorry; for those people had been mine and they will always have a warm place in my heart. (Brother Tucker ought to be glad his lines have fallen to him in such a pleasant place.)

After a bit, it came to pass that I moved to Shreveport, where I hired me a house in which to put the wife and children, while I went out to do as best I could the work given me. On the first Sunday in Shreveport I attended service at First Church, and heard the new preacher, Brother Whaling. He reminds me of two former preachers, who were both pastors at Shreveport and at other places in our Conference, and who were highly regarded by the rank and file of our Conference—Drs. Pierce and LaPrade. His people are pleased with him and his wife is a great help. She has there the largest week-day Bible class I know of in the State—though only women attend—numbering, when I heard from it last, 154. Can anybody beat this for a Monday afternoon class?

The second Sunday I had the pleasure of preaching at Texas Avenue. Though I came in unannounced, Brother Craddock insisted that I preach, and not knowing how often I might get this pleasure, I seldom refuse, and so accepted his kind invitation. Brother Craddock had a good start at his place, and the prospects at that point seem bright. He has there one of the serious problems of our Conference—how to sustain the needed church in the midst of a transient population. I do trust that he and his faithful officiary will be able to solve it, and that Texas Avenue will come to be what it ought to be—a tower of strength in that part of the city.

I next had the privilege of preaching to Brother Snellings' people at Creswell Street. John was graciously received by his people and entered at once into the work of securing lots for the new church which will be called the Noel Memorial and will stand as a monument to the love and liberality of Brother Noel. Suitable lots on Jordan Street have been secured and the people hope to begin work on the church in the near future. This church will be one of the strongest in the city in a short time, unless I have missed calling the signs.

Then I had the privilege of preaching for Brother Whaling to a good and interesting congregation, and [illegible] impress [illegible] the preacher [illegible] were interested. This church has a commanding place in the city and no matter what churches may hereafter be projected [illegible] there [illegible] always to remain what she is, First Church. She occupies, by her position, a place of great opportunity and possibilities. That she ought to be forever the place for the first church [illegible]. No [illegible] sought to take her crown. And I doubt not under the leadership of Brother Whaling and the cooperation of the officials there and other [illegible]

By the time these rounds had been made I was then ready to go on. Naturally my steps were turned South for similar reasons. [illegible] were also—and the first place visited by me was Lake Charles, where our interests are looked out for by that worthy descendant of illustrious ancestry—Drake. There I enjoyed the hospitality of one of my former parishioners and present advisers—Drake's wife—I think she exercises her present privilege because she stood at the altar with me when I was married. I sometimes think my deficiencies are due to the fact that I do not get much advice rather than to my unwillingness to take it.

Here I found a large congregation, and best of all, the best Methodist Sunday School I have seen in this year. This is due to the fact that the superintendent is a live man. Gus Mayo being alive himself, imparts life to everything with which he has to do.

From Lake Charles to Crowley is not much of a trip if you make it on the "Sunset Limited." There I came into the bounds of my work of former years. I was the first station preacher there. I was sent to a circuit, but never made the rounds but once and told my presiding elder, Brother J. A. Miller, that the needs were such as to justify putting all my time there. And if he would secure a preacher for the other part of the circuit I would stay at Crowley and risk getting cared for. There were not many members. I still have the roll of the membership there in 1892, but there was not many of me, and in all the years of my ministry, somehow I have got along. Everybody was trying to get things in shape to better themselves, but there were some who had a place in their home and their hearts for the young preacher. Mother Burton, whom I will never forget (the memory of her ought always be to her surviving sons and daughters as ointment poured forth) told me, "you go round to Roy's and tell them I sent you—you stay there until we can find a place." I did; and Judge Clarke and his good wife will always be in my heart because they kindly accepted my invitation to stay with them! Then Tom Toler came to the rescue and gave me a home in his house for the balance of the year. I never got much money that year, if I mistake not about $150, but I got a good deal more. I found friends and made friendships which will never end. A friend, in all that word means, is the best possession this world can disclose.

That church has grown largely in the intervening years and now is where it gives the preacher one of the nicest homes in town and a good salary. But in those days Mother Burton and son, W. W. Duson, and her daughters and sons-in-law, Brother and Sister Forman, Judge and Sister Clarke, Tom and Sister Toler and Gus and Sister Foulmat, together with Dr. R. R. Lyons and Brother Milton were the dependence of the preacher. Any man who receives that appointment is blest with one of the greatest appointments in this Conference. I found Benton there rejoicing in "possession" and his people greatly pleased with their preacher. There are two men in this Conference whose gift for "mixing" with people I covet. If I could do that like they can I might do much better than I do. These two are Benton and Charlie Wier.

Here I had the pleasure of preaching to some of my former parishioners, seeing few of the familiar faces of times gone.

From Crowley I went to the New Orleans District Conference, found Bishop Ward in the chair and the largest attendance that I ever saw at a District Conference there.

Dr. Parker has things in fine shape and every preacher there is interested in the things of every other. [illegible] In company with Bishop Ward, Drs. Rice, Parker and [illegible] Joyner, I took lunch at St. Marks, all of us [illegible] guests of the elect ladies of New Orleans [illegible] Sister W. W. Carre. Certainly it seems [illegible] we are on the way to a solution of some of the church's problems when we undertake such work as is [illegible] and being done by Joyner and his assistants in that work. If there is any among us who can bring that work to success, it seems to me [illegible] his name [illegible].

Sunday after the District Conference, I went out to Epworth to preach for one of my boys, Sims. Found a fine Sunday school and a good congregation. The prospects at Epworth are good, and Sims will bring things to pass.

While in New Orleans during Holy Week, I found Rev. A. Inimitable Townsley conducting nightly services. [illegible] man that when other churches are open for worship the Methodist Church should not be closed. His work at this place is so well known that more need not be said by me, except that one young preacher told me with the note of pride and satisfaction in his voice, when telling me of the success with which he was meeting, "they call me a second Townsley."

The only thing I regret about my trips to New Orleans is I never yet have had time to make the rounds; that place is dear to me for many reasons, especially old Felicity, for I am one of her boys and there are many yet remaining with whom I associated in days long agone. While there, I was the guest in the hospitable home of one of the members of the first charge I served after joining the Conference, Mrs. L. S. Clarke. I also enjoyed the hospitality of Dr. Parker, Sam Meyer, and that chief conversationalist, Dr. Rice. When I get to talking with him, time suffers an acceleration of its complaint, for it was 1 a. m. ere I was aware of it. To me there is nothing like a good talker.

From New Orleans I came back to Franklin where I spent one year in the early part of my ministry. Here I found Charlie Weir delightfully situated in fine touch with his people and as he expressed it, "ready for the time limit to be removed and me let alone." Weir is doing a fine work here.

Having a Sunday without an appointment I asked Newt. Brown if I might come to Morgan City and preach the second Sunday night in April, this was granted. Had a good congregation, but in it were only two faces of grown people who had been members of it twenty years ago when I closed a two-year's pastorate there. Brown had just closed a successful meeting there which resulted in a goodly number of accessions. On the fourth Sunday in April I returned and preached at 11 o'clock and presented my cause and got a good collection. Many changes have taken place in twenty years, many faces were missing from the congregation. I missed particularly the faces of Capt. and Mrs. Pharr, Brother M. L. and Sister Hamilton, for I had never filled that pulpit without having the help of their presence. The Captain and Sister Pharr have gone to their reward, and Brother and Sister Hamilton have their work in the Sunday School and church at Berwick. Instead of the mother and father, there were the sons and their wives and in their children, John and Eugene, they being dead, yet speak, and their wives are worthy successors of that faithful worker, Sister Pharr.

From here I went on to Leesville, the last pastoral charge I served. Here Holder had slipped very smoothly into place and had things in hand and pushing the interests of the kingdom. I always like to preach at Leesville. They are such good listeners; they just pull the preach out of me any how. Always hate to leave them. We had some fine times there when there were not near so many of the people called Methodists, and when it was a labor to do what was done. Of those that stood by the ark in those days, I recognized in the congregation Palmer, Williamson, G. R. Ferguson, Ford, and of the elect women not a few—missed the face of Jno Lee, but, hearing he was sick, called to see him and his folks that evening. Here I got the largest collection that I have taken publicly, a little in excess of six hundred dollars. I feel encouraged to call again. Then I turned my steps home after an absence of more than a month, the longest continued absence from home. I was glad to get there.

FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

[illegible] that this summer [illegible] I would have [illegible] of a healthy [illegible]. No [illegible] were surprised to hear [illegible] army surgeon, and I can [illegible] no more so than I was. I [illegible] this way. In June of last year, I [illegible] journal that a law had been [illegible] a Medical Reserve Corps, to be composed of physicians who would be willing to serve their country in time of trouble, and when needed in times of peace. It was stated that only a limited number would be placed on the active list in time of peace." It seemed to me that it would be nice for my boy to know that his father had a commission from the president of the United States, as an army surgeon, even if never called into active work. I had no expectation of being called into the active list, but was willing to serve, should I be needed. The examination was held in New Orleans in September, and as all government examinations are hard, I was really surprised to pass, and especially to get the first place. After my commission came, I gave the matter no more thought, but went on with my practice as if nothing had happened. What was my surprise to be ordered into active service, first at Fort Sam Houston (near San Antonio), then on out to the Philippines. Of course, it would have been cowardly to refuse to go, and as I had "put my hand to the plow" I did not look back.

The life in the army is quite unlike civil life. I found the officers a most generous, open-hearted set. No green man could have been treated better. I enjoyed my stay at Fort Sam Houston immensely. One of my first acts was to connect myself with Travis Park Church. The pastor, Brother Burgin, is one of our great young men, and our relationship with each other was extremely pleasant. No pastor was ever better, and my wife and mother both enjoyed the delightful services each Sabbath.

Out here I am now stationed at a Scout Station. For the benefit of your readers who are not posted in army matters, I may explain that there are about thirty small posts manned by native soldiers with American officers, scattered all over the different islands. They help to keep the peace, and no white man could be prouder of his uniform than are the native soldiers. Each post has a hospital, and surgeon. Of course, it is very lonesome out here, after service in a big city. But it is only for two years, and usually a surgeon gets about three different places while out here. So I hope that I will have the opportunity to see a good part of the country before I start home.

It is impossible to estimate the wealth of the country. No one can tell of what it will be capable of in the future. In all the villages that I have seen, there is a big church—Roman Catholic—and many of the people seem to go there. It seems to have a great hold on their imaginations, and is firmly planted here. In Manila I hunted up a Methodist Church, and spent Easter Sunday with them. That was the last time I entered a church, and I am afraid it will be some weeks before I can get there again. The pastor, Rev. L. S. Harper, treated me as a "friend and brother" in every sense of the word. I hope to be with the good people of that church again.

In concluding this letter, let me tell your readers that they never realize what church means to them, until deprived in part of it. I do so often long for a word of the gospel, and would rejoice to hear one of our good old hymns sung, even if the voice singing it were out of tune. I have my Bible, and the daily reading and study of it is all the church that I have.

When crossing the dreary semi-desert plains and mountains of Arizona, I noticed the sheep trying to pick up a little food in the valleys and along the bases of the foothills. It all seemed so dreary and dull—not enough grass in an acre for one sheep. I became interested in watching them from the observation car. They had to work all day for their meal, and there was no friendly tree to cast shade. The words of the Shepherd King came back to me: "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures"—pastures where only a few hours would be needed to satisfy hunger, and where there is agreeable shade in which to rest. I am in a spiritual desert now, but I feel sure that sometime I will get to the green pastures again, and be led "beside the still waters."

JAPAN LETTER.

Since the first of May, my work has been considerably extended on account of having to take over, until the Annual Meeting, at least, the work of Brother W. A. Wilson, who at that time returned to the United States on a furlough. The Oita Circuit, which has thus been added to my field, consists of five appointments, which are distant from Nakatsu respectively, about thirty-five, forty, fifty, eighty, and one hundred miles. In going to them, I use the steam-car, the electric car, the steamboat, the jinrikisha and the basha, but mainly the last three. I have just returned from a trip around the Circuit, and I thought it might be of interest to write you something about it.

From Nakatsu, I take the train to Usa, twelve miles distant. Sometimes we remind our friends of the advantage of living in Nakatsu because of its nearness to the homeland, being only twelve miles by train to the U. S. A.

At Usa, I take a basha, which means a horse-vehicle, just as jinrikisha means a man-power-vehicle. In the country districts especially, the basha is largely taking the place of the jinrikisha; and of course that is in line with true progress. We might naturally suppose that the basha is supplanting the jinrikisha because it is both more comfortable and faster. But the fact is it is neither. The reason is simply because it is cheaper. Our basha, however, is an "improved basha," what some English-speaking Japanese call the "reformed basha," because it has springs, falsely, so-called, and is upholstered (?) inside. I must confess that riding, even in a "reformed basha," is not my favorite mode of travel. But six or seven hours of this rough riding brings us to Kitsuki, a distance of twenty-five miles, in good time for the Quarterly Conference and preaching service that night.

Kitsuki is a town of eight or ten thousand inhabitants, and is the principal appointment on the Circuit. Here we have a local preacher working and twenty-five or thirty members. Another appointment seventeen miles distant, is worked in connection with it. The Quarterly Conference is small; but our presiding elder, Brother K. Nakamura, a graduate of the Theological Department of Vanderbilt, makes it interesting and profitable. Just here I want to say that our Japanese brethren are making good presiding elders. In holding preaching services on the Circuit, as well as in the Quarterly Conference, they make their visits very helpful to the work.

From Kitsuki, I take jinrikisha for Beppu, one of Japan's most popular hot springs. When I came to Japan twenty years ago, it was a small village. Now it has a population of 15,000, and is rapidly growing. Here we have a chapel and fifteen or twenty members. The work here is carried on from Oita, which is only eight miles distant and is connected by an electric car line.

At Oita, we have a good church building, recently improved, with the largest membership, over one hundred, of any church in this district. Brother Nakamura is preacher-in-charge of this church, as well as presiding elder of the district. Here Brother Wilson, who has just returned home on a furlough, lived for many years; and the progress of the work here is largely due to his earnest, self-denying labors. Miss Worth is now here, doing excellent service both in Oita and on the Circuit, not only in her special work for women and children, but in other lines also.

We are proud of the reputation of our

for superior quality, uniform excellence and all-around goodness. It is giving satisfaction everywhere. In one week recently we received four orders for solid carloads of this coffee—30,000 lbs each. In one day the sum total of the order amounted to 92325 lbs. LUZIANNE COFFEE.

Pleases Everybody.

Its price, its quality, its strength, its freshness are making it the most satisfactory of coffees.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

The Reily-Taylor Co., New Orleans, U. S. A.

The other two appointments, Saiki and Usuki, are reached by steamer from Oita. We have a local preacher serving the two places. The work was opened last year, and we have only three or four members in each place. I have not space to write of my visit to those places.

On the return trip, I take jinrikisha from Beppu to Usa, a distance of thirty miles, and make it in less time and much more comfortably than if I had taken a basha. The fields are covered with wheat, just ready for the sickle, a beautiful sight. Within three weeks, the whole appearance of the fields will be changed. The wheat will be cut, the fields ploughed and flooded with water, and the rice-sprouts transplanted. So that everywhere, as you look out over the fields, you will see the tender rice stalks putting up out of the water. In another week, you can see in one field the harvesting, close by the ploughing, and perhaps in an adjacent field the planting. Its the busy time for the farmer. Except the harvesting, nothing stops for rain. You will see them ploughing and planting all day in a drenching rain.

In our evangelistic work also it is a busy time. The whole land is being prepared by various influences and agencies for the planting of the gospel-seed. But it is a time of reaping also. "The fields are white unto the harvest." But the laborers are few. I trust that you will join with us in the prayer that the Lord of the Harvest will send forth laborers into his harvest.

LET TRUTH PREVAIL.

By Rev. B. B. Thomas.

There are but two alternatives left to the Christian Church, when we consider the onslaughts of such scholars as Profs. Elliott, Foster, Coe, Jenks, Seligman, Bogart, Rossignol, Wendell, Cooley, Matthews, Blackmar, Vedits, Ross and numerous others of whose scholarship there can be no doubt. One is, to fly into the face of scholarship, by a vital faith in the infinite, supernatural God, and his Bible, as a revelation of himself and his will, and thereby obtain a great enduement of power upon the Christian Church; or, secondly, to surrender the Bible and our faith to said scholarship, and accept the medley of Unitarian-Universalistic, Pantheistic, naturalism and materialism, that they would substitute instead of God and the Bible of our fathers.

The large, full publication of the deductions of these recognized scholars, whose very positions entitle them to the respectful hearing that they are receiving from the great masses of the public, will bring forth its fruit among the common people as surely as have the proclamations of Rev. R. J. Campbell of his "new theology" brought forth its fruits in the pulpits of our land.

Where is the school, North or South, to which we may send a boy to-day from which he will not come out admitting "that he is no longer orthodox?"

Let the Christian Church meet the issue squarely, and proclaim her absolute faith in the God of the Bible and in the Divine authenticity of his word, and cease to temporize with the "new theology" and its teachers, or admit their claims, and accept the medley of new truth, as deduced by them, and cease to preach and teach one thing to the common people, and believe and teach entirely another thing in secret.

The truth is what we are all seeking, and if modern scholarship has really discovered the truth, and all our blessed old orthodoxy is a mere myth, let the truth prevail. Surely great consternation must prevail in the new adjustment of these divergent beliefs; and the new faith will prove an edged tool with which many will commit moral suicide; but if after 1900 years scholarship has really discovered that the Christian Church has been following cunningly devised fables, and that there is no supernatural element in the Christian religion, then the world is entitled to know it. Let truth prevail, though the heavens fall.

METHODIST HISTORICAL SOCIETY OF MISSISSIPPI.

The seventh annual meeting of the Mississippi Methodist Historical Society was held in the auditorium of the First Methodist Church, Jackson Monday, June 7, at 4 o'clock, p. m. In the absence of the president and vice-presidents, R. S. Ricketts, treasurer, was called to the chair. Rev. R. A. Meek led in prayer.

The calling of the roll showed the presence of the following members, to-wit:

W. T. J. Sullivan, J. E. Carpenter, W. H. Saunders, S. M. Thames, T. W. Lewis, W. B. Lewis, R. A. Meek, G. W. Bachman, T. J. O'Neil, C. W. Crisler, T B. Holloman, E. H. Mounger, W. B. Murrah, R. S. Ricketts, A. F. Watkins.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The Committee on Depository, consisting of R. S. Ricketts and T. W. Lewis, made a verbal report concerning a cabinet for the care and display of the property of the Society.

It was moved and seconded that the vice-presidents be instructed to make a statement of the aims and purposes of the Society at the anniversary meetings in December, and take collection for the benefit of the Society, and the motion prevailed.

On motion, J. D. Barbee, Jr., was elected to honorary membership in the Society.

It was moved and seconded that every pastor in the two Conferences be and is hereby requested to prepare or have prepared for the Society a historical sketch of every church on his work, and the motion prevailed.

On motion, G. W. Bachman and T. B. Holloman were elected "Historical Secretaries" for the North Mississippi and Mississippi Conferences, respectively, and instructed to undertake to carry out the provisions of the foregoing action.

On motion, R. W. Millsaps, T. B. Holloman, and J. R. Bingham were appointed a committee to confer with Dr. Dunbar Roland relative to the placing of an oil-painting of Bishop Galloway in the "Hall of Fame" in the Mississippi State Capitol.

T. B. Holloman was elected to address the Society at its next anniversary before the Mississippi Conference, and W. B. Lewis was elected alternate.

W. W. Woollard was elected to address the Society at its next anniversary before the North Mississippi Conference, and R. A. Meek was elected alternate.

Upon motion, the Society proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year, and the following were elected, to-wit:

W. B. Lewis, president; T. B. Holloman, vice-presiden; W. W. Woollard, vice-president; A. F. Watkins, secretary; R. S. Ricketts, treasurer; T. W. Lewis, curator; G. W. Bachman, curator; W. H. LaPrade, curator; C. W. Crisler, curator.

On motion, the secretary was instructed to prepare for publication in the New Orleans Christian Advocate a copy of the proceedings of this meeting, and to furnish also to the same paper for publication a copy of the Constitution and By-Laws of the Society.

A. F. Watkins moved that the action of the last meeting of the Society, relative to the preservation of Annual, District, Quarterly, and Church Conference Records in the archives of the Society, be reaffirmed, and the vice-presidents of the Society be requested at the approaching anniversaries of the Society to ask the Annual Conferences to take action favorable to this object, and the motion was adopted.

It was moved and seconded that R. S. Ricketts be appointed to confer with Mrs. C. B. Galloway, relative to the depositing in the archives of the Society of certain articles of historic interest, which had been collected by the late Bishop Chas. B. Galloway, and the motion prevailed.

On motion, the Society adjourned, the benediction being pronounced by S. M. Thames.

The Constitution of the Society is herewith submitted, as follows:

Article 1. This Association shall be called The Historical Society of the Mississippi Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Article 2. Its object shall be to collect and preserve relics and information concerning the rise and progress of Methodism within the bounds of the two Mississippi Annual Conferences, and elsewhere; such as manuscripts, books, pamphlets, medals, pictures, and anything calculated to shed light upon or illustrate the subject.

Article 3. The property of the Society shall be deposited in some safe and convenient place, to be selected by the Board of Curators or designated by the Society at an annual meeting. It shall be kept in the care of a custodian to be appointed by the Board of Curators, and shall at all times be open to the inspection of the members of the Society; but in no case shall any article be removed from the museum or depository. The custodian shall number and label each article legibly, with the name of the author or donor, and the date of its presentation, and a register of the same shall be kept, with brief historical notes thereon, in a substantial book provided for the purpose.

Article 4. The officers of the Society shall consist of a president, two vice-presidents (one from each of the Annual Conferences in the State), a secretary, a treasurer, and four other Curators, all to be elected annually by the Society, all of whom together shall constitute the Board of Curators. At least five of said Curators shall be travelling preachers and members of one of the Conferences. The five officers first named shall perform the duties usual to such officers in similar organizations. The Board of Curators shall have all the powers of the Society when the latter is not in session, except as the same may be limited in the Constitution, By-Laws, or resolutions of the Society. It shall be the duty of the Board of Curators to devise and carry out plans for accomplishing the objects of the Society, but it shall have no power to incur debt.

Article 5. The membership of the Society shall consist of all the clerical members of the two Mississippi Annual Conferences and such lay members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as may be elected by the Society or the Board of Curators. The Board of Curators shall have power to elect not more than five honorary members annually.

There shall be no fees or dues, but a collection shall be taken up annually or oftener as the necessities of the Society may require and the Curators direct.

Article 6. The Society shall hold a meeting annually in the city of Jackson in the month of June, during or about the time of the commencement exercises of Millsaps College. The Board of Curators shall meet at sessions of the Annual Conferences, and at other times at the call of the president or of four members.

Article 7. This Constitution may be amended at any annual meeting of the Society by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

COLLEGES OF LOUISIANA.

The outlook seems to be fine for a good opening in September for both Centenary and Mansfield Colleges. Presidents Weber and Harrell are in the field and are untiring in their efforts to this end, and I believe that the good people of our State and Conference will do their part, and success is ours if we unite in this great purpose of building up the schools of our Conference. Another encouraging feature is the perfect harmony which exists between the two colleges. As was said by the president of the Conference Board of Education, at the board meeting in Shreveport, after the complimentary remarks of President Weber in regard to Pres. Geo. L. Harrell—speaking of his good qualities—his ability and untiring effort to do well his work, "the colleges are now correlated in spirit if not in name." And it has been manifested in many ways since that time. We all believe this is the right spirit.

Our Commissioner of Education seemed hopeful and we are all agreed that our colleges should be sufficient to educate our own boys and girls in our own State, and I think this will be our united effort.

If you'll excuse a word of personal reference, I will say: I was drawn into this work against my will—not against my will because I do not love the colleges—for indeed I do love them both, and would gladly do anything in my power to assist them, or our Commissioner of Education in the important work, but against my will, as any pastor knows, I haven't time to give to any other work outside of my own pastorate.

The Mansfield College was in a financial strait. I asked the business men of Mansfield to assist me in this, promising if they would, I would do what I could to relieve the situation. They put up the money and asked me to put some work as I had no money to put up. I am trying to comply with my part of the arrangement. I believe, however, that the time is coming when we will all be glad to say that we have done something for our colleges.

I believe we have the right men at the head of these institutions and their work is going to make us proud of our schools.

I hope to see 150 boarding pupils in each school this year.

A very important point now to be achieved as this writer views it is to increase local confidence. In order to this the members of pastoral charges should earnestly cooperate with their pastor and with each other respecting all the interests of the church. Outsiders should not be depended on as they are sometimes, to run the meetings, and divide and confuse. People should beware of self-appointed leaders, especially those who can scrap up such a large amount of finance.

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" is a suggestive saying. To make home attractive to children, to make them feel that it is the place where all that is lovely and genial in the affections cluster, they should be entertained there by things that are both instructive and innocent. Such games, however, should not be played there that are suggestive of worldliness or alienation from home and loved ones.

One evidence that all people have sprung from the same stock is that they have the same nature and sin has the same effect upon them, and when they are converted to God they have the true Spirit in them. When cannibals—regular man-eaters—are converted, they show the spirit of Christ just as certainly as those do that have been brought up in the best regulated Christian communities. There is usually much talk about social equality. There is evidently more of social equality among people than there is of social congeniality. There are thousands of the same color, equal intellectually, socially in respect to education, finance and so on, and yet they do not associate with each other for want of congeniality. Truly good people are united in spirit, but they are not all necessarily united socially, even when they reside near each other.

A little girl returned home from church and said: "Grandma, Brother C said in his sermon, 'Don't get your feelings hurt, don't stick them out to get hurt, hold them in,' and he said 'don't drink whisky, folks drink and they get drunk and it makes them want to fight.'"

Brother Jaco hopes to carry up to Conference a clean balance sheet this Fall.

SIGNS OF PROGRESS

So far this year there has been no great awakening in the bounds of the Winona District, but signs of progress are seen on every hand. Some good meetings are being held, resulting in conversions and additions. One new parsonage is being built and another one is in contemplation. The new parsonage is at Alva, on the Mars Hill Circuit, and we expect

BOY WANTED.

In an Indiana city a minister one Sunday afternoon was studying over his evening sermon. It was a temperance sermon. His desk telephone bell rang. He heard this through the receiver:

"Say, this is the Tivoli saloon. Won't you send down one of your boys right away?"

"What's that you say?" gasped the astonished minister.

"We want a boy right quick; hustle him down here to the Tivoli saloon, I say."

"Look here," thundered the preacher back over the telephone wire, "I want to tell you you'll not get any boy from me. I'll fight you everlastingly before you get any boy of mine. Who do you think you're talking to, anyhow?"

"Why, isn't this the Red Line messenger office? I want a messenger boy."

"No, it isn't; not by a long shot. It's the Presbyterian manse."

"Well, well, parson, don't be miffed; it was just a mistake."

"It's surely an awful mistake—a mistake all the way round," was the answer, "and I'm going to fight you just as I said."

As may be guessed, the preacher had a vivid illustration for his sermon that night—of both general and specific application.—Selected.

THE BOYS.

There is nothing in the world so well worth looking after as the boy, and there is no being in the world so much neglected as the boy. The attitude of the world toward him is too nearly expressed by the mother who said to the nurse: "Where is Johnny?" "He is out in the yard." "What is he doing?" "I don't know." "Well, go and see, and tell him to stop it."

We chaperon our girls, and not too carefully, but we leave the boy to choose his associates and his environments without much advice, and with very little guidance. Girls are naturally winsome, gentle, companionable, and they win their way, too, and are welcome in our homes, but I do not know of many homes where boys are invited. About the only door that swings with sure welcome to the boy, about the only chair that is shoved near the fire especially for the boy, about the only place where he is sure of welcome, is where you do not desire him to go. It is about the hardest thing in the world to get hold of a boy—to get a sure grip on him.

I remember a father I once knew, who had spent most of his life being a companion for his son. He went skating with him. He went everywhere with him. They were companions. The old man never amounted to much himself, but his boy did. The produce justified the expense.—Exchange.

THE HABIT OF KINDNESS.

"Is your daughter with you?" asked a lady who was assisting the hostess receive at a recent largely attended golden wedding.

"I am sorry to say not; she is so busy and anxious over her school examination that she dared not take the few hours required for the across-country trip."

"You must tell her that I counted on meeting her here, but think she was quite right to put duty first."

As this woman was making her adieus, she said to this lady: "I want to thank you for inquiring for my daughter, for, do you know, you are the only one here among all these people who has mentioned her, although many of them have met her oftener and much more recently than you have. It will gratify her to know that you hold her in remembrance. Do you not think it singular that so few people comparatively ever inquire for the members of the family left at home? I have noticed to-day that you have done so with every fresh arrival. No doubt, however, people in general lack interest in others."

"People are thoughtless," replied the elder lady, "and they do not realize that anyone cares. I learned the lesson by a sad experience. My husband lost his sight a few years before his death, and whenever I left him to go from home—which was not often—I was grieved if people did not inquire for him. He was so constantly on my mind, and to me the calamity seemed so great, that I wondered how any one could be forgetful of him. When no one inquired, and I did not have a pleasant message for him on my return, I felt as if it was a deserved punishment for my own carelessness of many years standing, and I resolved to reform. I was encouraged in doing so by the fact that one day at a large religious convention I met a clergyman whom we had entertained at our home the previous year with his wife and two children, so naturally I asked for them, and was surprised to have the gentleman reply, with a deep breath: 'Oh, I am so glad you inquired, because, whenever I return from a trip of this sort, my wife almost invariably greets me with: "Did one single person among all you met and conversed with mention me or the children?" And, as strange as it may appear, I am generally obliged to admit that no one mentioned them; and that gives her fresh excuse for saying, what she often asserts, that the people with whom I come constantly in contact ignore her existence, and that the meetings and conventions give us a division of interests. To-night, when I reach home, I shall be able to forestall her by saying: "Mrs. French was there and inquired so cordially for you and the children and sent her love," and it will reconcile her for being left at home.'"

"Thank you for telling me the incident," said the departing guest, as she waited for her motor to be announced. "I, too, have been remiss. I will be more thoughtful."

"By being so you will find, as I have, that you have more influence than you realize, for others whom you meet continually will take up your habit of thoughtfulness. People in general are interested in people, and that without descending to mere gossip. At any function where, as sometimes happens, there seems to be a lack of sociability, it is interesting to note how quickly the ice of reserve and constraint may be broken. I have sometimes entered a room full of guests, with seemingly nothing in common to say to each other, and by simply shaking hands, making a pleasant inquiry, and including the one nearest in the conversation by saying: 'Did you know such a one had been ill?' or 'had gone a journey,' or any legitimate bit of kindly information, and adding, 'No? Then you must let Mrs. —— tell you about it,' and going forward, have noted that the silent room I had entered was, before I had made the circuit, filled with the murmur of pleasant voices."

"That sounds easy, but I am not one of those fortunate people who have always something nice to say on the tip of my tongue."

"It is easy, nevertheless. At first you may need to think beforehand that if such or such a one is there you will inquire for her mother, or something like that, and soon you will be astonished to find how many nice people you know and are taking an interest in, and you will find that your own capabilities for kindliness are greater than you suppose."—Annie Preston in Zion's Herald.

"Power for Service."

This is a book of 270 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

WHO CAN ANSWER?

In the Book of Revelation, twenty-first chapter and fourteenth verse, it is said: "And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb."

What was the twelfth name, Judas, Matthias, or Paul? Who can answer?

DR. WINTON ASKS A QUESTION.

Having had occasion of late to study the story of Paul's imprisonment at Philippi, and how he was released, it just occurs to us to ask: If an earthquake on that occasion is in good and regular standing as a miracle, why would not an earthquake have been a miracle when the walls of Jericho fell down? —Dr. Winton.

The record as given in the authorized version says: "It came to pass, when the people heard the sound of the trumpet, and the people shouted with a great shout, that the wall fell down flat." Our notion is that had an earthquake occurred the walls would not have fallen down flat. The history further says: "So that the people went up into the city, every man straight before him." The wall fell flat to give the people easy access to the city. Such could not have been the case had an earthquake done its work in the usual way.

"ONE OF THOSE WOMEN."

A few weeks since we wrote a short editorial in which we called attention to the frequent misapplication of St. Paul's exhortation to his "true yoke-fellow" (Phil. iv:3), to help those women, Euodias and Syntyche, to a reconciliation. For some reason they were estranged, as will sometimes happen even with the best of women, and as laborers with him, he would have them "be of the same mind in the Lord." "One of those women," who modestly withholds her name, takes us to task in the following style:

I noticed in the Advocate of July 1 an article on "Help Those Women," and for fear our brother will unusually exert himself to impress "those women" that the Apostle didn't mean that the brethren should "encourage or co-operate" with us in our "laudable church work," we will endeavor to relieve his burdened mind of any such responsibility, so far as may be in our power. We certainly believe St. Paul meant "help"—just as he said. He might have meant to a "reconciliation" in that instance, for that might have been their greatest need just then. "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" "Help those women in whatsoever they have need of you." "I commend unto you Phebe, our sister, which is a servant of the church at Cenchrea: that ye receive her [illegible] as becometh saints, and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you: for she hath been a succourer of many, and of myself also. Greet Priscilla and Aquila my helpers in Christ Jesus: who have for my life laid down their own necks." —Rom. xvi.

You see the women were not expected to help the preachers—[illegible] help to them, and St. Paul says: "For my life have they laid down their own necks." Paul knew the selfish hearts of so many of the apostles and their attempt [illegible] church, therefore reminded them of [illegible] the self-sacrificing women who so constantly cheered and sustained and labored with them in the gospel. "Unto whom not only I, Paul, give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles." [illegible] when we use "Help those women" [illegible] ing the Scriptures for [illegible] to reconcile a misunderstanding between women working together without fulfilling Paul's [illegible] helpfulness. "Bear ye one another's [illegible] fulfill the law of Christ."

Well said, my sister. [illegible] fair defense of the women as helpers in the gospel—a privilege and a duty [illegible] which nobody is disposed to [illegible] same time when St. Paul said "Help those women," he had in mind the estrangement [illegible] his helpers, and being anxious [illegible] "yoke-fellow" to effect a reconciliation, that they might again work in harmony, [illegible] make this particular text do duty every time [illegible] brethren are slow to come to the assistance of the sisters is to misapply, and so pervert the words of the apostle.

Since "One of Those Women" has taken the matter in hand, and so well defends her cause, we think an article from her defining specifically the work of women in the Church and the duty of the brethren towards them would be good and acceptable reading. We believe our sister can give us some helpful suggestions.

PERSONAL.

Rev. H. L. Norton, Hermanville, Miss., adds five names to our subscription list the present week. That is good for hot-weather work.

Rev. R. T. Nolen, of the Pinola (Miss.) Circuit, has held three good meetings on his charge, and is now engaged in the fourth one at Hainsville.

Rev. J. C. McElroy has our thanks for continued interest and work in behalf of the Advocate. His list of subscriptions for the year number eleven.

Rev. Geo. P. Fikes, writing from Walnut Grove, Miss., says: "We are getting along real well. Prospects are favorable for a revival wave throughout the charge."

Rev. A. S. Lutz, of Felicity Street, has returned to his charge, after a three weeks' rest. He looks well, and ready for hard work. His family will remain a while longer in north Louisiana.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, of Zachary, La., has done fine work for the Advocate recently, securing renewals and new subscribers. They number fourteen altogether. We thank our brother for his interest in the paper.

A cheering note comes to us from Old Early Grove (Miss.), Holly Springs Circuit. It was like a refreshing breeze. It will be printed next week. If we could get a like note from dear Old Sylvestria, it would make us happy.

Mr. P. H. Moss, Jr., the last of the children of Rev. P. H. Moss, a member of the Louisiana Conference, who fell in the yellow fever epidemic in 1878, died in a sanitarium at Monroe, Monday, Aug. 2, and was buried at his home in Delhi on August 3.

"Old Concord Church" in the Enterprise (Miss.) charge has just passed through a sweeping work of grace, resulting in thirty-two conversions, an accession of several valuable members, and a general revival in the church. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Ramsey, did all the preaching.

We thank Dr. McMurry for a couple of large [illegible] setting forth the work and success [illegible] Church Extension. We [illegible] of taking [illegible] to the [illegible] Church Extension.

The proceedings of the [illegible] of the Committee [illegible] the Western section for the holding of the Fourth Ecumenical Conference of Methodism have been issued in pamphlet form and a copy sent to [illegible] church papers of universal Methodism. We are indebted to Mr. John R. Pepper, the Secretary.

[illegible] A. F. Watkins passed through the city last [illegible] to the Texas League encampment [illegible] Sea. His work at Hattiesburg is progressing finely, and the new church nears completion. The congregation expects to take formal possession on the 3d of October.

Rev. O. A. Thrower, of New Iberia, will be the [illegible] at Denham Springs Camp Meeting to be [illegible]. On the 15th Judge Reid, of Amite, will [illegible] address on the Laymen's Missionary Movement. We thank the promoters of the meeting [illegible] invitation to attend.

Rev. H. M. Ellis is blessed in work at Brookhaven, Miss. Prayer meetings are largely attended and are spiritual feasts to the church. The [illegible] is in fine condition and growing. Brother Ellis is this week assisting Rev. W. E. Baggett in [illegible] on the Caseyville Circuit.

The death of Mrs. Sarah Louise Lenoir Taylor was a heavy blow to a loving and devoted family, and a great loss to the church and community. She died at the home of her father, J. L. Taylor, Amite, [illegible] Aug. [illegible] 1909. A memoir has been received at this office and will be printed in due time.

Dr. W. B. Murrah, now in Europe, worshiped July [illegible] in the City Road Chapel, London, and after service sent us a beautiful picture card of the interior of the chapel, with the following message: "I thought of you to-day as I worshiped in this sacred [illegible]." We thank the Doctor for his kindness.

It is still true, we are sorry to say, that some charges in our patronizing territory have been worked in the interest of papers not calculated to help our church, and present pastors find it hard to get a foothold for the Advocate. We sympathize with these brethren, and thank them for their work, notwithstanding they meet with but small success.

Rev. R. O. Wier, of Tallulah, La., is on a visit to friends in Alabama. While there he will conduct a meeting at Carrollton, where he spent his boyhood days, and was licensed to preach. He has lately made some improvements about the parsonage, for which he gives credit to the Ladies' Aid Society. The church at Tallulah is in good condition.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, of the Gulf Coast Mission, has recently been to Mount Olive, Yazoo County, Miss., where he assisted the pastor, Rev. G. P. McKeown, in a meeting. "It was a season of refreshing; many were blessed, some converted and thirteen joined the Church." Brother Griffin informs us that Miss Dragoo, appointed deaconess for Biloxi, is now located and will begin work in a few days.

There was some talk last week at Opelousas, La., of ordering Rev. A. W. Turner, the pastor of our church, "to leave the town." It would be an easy matter for some coward to assassinate him in the dark, but running him out of town is another proposition. No sane man in Opelousas would stand face to face with A. W. Turner and tell him to "get out."

First Church in this city is having exceptionally fine congregations, considering the time of the year, with additions to the church every Sunday. Rev. F. R. Hill, D.D., does not believe in closing up the church in the summer, and he is proving the wisdom of his policy by the results. Dr. Hill is in good health, and we rejoice with him in the prosperity of his church.

Rev. M. F. Johnson, of Danville, Ark., once a member of the Louisiana Conference, is doing well. He is busily engaged in building a new house of worship at Danville, which he hopes to have ready by Conference. When completed, it will be, in connection with the parsonage, the best church property to be found in any town of the size of Danville in the Conference.

During the summer Rev. R. H. Wynn, of Monroe, La., has remained at home, and has been busy, doing in part the work of other pastors who are absent. During two weeks ending with August 4, he married ten couples—four couples in one day. In view of this revival in matrimonial circles, Brother Wynn says he "will scarcely be able to take any vacation." His wife, we presume, will take advantage of the rise in finances.

We are grateful to all the brethren—how many we cannot now recall—who have invited us to their camp meetings. We would gladly attend as many as possible, but the railroads charge us full fare, and we have not got the money to spend. All contracts with the railroads, by which we received transportation in payment for advertising were knocked out about three years ago. We can get no transportation to cross state lines.

From West Monroe, La., Rev. J. T. Reames sends the following item: "We had a good day here on Sunday last. Rev. H. O. White, who was the shepherd of some of these people thirty years ago, was with us. He preached two clear, strong, practical sermons, which did much good. His natural force seems not to have 'abated,' but rather to have increased." Accompanying this item was a list of ten subscriptions to the Advocate for which Brother Reames has our thanks.

Rev. J. R. Nelson, D.D., our Home Mission Secretary, has been out in Oklahoma, among the Indians. We understand that at one camp meeting he asked for $200 and secured $500 for work among the Navajos. If he can do this well among the Indians, speaking through an interpreter, what would he not do if he could speak to them direct. Dr. Nelson came here to arrange for the special number of this Advocate which is being planned in the interest of Missions, and which will be gotten out about the first of October. He was en route from Oklahoma to Nashville, Tenn.

Dr. Sawyer has just closed a successful meeting at Terry, Miss., and kindly gives us the following report: "The congregations were large, and the Baptists and others took an active interest and worked lovingly alongside of the Methodists. The singing of the large choir was spirited and spiritual. Very many souls among church members and the outside sinners were blessed, and a number were added to the church. The pastor, Rev. W. W. Perry, is greatly loved, and highly esteemed for his work's sake. He is a live man, and is making good in the work assigned him by the Bishops. He will surely have a first-class report for Conference in December. He is one of the coming men, and has a bright future."

PAYING THE PREACHER.

By Hon. W. A. Belk.

I trust that this little article may be read in the kind spirit in which it is written. Let it be fully understood that I firmly believe that "the servant is worthy of his hire." I further believe that preachers, as a rule, are inadequately paid. But what I want to say is that in my humble judgment, if a man knows—mark the term—that he is called of God to preach the gospel, then he will not worry about his salary nor trouble about his appointment. Look at the man truly called and set apart by God himself to "go preach the gospel to every creature." How honored he is! God has cast about among millions looking for the man he wants. He has found him and in no uncertain tones tells him about it. The man accepts the call and enters upon his duties. He and God have entered upon a contract. He has been commissioned specifically to do a certain work. Will God let him suffer further than he ought to suffer? Does not God know what is best for that man in order that he may accomplish the greatest good? Will God not carry out his part of the contract? It seems to me that the preacher's whole soul should be occupied with the one idea of saving the lost. It seems to me that he should swing absolutely out upon God and leave all questions of detail to him. Will not God know best where this man or that one should be sent in order to do the greatest good? If left to decide the matter, will God make a mistake? If the preacher cuts loose from influence and his own wishes and leaves it in reality to God to send him where he should go, then will not God send a raven, if necessary, to provide for him?

I know full well that preachers are only men, and that it is hard not to yield to the requests and interests of their loved ones. But let him keep the one idea before him, that he belongs literally to God, and that God knows where there are souls which that man alone must save. I have in mind a man who desired to be made presiding elder of a certain district. The Bishop thought it best otherwise. That man then asked to be returned back to his appointment, with the hope of being made elder of that coveted district another year. Now, that man was honest in wanting that appointment. He had a personal end in view; and that end was for the benefit of his family as he saw it. But did he not choose for himself? Did he just leave it unconditionally to God? I fear not. I am not complaining. I am not fault finding. I love the preachers. They are a grand and noble set of men. But I am simply trying to press my point that if they will leave it absolutely to God as to where they go and what they are to receive that God will, in my opinion, be better pleased, and will accordingly bless their work. I, perhaps, would not measure up to this standard myself, if I were a preacher, but nevertheless I am firm in my conviction that when a man is truly called of God to preach the gospel, that he ought, if he undertakes to answer the call, just turn himself with all he has over to God, and ought not to figure on appointments or salaries, but leave that part to God and put in all his time and talent to saving souls.

CHARLES AUGUSTUS REDDING.

An Appreciation.

By Rev. B. F. Jones, D.D.

One of nature's noblemen and one of God's faithful children passed from earth to heaven when Charles Augustus Redding died at his beautiful home in Terry, Miss.

Brother Redding was born of honorable parentage in Lumpkin, Ga., on Nov. 13, 1850. He removed to Mississippi when a mere boy, and spent the remainder of his life in this State. He married Sallie Alice, second daughter of the Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, D.D., late of the Mississippi Conference. This union was blessed with seven children, six of whom share with the mother the irreparable loss of a true husband and kind father.

He was reared in the Methodist Church, but did not profess conversion till the year 1888 at the Crystal Springs Camp-Meeting, since which time he lived an exemplary Christian life. God graciously endowed him with a strong intellect, and with the graces of a splendid manhood. In his life the excellencies of a noble, manly character shone out. A striking feature of his character was his incorruptible integrity. He seemed to feel the force of no temptation to turn away from what was to him the vision of truth, or the path of duty. Modest as a woman, and guileless as a child, he filled every station in life to which he was called with eminent fitness and unswerving fidelity. Hence, as manager of a large mercantile business, and then cashier of his home bank, he enjoyed the esteem and unquestioned confidence of everyone.

His home life was beautiful in its unostentatious habits and simplicity of apportionments. Here were exhibited those numerous excellent qualities of mind and heart that gained for him the highest esteem of those who knew him most intimately. Unselfishness characterized every act, while patience adorned his life with the charm of forbearance. During his last illness he was heard to say: "Everybody is so good to me, I can't afford to complain, or be impatient."

He was possessed of the very highest religious and ethical sense, which combined to make him the best type of manhood. He was not demonstrative by nature; hence his Christian life was not noted for its ecstatic experiences on the mountain-top of religious joy; but rather for its quiet, steady, and constant attendance upon his duties as a man and a Christian. The absence of demonstration gave no token of the lack of sincere devotion and true affection. He was thoroughly consecrated. He served as steward and Sunday School superintendent for many years. He loved his church, and there was no interest to which he did not give his money, and his love.

He was stricken with an insidious and fatal disease last Spring, and suffered intensely; but he endured its ravages most patiently, and without a murmur. He fought the malady bravely, but was resigned. Despite the tenderest care of wife, children, friends and skillful physicians, in the early morning of June 12, 1909, while nature lay sweetly sleeping beneath the receding light of the silent stars, he closed his eyes to earth, and his gentle spirit slipped from its tenement of clay, and passed into the home of the blessed which he was so ready to enter.

GRATITUDE.

Luke xvii:11-19.

O[illegible] the depth of Christ's sym[illegible] own in the healing [illegible] flicted with the repulsi[illegible] incurable leprosy; a li[illegible] arcely anything in the [illegible] rthly benefit could surp[illegible] f being healed from such [illegible] sease, being restored to health, society and home comfort. One would expect overwhelming gratitude and thanksgiving in every such case.

Now we have an incident of the healing of a whole leper settlement—ten men who are companions in misery, and the selfish ingratitude of nine of them. Jesus himself expresses the greatest surprise.

If we could estimate mathematically the proportion of ungrateful to grateful persons in the world, it would perhaps be even more unequal than ninety per cent. to ten. I wonder if even ten per cent. of professing Christians express genuine gratitude to God and man.

Strange enough, the single grateful man is a Samaritan, a semi-foreigner, just as in another case recorded by Luke, a Samaritan has compassion on a wounded man, while priest and Levite are indifferent.

"Shame on us Christian brethren. His name and sign who bear," if we ever permit outsiders to outstrip us either in gratitude for favors received, or in the outflow of compassionate love.

The following story was once used by a Chinese preacher:

"It came to pass that a man went to market, having on his shoulder a string of seven large copper-coins. Seeing a beggar crying for alms; he gave the poor creature six of his seven coins. Then the beggar, instead of being grateful, crept up behind the kind man and stole the seventh coin also."

Not all ingratitude is so abominable as this: much of it is merely thoughtless, but it is all alike, selfish. Genuine gratitude must express itself. Thoughtfulness, though inward, must flow outward in words and acts.

Christian gratitude expresses itself in [illegible] "freely receives," a[illegible] motive of the [illegible] cies of God," one presents the living sacrifice of himself.

"That man may last, but never live
Who much receives and nothing gives,
Whom none can love, whom none can thank,
Creation's blot, creation's blank."

R. H. WYNN.

The Epworth League at Norfield, Miss., has bought and paid for an office desk for the parsonage located at Bayou Chicot. A quarter-sawed oak, roll top, up-to-date piece of furniture. Let other Leagues do likewise, it would add much to the comfort and convenience of the pastor. The young people deserve much credit.

O. G. HALIBURTON.

Substance of Their Opinions.

"In ten days I was well, sound and healthy—and could sleep soundly." This is the substance of what most of the patients say who receive treatment for the drug or liquor habit at Dr. Woolley's Victor Sanitarium in Atlanta, Ga. These are exactly the words of a man who was an habitual [illegible] quently drank a quart of whiskey a day. After eight years' [illegible] tion he went to Dr. Woolley's Sanitarium with the result above described. People from all over the [illegible] go to Dr. Woolley for treatment. He has a great reputation founded upon the success he has met with in his practice over 30 years.

HARPERVILLE CHARGE.

Our annual meeting at Contrell Church began on the 11th of July. The preaching was done by the Rev. H. F. Tolle, of Lake, Miss. He preached with power, and his preaching proved to be effective, and every effort that was put forth seemed to be blessed of God to the salvation of souls and the upbuilding of His kingdom. The church was wonderfully strengthened spiritually, as well as numerically. About twenty-seven men, women and children started for the higher life, and said they wanted to live Christian lives and be an honor to the community and true followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene. Contrell Church is located in a community of very fine, cultured and hospitable people. May God bless them all.

Good Hope. On the 17th of July our protracted meeting at Good Hope began. The preaching was done by our Presiding Elder, Rev. T. J. O'Neil, and it goes without saying that the preaching was excellent. The church seemed to be spiritually blessed and strengthened. We think the work done will be lasting, and felt for good in the community many years from now.

Lena.—On Sunday, July 24 we convened in the Lena Baptist Church to begin our series of meetings with Rev. C. N. Guice, of Natchez, doing the preaching. Brother Guice proved to be a man with a message. His efforts were blessed by the Giver of all good gifts. The preacher was fully at himself and preached with power. Twenty-six conversions; two came to us by certificate. There were nineteen accessions to our church, and nine joined the Baptist Church. May the Lord bless them all, and I pray that they may be a blessing to their community. We are indebted to the good Baptist people for the use of their church, and for their kind treatment and co-operation in the meeting. They rendered good service in the meeting, and helped to make it a success in many ways too numerous to mention.

Any pastor will do well to secure the services of Brother Guice. His good singing contributed much to the interest and success of the meeting.

Lena is composed of good, progressive citizens, who are very hospitable.

May God graciously favor the town of Lena and bless its good people.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

DOUGLAS CHARGE.

Dear Editor: Rev. M. H. Honeycutt, assisted by D. B. Boddie, has just closed a grand revival at Douglas Church. The congregations were large both day and night, and continued to grow until the close. The house could not near hold all the people. Interest was good, with perfect order. Though there was a great number who could not get into the house, yet they were kind enough to not disturb by talking.

I do not know the exact number of professions, but there were not less than fifty, and I believe there were some of as bright conversions as I have ever seen. There were twenty-nine new accessions, with only one by letter. The Douglas Church is in better condition, spiritually, than it has been in for several years.

Brother Honeycutt deserves great credit for the work he has done and is doing, for he is untiring in his labors. He is certainly devoted to his work and is doing some excellent pastoral work. He has his people in first-class working order. I never have seen a pastor with his folks under better control. Wherever he goes, he is loved.

The members of Douglas Church have waked up to a realization that this house is not large enough, and are preparing to enlarge it so as to seat one hundred more people.

Brother Honeycutt is to begin a revival meeting at Wilhite tonight, July 30. D. B. Boddie is also to assist him there. He is looking forward for a great victory for his blessed Master.

D. B. BODDIE.

FREE SCHOLARSHIP FOR TUITION in Meridian Male College [illegible]

REVIVAL AT EBENEZER, MISS,

On Sunday morning at 11 o'clock our regular protracted meeting began. Brother Dozier preached the opening sermon. Everyone reported a fine sermon. Brother Shafer, the evangelist from Mobile, filled the evening pulpit; a large crowd was seated to hear the distinguished divine. From the very beginning great interest was manifested. Large crowds came forward for prayer at the close of the first 2 services.

As the week grew older, the interest grew larger. People who had not been to church in almost a decade were there on time with shining faces shaking hands and expressing a desire to live better in the future. Brother Shafer tried very hard to impress upon them the blunder of living without God and the church. He used some fine illustrations to prove this [illegible] from the New Testament; one he especially emphasized was the "rich fool."

On Friday night he preached to the men only. He took for a text: "Be not deceived. God is not mocked. For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

He made a strong appeal to the young men, especially church members, for purer and nobler lives. He said the Church and State depended upon the rising generation of young men.

As a result of the meeting young men and women came and united with the church: nine on profession of faith and two by letter; five infants were baptized.

Our church is in fine condition. The ladies have recently had the church decorated with moulding and renewed the choir with an up-to-date organ. Everything is getting along nicely on the old Ebenezer Charge.

BENJAMIN J. HARRISON, son of John and Nancy Harrison was born Sept. 16, 1849, in Sumpter County, Ala., and fell on sleep at his home in Hickory, Miss., June 16, 1909. He united with the M. E. Church, South, August, 1870, thus consecrating his early manhood to the service of his God. He was married Jan. 25, 1860 to Miss Medora Rayner, sister of Rev. B. S. Rayner, of precious memory. This union was blessed with seven children, all of which survive him. Brother Harrison was a Christian citizen and a loyal member of the church. He was loved and respected by the entire community in which he lived. He will be missed. M.

Mr. H. M. HARRIS was born at Huntsville, Ala., June 15, 1833, and came with his parents to Tate County, Miss., where he spent some time teaching, in which county he was happily married twice. First to Miss Fitzgerald. One son and two daughters blessed this union, all of whom are yet alive. Secondly, to Mrs. Holt. To this union was given five children four of whom and the mother survive him. Having volunteered at Independence, Tate County, Miss. March 27, 1861, he served four years in the Ninth and Seventeenth Mississippi Regiments for the Confederate Army. He was wounded in the second days battle of Gettysburg, suffering the remainder of his life. This great warrior was also a valiant soldier in the army of the Lord, being a member of the M. E. Church, South. Toward the close of his life he was quite a true soldier of Jesus Christ. On the morning of July the 4th, 1909, in Memphis, Tenn., the last battle was fought. He has joined the great reunion in the sweet beyond. J. C. McELROY.

JOSEPH W. SWEENEY was born in Cameron Parish, at Grand Chenier, La., July 29, 1857, and died at his home in Vinton, La., July 4, 1909. Brother Sweeney was converted in after life and joined the Methodist Church. The date of his conversion I do not know, but the fact I am aware of. His whole life was a witness to this mighty work of Divine grace. His relation to God gave him a relation to his fellow-man that was beautiful—he was a brother to all. He attended upon the ordinances of the church and supported her institutions. He was a good citizen, kind husband and an affectionate father. His chief virtue seemed to be patience. He went about his duties in a quiet, uncomplaining way which made his character rise up into grandeur. Since Jesus has brought to light, life and immortality through the gospel, we will rest in his word and wait awhile, then go hence and join Brother Sweeney in the song of "Moses and the Lamb." God bless his wife and children and may Jehovah's strength and a Father's love shield them.

J. D. NESOM, Pastor.

THOS. J. HOPKINS.—Our dear brother in Christ, our friend in love and service, "Tom" Hopkins, as he was familiarly called by all who knew him, was born near Brooksville, Miss., Dec. 1, 1863. Here he grew up to manhood among the friends of his parents and youth, and numbered his own personal friends by the scores and hundreds. Indeed, all who loved manliness, trustworthiness, purity, goodness and nobility of soul loved Tom Hopkins, for he was as fine an embodiment of the highest principles and most radiant virtues as it has been my lot to know among men. On the 28th of October, 1886, he was married to Miss Sallie Bell, of his native town. Of this union there were born three children, two girls, Louise and Willie, and a son who bears his father's honored name. All the children survive to mourn their irreparable loss. His loved and devoted wife was spared to him and her children for only a few years. Passing to the great beyond, she left her husband to fight the stern battles of life alone and to rear his children as best he could. To this always difficult task he bravely addressed the best energies of his life and the unwearied devotion of his soul. To them he became a gentle, watchful, painstaking, loving, kind, self-sacrificing, thoughtful, exemplary father. He fully appreciated the delicate responsibility and earnestly and worthily met it in love, fidelity, godly administrations and purity of example. He never married again, but made his children, their welfare, happiness and station in life, the very end of all his care and earthly happiness. They were his heart, they were his ambition. Brother Hopkins passed quietly and peacefully (as the lamp burns out) to his heavenly reward on Oct. 28, 1908, after a short illness from typhoid. The word quickly passed out: "Tom Hopkins is gone!" The writer was on his way to his bedside when the awful message met him, "he is gone." Oh, the sadness of that word to scores of loving friends! "Gone!" It was filled with inexpressible pain that settled in sorrowful reflection about many an aching heart. Yes, gone, but not forgotten, "he, being dead, yet speaketh." Brother Hopkins will continue to live in hearts made warmer, in lives made better, in thoughts made higher, in spirits made lighter and sweeter, and in souls made holier. He was denied the early advantages of education in any high sense, but his common sense, his keen insight into business, men and things was very remarkable, indeed. He was a man of the open eye, a clear vision and a judgment seldom at fault. His intellect was of high order and naturally brilliant. As a business man, he was wise, careful, sincere, honest, truthful, just; all could and did trust him absolutely. As a citizen, he was of the highest order. He was for everything good, and against everything wrong. He was public-spirited, enterprising, progressive, genial and clever to a fault. As a Christian, he was known by all men. Here is where his greatest virtues shone the brightest: he loved his Savior, his pastor and his church. To them all he rendered the best treasure of heart and life in noble and exemplary service and generous liberality. His pastors loved him as a brother, and always felt the warm heart-throb of his love and sympathy. He was always with his pastor, heart and hand. Faithful as an official in his church for years, he won the appreciation of all good people. The Sunday school, of which he was for years the efficient and loved superintendent, was the pride and joy of his heart. There he did his lasting work in hearts of young and old. He was a wise, gifted and most successful Sunday School man. The young and the old loved him and trusted in all things. He was not a weak and effeminate man, but a man of strong convictions, determined ideas and clear views, who stood for something because he saw something to stand for. As an evidence of the esteem in which the people held him, the large church was crowded to overflowing at his funeral, and nearly all eyes were dimmed and all hearts softened and sad. There were present six or eight ministers and people from all the surrounding country. Of all I have known, I have never known a finer specimen of a man. God bless his memory and his children!

WISHED FOR DEATH

Terrible thing to be so sick, that death would come as a welcome relief from suffering.

How much, then, must one be thankful for a medicine that relieves such misery and brings one into a less desperate state of mind.

Cardui, Woman's Relief, has done this for many women, and may be expected to do so for many more.

Thousands of ladies have written to tell about their suffering, and how it was relieved by the use of Cardui.

Among this long list of letters written, stands forth Mattie Campbell, of Ratcliff, Texas, who says: "Two years ago my health was bad. I suffered untold misery. I ached all over. Life was a burden to me. At times I wished for death, to end my suffering.

"At last, I decided to try Cardui. I took one bottle and it helped me. I took 12 bottles more and now I can say that Cardui has stopped my suffering and made life worth living.

"I would not be placed back where I was—not for this whole world rolled at my feet."

Try Cardui. It contains not one grain of dangerous mineral ingredients, but is purely vegetable and a safe, reliable remedy for young and old. Sold everywhere.

LESSON FOR AUG. 15, 1909.

PAUL'S THIRD MISSIONARY JOURNEY—EPHESUS.

(Acts xix. 8-20.)

Golden Text: "The name of the Lord Jesus was magnified." Acts xix. 17.

When Paul departed from Corinth he closed the second missionary journey; before he began the third, he visited the churches that had been established, and then went to Jerusalem. He did not remain away from what seemed his chief field of labor—that part of Asia Minor just across the Aegean Sea from Greece—for very soon he came to Antioch, his first starting point, and from there he came to Ephesus. In the meantime God had provided a laborer for the field at Corinth. It is wonderful how Priscilla and Aquilla were made to be of such vital service in doing their part in the preparation of Apollos for the work begun by the apostle. The hand of the Lord was in it all, and in the lives of all of God's children the Lord chooses and directs all changes.

When Paul arrived at Ephesus his first work was to get the disciples in sympathy with him, so that he could feel that he was not alone, but had some that supported and aided him. He found disciples there that had not heard the gospel in its fullness, but had only received the baptism of John, preceded by a gospel of preparation for him who should come after John. This leads us to suppose that the disciples of the Baptist went forth to preach before Jesus actually began his ministry. If they had remained in the region around about Jordan until after the baptism of Jesus, and heard the words of John on that occasion, how could they have preached any but the full gospel of Christ? The twelve men at Ephesus that were baptized again, also Apollos from far away Africa, were living evidence that John's message was wide spread. Had they only waited to see John point out Jesus as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world"!

Paul needed human friends and support at Ephesus, for it was a city given over to superstition and idolatry. The apostle began his preaching in the synagogue, as it was his custom to give the gospel to the Jew first. Paul spoke with boldness, and with his native force did he reason of things pertaining to the kingdom of God. But there were some that, instead of yielding and accepting the gospel, were hardened and made obstinate in their first belief. The gospel has a fearful effect on him to whom it is not a savor of life unto life.

Seeing that his work was fruitless among the Jews, Paul turned again to the Gentiles with the message of pardon and peace. He preached no more in the synagogue, but taking his disciples he went to a place called in the Scripture "the school of one Tyrannus," where he continued the work for two years. In this city of Ephesus there was a force at work that must be met with a power of the same appearance of mystery. "God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul" in order to bring to naught the many tricks and devices such as the seven sons of Sceva practiced upon the people. Things taken from Paul's person, such as handkerchiefs or aprons, had the power to dispel the evil spirits from those thus afflicted. The sons of Sceva thought they could also use the power of the name of Jesus, and they could if they had had the right motive—if they had listened sincerely to Paul's preaching and learned in their hearts who Jesus was. Not knowing the power or the sacredness of Jesus' name, they attempted its use for their magic tricks; they took upon their profane lips the name of the Son of the Most High God, and called it over one that was possessed by an evil spirit. The consequence of such a presumptuous act was most disastrous to them, for when they adjured the spirit in the name of Jesus, whom Paul preached, the evil spirit caused the man to say: "Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?" With that the man leaped upon them and beat them so that they fled away naked and wounded. When this was known, fear fell upon them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified. This was what might be called preaching Christ in a negative way, as compared to Paul's positive and earnest manner.

The name of Jesus is known by evil spirits; they even believe and tremble; and in that unseen world, where spirits dwell, the servants of Christ are known. Evil and wicked men know Jesus, and call his name more often than do religious people; but they call it with more horrible blasphemy than did Sceva's sons.

There was a time of repentance in Ephesus, and true repentance, such as is shown by works, for those that practiced magic, destroyed their curious arts and books, thus putting away from them all means of returning to former wickedness.

How Paul must have glorified God for the happy ending of such monstrous superstition; he never dreamed that God would call forth the voice of evil spirits to testify to the blessed name he preached.

Are each of us known in that mysterious land where spirits dwell? We would fain believe it. When we were born, there was for each of us begun an eternal individual entity, and when we leave this world we take our place that our deeds in this life have prepared for us. Overwhelming thought! Let us be prepared!

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for a list of testimonials.

Dear Editor: Allow me a space in the Advocate to tell the brethren of another outpouring of divine blessing. We held an eight days' meeting at [illegible], and was assisted by Rev. T. B. Hoffpauir, of Estherwood, who did some fine preaching. Some people drove eight miles to the service. The whole community was awakened as never before. Some of the old residents said it reminded them of old times when some of our elderly men were on the work. Such as J. L. P. Sheppard, Brother Wynn and J. J. Hoffpauir.

There were six conversions and additions to the church. The work is looking up and we expect better times.

When I read Bishop Ward's letter in the Advocate, I said that I could tell him at Conference that we were first trying to reach the people committed to our care. The Pineville Charge now consists of seven appointments.

CONSERVATION AND PATRIOTISM

The First National Conservation Congress of the United States to be held under the auspices of the Washington Conservation Asociation, and in connection with the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, Seattle, Wash., Aug. 26, 27, 28, 1909, promises to be the greatest event in this year of conventions on the Pacific Coast.

Conservation appeals to the patriotic sentiment of every loyal American citizen and demands time for thoughtful consideration. It enters the office of the busy man of affairs and commands an audience. It crosses the field of the tiller of the soil and halts the captain of agriculture for a personal interview. There is something in the subject that suggests prompt and concerted action in every possible field of human endeavor.

Conservation means more than speculative advances into the realms of future financial prosperity. It deals with the present and with the future years in a way that arouses the student of political economy to immediate action along the lines of protection for all that goes to make up the channels of industrial progression.

The conservationist is not an alarmist only to the extent that he desires to change the system of utilizing natural resources so that present prosperity will continue and future sources of wealth be not destroyed. It is his mission to educate the producers and the consumers in the work of proper utilization of natural resources.

The duty of every citizen is plainly written on the pages of Time. He must care for himself and his family, be loyal to his country and devoted to the cause of liberty in all its varied meanings. Such work can best be accomplished by promoting that which produces individual happiness and national prosperity.

Intemperate use of the gifts bestowed by nature for the use of man brings personal disaster. That results in community retrogression and national dissatisfaction.

Conserving natural resources insures progression and collective happiness, so far as the influence of individuality controls the actions of subjects under immediate environment.

It is the purpose of the modern conservationist to close the doors of waste and extravagance and educate the human family to a higher appreciation of the things coming from the earth for the use of man. Such gifts are embodied in the subjects of irrigation, water, forestry, mining, good roads, and other means for transportation, pure food, correct morals and the proper relation of capital to labor in the adjustment of the affairs of State and Nation. Such topics can be handled by practical men to a better advantage than by leaving the consideration of such to mere theorists or political combinations of selfish interests.

The First National Conservation Congress will be composed largely of men of the hour devoted to the uplifting of the families of the Nation, and preserving the commerce of the country. It will have representatives from practically every State, called together in one common cause—who understand the necessities of the movement, and are qualified to speak intelligently on the topics under discussion. The Congress will be the largest and most enthusiastic meeting of conservationists since the famous Conference of Governors at the White House, when former President Theodore Roosevelt opened the campaign for right use of all of the remaining natural resources of our country.

FROM AMORY, MISS.

Mr. Editor: From all I can hear I am of the opinion that temporal and spiritual prospects for this part of our Conference are above the average. Amory lies in the midst of perhaps the best formed section of our State. The high table lands of the "Trace road" are largely owned by the men who till them, and who are learning to get the very best results for their time and labor. Two hundred bushels of Irish potatoes and a bale of cotton from one acre in one year looks mighty good to a Mississippi farmer. The way they do it: he plants his potatoes as early as conditions will allow, about five and a half feet apart, and after they have been well worked, he plants (of course at the proper time), cotton between the rows, and by the time the cotton is ready for heavy plowing the potatoes are dug and out of the way, and then it would do you good to see that cotton spread itself. Of course, potatoes and cotton have been scientifically fertilized, and some of these farmers have learned how to keep Irish potatoes through the Summer, and get the higher price in the Fall and Winter. A canning factory is encouraging the bean, tomato and sweet potato industries.

Amory is also the half-way station between Birmingham and Memphis on the Frisco Railroad; engines and crews are changed here. So Amory is the best town between these two cities with a great future.

We have one of the best equipped school buildings I know of. Our church is well established with more than her share of the best citizens to encourage and help the pastor bring things to pass. A sadness comes into my heart when I remember this is my fourth year. Amory and Nettleton together as they are now, first, second and third Sundays at Amory; fourth and third at Nettleton, make a most delightful pastoral charge and a pleasant place to live. Amory is a town of many artesian wells. I am just in from Paine Memorial Church, Smithville Circuit, where I assisted Brother W. A. Bowlin in a good meeting. The people justly think well of Bowlin, for he is doing things on the Smithville Circuit; but that is nothing new for Bowlin; he always does things; he has an art in busting the devil out of a soul.

We get an occasional glimpse of our strenuous presiding elder. Felts is wide awake, aggressive, intelligent and faithful, giving special attention to the outlying charges and this meets the hearty approval of the pastors and laymen of the stronger churches. Some of our laymen say this is the best mission money we pay, when we make it possible for the presiding elder to help the weak places. So, go on, Brother Felts, and he is going.

Doctor, I read a second time this morning J. R. Bingham's tribute to Bishop Galloway; seems to me I came nearer seeing the good Bishop in all his fullness through Brother Bingham's pen than any other.

W. S. SHIRMAN.

BISHOP C. B. GALLOWAY.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to call to his eternal reward that prince in Israel, Bishop Chas. B. Galloway; and whereas in his demise we feel that the church has lost one of its greatest preachers, the State one of its purest and wisest citizens, and the nation one of its truest patriots; be it, therefore, resolved

First, That we reverently bow in humble submission to the will of the Father while we tender this memorial of love, honor and respect to our departed brother.

Second, That while we miss his noble personality from the walks of men, we still have his sweet and inspiring influence and example with us.

Third, That the life of this great and good man should be kept fresh and green in the memories of the Church he loved and gave the best efforts of his great life to, of the State he served as one of its truest citizens, and of the nation of which he was one of the purest patriots; and for this purpose, we the members of Corinth District, of the North Mississippi Conference, desire to put ourselves on record as heartily in favor of the proposed Galloway Memorial Church to be built at Jackson, Miss., and pledge to its promotion and erection our best support.

Fourth, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this Conference and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Advocate to be published.

THE C. S. BELL COMPANY, HILLSBORO, O.

CHARTER,

OF THE

National Co-operative Development Company, Ltd.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
CITY OF NEW ORLEANS.

Be it known that on this 9th day of July, one thousand nine hundred and nine (1909), before me, J. Marshall Quintero, a notary public in and for the parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana, duly commissioned and qualified, personally came and appeared the persons whose names are hereunto subscribed, who declared that, availing themselves of the laws of this State relative to the organization of corporations, they do, by these presents, organize and constitute a corporation for the object and purposes herein set forth.

ARTICLE I.

The name of this corporation shall be The National Co-Operative Development Co., Ltd.; its domicile shall be in the City of New Orleans, Louisiana; it shall have corporate existence for fifty (50) years from the date hereof.

ARTICLE II.

The object and purpose for which this corporation is organized are to buy, sell, rent and lease all kinds of lands and to acquired by purchase or otherwise minerals, oils and gas of all kinds that may be in and under such lands and to sell the same, either in their natural condition or in a manufactured condition.

ARTICLE III.

The capital stock of this corporation is hereby fixed at one million dollars ($1,000,000), to be represented by one hundred thousand (100,000) shares of the par value of ten dollars ($10) each. Each share of stock shall entitle its owner to one vote, either in person or by proxy, at all meetings of stockholders. This corporation shall commence business and be a going concern when five thousand dollars ($5,000) of said stock shall have been subscribed for.

ARTICLE IV.

There shall be a board of six directors of this corporation in whom all its corporate powers shall be vested, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum. They shall select from among their number a President, Vice-President, Second Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, no two of which offices shall be held by the same person. Citation shall be served on the President; in his absence on the Vice-President, and in the absence of both of these on the Second Vice-President.

ARTICLE V.

The first board of directors of this corporation shall be: Edwin J. Larkin, Charles A. Celestin, Leon E. Marion, Ambrose J. Guidry, Sidney Story and Philip H. Mentz; of whom Edwin J. Larkin shall be President, Charles A. Celestin shall be Vice-President, Leon E. Marion shall be Second Vice-President, Ambrose J. Guidry shall be Treasurer, and Sidney Story shall be Secretary; all of these directors and officers shall hold office until their respective successors shall have been elected.

ARTICLE VI.

On the first Monday of January, one thousand nine hundred and ten (1910), and annually thereafter, the stockholders shall meet and elect a board of directors; the secretary shall give ten (10) days prior notice of said meeting by mail to each stockholder, in which notice he shall state the place, date and time of said meeting. As soon as said directors are elected, they shall meet and select the officers of this corporation to serve until the next election thereof shall be had. The failure to hold the elections provided for in this article shall not dissolve this corporation. In that event the officers and directors then in office shall remain in office until their successors shall have been elected.

ARTICLE VII.

No stockholder of this corporation shall ever be held liable for the debts, defaults or obligations of this corporation in any greater sum than the unpaid balance of any subscription due by him on shares of the corporation owned by him.

ARTICLE VIII.

This done and passed at my notarial office in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, in the presence of H. A. Mentz and Edwin O. Cook, competent witnesses residing in this city, who hereto subscribe their names with said appearers and with me, said notary, after due reading.

Glances at the World.

We sometimes wonder if newspapers would not give as much news and be as well paid if they could be induced to secure correspondents that would report the good as well as the bad, and not report everything out of the ordinary as a sensation. The reporters or correspondents, as a class, aim at the sensational, and not one-tenth of them are in sympathy with the reform elements of society. And, if for any reason, they feel compelled to make reports favorable to reform ideas or projects, as prohibition, law and order work, Sunday observance, etc., almost invariably they accompany the report with indications of contempt. Never yet have we seen a report of such things in a daily paper accompanied with any words of approval. Is it the settled plan of newspapers to employ none but such reporters as these? Then it is not strange that their press-dispatch columns are stocked to overflowing almost entirely with news of the bad doings of society. It is bad enough for editors to argue in a dignified way against prohibition as a principle, and stand squarely for an open Sunday, but it is far worse to allow their correspondents all over the country to sneer at the work of the anti-saloon leagues, law-enforcement leagues, Sunday observance, and all such laws as look to the morals of society. They but encourage the lawless element, and breed them faster than good citizens can unmake them. It is a fact that first-class daily papers give much space to the work of the churches and benevolences of all kinds; at the same time they strangely encourage the bad, under the false impression, as we believe, that they give the public what the public demands. But were it true, why should a respectable paper cater to a depraved and destructive appetite?

* * *

Sensational dispatches went out to the country last week from Opelousas, La., to the effect that something dreadful had happened in that good old town. It was said that two men employed by the Anti-saloon League (or Law and Order League) as detectives to gather evidence against persons engaged in illicit liquor selling, had been assaulted and badly treated, and that the "mob" had threatened Rev. A. W. Turner, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who was out of town at the time. There was evidently some disorder growing out of efforts to enforce the prohibition law, but the matter was grossly exaggerated. Enough truth, however, both in the dispatches and in the letter of the sheriff of the parish to the Times-Democrat, to satisfy the public that the officers of the town and parish have not been as diligent as they should in protecting the people against the unlawful traffic in liquor, and they have, to say the least, allowed their town, for a while, to suffer in public estimation. They can redeem the good name of the town quickly by wiping out at once the little dens of infamy. About the same time of the story of the disturbances in Opelousas there came a tale of woe from Cincinnati, put out by one Rev. F. R. English, certifying that he had been set upon by a mob of four hundred persons in Ethel, Miss., and had a narrow escape with his life. The four hundred were white persons, who, he declared, became offended becuase he "shook hands with a colored presiding elder." Mr. English was president elect of Rust University, a school for colored persons, at Holly Springs. We do not know how much truth there is in the report, but how little there is may be inferred from the fact that Ethel is a small village of about four hundred persons, counting all, men, women and children, black and white. That President-elect English got badly scared there is no doubt.

In the contest over the local option election at Bristol, Va., the principal contention of the liquor men was sustained by the presiding judge. The prohibitionists sought to set aside the election on the ground that the liquor men paid the poll taxes of nearly one hundred voters in violation of the law, and gave their names. The liquor men demurred on the ground that since the election was over and declared, the prohibitionists had no recourse. The court held that the prohibitionists "cannot now come into court and attack the correctness of the treasurer's list of qualified voters, because they had two remedies, either of which would have covered the case before the election, and they pursued neither. He held that the court must presume that the treasurer's list of the persons who personally paid their poll taxes is correct, and that no evidence attacking it can now be introduced." According to this ruling the law is wholly on the side of the law breaker. Liquor lawyers and liquor men are always on the lookout for methods of getting around the law and find them if possible, and it is easy to see in this case that if the judge's holding is correct, the liquor men could prevent any knowledge of law violations getting to the knowledge of prohibitionists before the election. Succeeding in this, which it is likely they did in Bristol, they felt safe against attack. This is another case of aggrieved citizens being denied the right to go "behind the returns." The liquor victory at Bristol will prove the most costly ever gained in Virginia. It will hasten by many months State-wide prohibition in the "Old Dominion." So mote it be!

The policy of the Pope of Rome is never to go outside the grounds of the Vatican to emphasize the idea that he is a prisoner. This has been the case ever since the kingdom of Italy declared itself independent of the temporal power of the Roman Catholic Church, whose supreme ruler is the Pope. In this matter the priesthood has generally sympathized with the Pope. The following, which we quote from the Pittsburg Christian Advocate, shows that a change is taking place in the minds of the priests: "The political position of the Roman Catholics in Italy at the present moment is unusually interesting. Hitherto those under the influence of the priests have held themselves sullenly aloof from politics; but now, in spite of the will of the Vatican, a group of Catholic deputies has been formed in the Italian Chamber. They appear quite Liberal in their sympathies. One prominent member of the group has actually declared himself as a supporter of the unity of Italy, with Rome, as its capital—a blasphemy against the temporal power of the Pope which, of course, the Vatican regards with horror. But this, bad enough, is not the worst. The Pope directed that in the election Catholic voters should support only Conservative candidates. But many priests gave not only their votes, but all the influence they possessed, in order to secure the election of Liberals, and even Socialists. Dum Murri, the leader of the group, declares himself in favor of an 'Anti-Clerical Catholicism,' a curious programme for a priest who wears his cassock in the Chamber of Deputies."

The following account of a Chinese Sunday school conducted in New Orleans by Mr. William Frantz and a corps of assistants from the Canal Presbyterian Church is taken from the Times-Democrat of Aug. 2: "To the stranger the session of the Sunday school is keenly interesting. Pupils and teachers gather at 3 o'clock, and for an hour the silence is only disturbed by the murmurs of the teachers and pupils, who sit in pairs at little tables, a teacher for each pupil, poring over the books which give Chinese words and sentences and their equivalent in English. This, it is frankly admitted by the mission workers, is the attraction which impels the Chinese to come to the school. They want to learn English. The hope of the mission workers is to interest the Chinese in Christianity by giving them the opportunity to learn English. At 4 o'clock the books are laid aside, and a hymn opens the exercises. The hymn is, of course, in English, but those of the pupils who have progressed far enough to be able to pronounce the words join in enthusiastically. Some of those who were at school yesterday had good singing voices and added considerably to the melody of the chorus. The reading of the Ten Commandments in English follows, and the Decalogue then is read aloud in Chinese by one of the pupils. The Scripture lesson is read also in the two languages. When read in English Mr. Franz reads one verse and the assembled teachers and pupils repeat the next verse in unison. A prayer in English follows, and then one of the Chinese explains the golden text for the day in his own language, illustrating it by means of a specially prepared chart. A hymn then precedes the catechism lesson, which is in English, but printed in books with both English and Chinese characters. The Lord's Prayer in English, then in Chinese, follows, and the Doxology, sung in both languages simultaneously, completes the services. The Chinese who seek instruction at the mission are young men, all of them, and most of them are decidedly careful to have fashionable American clothes." Notwithstanding the principal purpose of these Chinese in attending the school is to learn English, we feel sure that great good will result, and Mr. Frantz and his co-workers are to be commended for their unselfish and zealous labors in the mission.

OUR EDUCATIONAL SITUATION.

By Rev. J. A. Rice, D.D.

One of the most important questions before the Church at this time is education, and with the permission of the editor of the Advocate I should like to speak to our people through a series of numbers of the paper on some aspects of that subject as it appears to me. Six years experience in that work and more than a score of years of observation have made me feel some of the problems very keenly.

And, first of all, let us ask what we mean by education. It is sometimes confused with knowledge, which is only a part of it. If mere teaching were all, anybody with the teacher's genius and sufficient knowledge could impart instruction. Just what do we mean by the term education?

Viewed from one standpoint, it is the development, regulation, and satisfaction of the soul's fundamental desires and direction of its abiding interests. Back of all human motive and effort are longings native in every normal heart for health, wealth, sociability, knowledge, beauty, rightness, God.

The call made by the physical basis of life for training in the art of living, the most difficult and the least understood of all the fine arts, need not detain us, and we pass to the desire for wealth.

The productive power of culture is only now beginning to be felt. The business world is calling for college men. It is being discovered that those elements of manhood, which are brought to their fullness by college training are the very ones that produce results in every field of endeavor. Some years ago, the editor of "Who's Who, in America," studied the list of 7852 Americans of more than local note published in that book with a view of determining what effect education of the various grades has had on success in life. It thus appears,

First: That an uneducated child has one chance in 150,000 of attaining distinction as a factor in the progress of the age.

Second: That a common school education will increase his chances nearly four times.

Third: That a high school training will increase the chances of the common school boy 23 times, giving him 87 times the chance of the uneducated.

Fourth: That a college education increases the chances of the high school boy nine times, giving him 219 times the chance of the common school boy, and more than 800 times the chance of the untrained.

It is a surprising fact that of 7852 "notables" thus gathered, 4810 proved to be full graduates of colleges.

While the making of money is only one kind of success, where the public school term is longest in the United States, there the average productive capacity of the citizen is greatest, and there also is the center of supremacy in commerce and industry. This shows that a State's best investment is in her sons and daughters. The productivity, for example, in Massachusetts is twenty times the cost of maintaining the public schools. The present growing ascendency of labor over capital is due to the dependence of great combinations upon the application of science to practical problems and the efficiency of skilled labor in managing these mammoth machines. But real wealth is not simply material possessions. No personality is complete without "that lordship over things which orders them about, moulds them at the caprice of its own imagination," marshals them to its service. The creative instinct, which is in us all, is the psychological foundation of all industrial education. The blacksmith, the cabinet-maker, is more a master of the world than the multi-millionaire without this sense of dominion. "Thou madest him a little lower than God" is the scriptural estimate of man's place in the universe. The real poverty of the Congo cannibal in St. Louis that put his face against the wire fence between me and him and cried "money, money," consisted not in the lack of money, but in helplessness before the limitless resources of nature. For "wealth is man's first realization of independence among world forces."

No less important in the progress of self-achievement is the desire for sociability, for those spiritual reactions of personality upon personality, which belong to intercourse between individuals based upon a mutual recognition of personal integrity and worth. To individualize and socialize "the downmost man" ought to be the passion of every State and of every institution. The infinite worth of the worst calls for the spirit of Jesus, which assumes that none are beyond the reach of tireless love and that the bringing of one soul to itself were of more value than all the world beside. You remember Holmes' story of the old desk—how on a visit to the old homestead he was listlessly fumbling about it and accidentally touched a spring that released a secret drawer never before opened. The desk had been in the family for generations, but nobody ever knew of the drawer. So beneath the cyclonic whirls of the outer life there is in us all a hidden recess where precious treasures lie concealed. It is the mission of the wise educator to discover them and bring them to the service of society. Some years ago, when I lived in Darlington, a penniless, friendless, half-idiotic negro, alone in the world, was cutting wood in our back yard one day when our little blue-eyed boy standing by looked up into his face and said: "George, I love you." The negro threw down the axe and went away muttering to himself as far as we could hear him: "Somebody loves me; somebody loves me, loves me, loves me!". Five years after we had left there, while on a visit to the town, I met George on the street, and when he recognized me he asked only one question: "How's Old Blue?" and went sauntering off down the street, muttering, "I must see Old Blue some time." His whole life had been made over by one sentence from a little curly-headed boy. So the touch of sympathetic spirits brings us to ourselves and creates for us a new heaven and a new earth.

It has been said that the history of two worlds can be written on half a postage stamp. It would be an interrogation mark on one end, an exclamation mark on the other, with a thin line between. Raising and answering questions, research and the distribution of knowledge are alike the work of the modern educator. The true investigator, meek and lowly in spirit, letting go all else, despising all else, dead to all else, shut up in his "closet of alone desire," is slowly laying in solitude and silence the foundations of the coming age. The teacher's purpose is to enable the individual to fill his peculiar place and to live his highest life in the world. He makes, for example, the plowman master of his craft, and puts the greatest possible distance between the man and the mule.

It was asked of Darwin what it would profit a man, if he gained the origin of species and lost his sense of poetry. The aesthetic revelation of the world to every young heart is not the least important phase of the work of education, for the zest of life can come only to hearts that can revel in the beauties of literature, music, art, nature, and life.

And again, there stands over us all an ideal self that will not let us alone in our sleep, a voice sweeter than any tones yet uttered, a hand stronger than any yet put forth, a life richer, fuller, more powerful than that yet lived, and there are longings in us all for a larger place in the world. These upward and outward impulses are the sociologist's desire for rightness, which is an element in every normal individual. Education seeks to develop, regulate, and satisfy these desires for health, wealth, sociability, knowledge, beauty, rightness.

There is one other, and that the most fundamental, universal, and vital of all. I have put it last, but Moses put it first, for in response to its call he began his first instruction in the principles of citizenship by bringing the people out of the camp to meet God (Ex. xix:14-17):

"Creeds change;
All outward forms
Recast themselves.
Sacred groves, temples and churches
Rise and rot and fall.
Races and nations
And the various tongues of men
Come and go and are Recorded, numbered,
And forgotten in the repetition
And the drift
Of many ages.
All outward circumstances
May be different;
But there lives no man—
Nor ever lived one—
Who in the silence of his heart
Feeling his need
Has not cried out
Shaping some prayer
To the unchanging God."

This desire is, therefore, as truly a part of the normal personality as any other, and to fall short of developing, regulating and satisfying it, is to fall short of making men and women, and to fall utterly where failure is most disastrous; for if every other cry of the heart is answered and this is smothered or hushed, the student leaves his alma mater a mutilated soul.

THE METHODIST CHURCH, SOUTH.

By Rev. A. H. Williams.

When the division of the Methodist Church occurred in 1844, the word "South" was attached as a mark of distinction and to indicate the location of the Southern Methodist Church. "Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States" sounds a bit more pretentious, but even the United States is provincial in a sense. To blot out all sectional features, and to indicate a disposition to pose as the world church, in fact, it might do to say "Methodist Episcopal Church of the earth."

The word "Methodist" indicates the kind of church, "Episcopal" suggests the form of government, and "South" the more immediate location.

The greater strength of the church (South) is in the south part of the United States.

That location is disliked by no few people, and the same was true of "Nazareth" in the Savior's time. "He is a Nazarene," they often said, and "Can any good come out of Nazareth?" "He is a Southerner," some say, and "can anything good come out of that country where slavery once prevailed?"

Such standards and tests were discarded by the Divine Christ, and little did he discourse of Nazareth. He came for a purpose, and understood himself and "kept moving," and consumed his time and efforts in locations of most needs and of greatest opportunities for the objects of his coming. But still, on occasions, due consideration for human opinions or human inquisitiveness, might demand an explanation; but the Savior settled all by saying, "by their fruits ye shall know them," not by Nazareth, or by Dixie, Japan or the United States, nor even by the opinions or previous customs of slave-holding or non slave-holding people, but "by their fruits."

Opinions vary and locations differ, but "the fruit of the Spirit" and other kinds of fruit indicative of a good church are everywhere and always the same. Are we spreading the gospel, getting people saved, building churches, founding great schools and circulating good literature? If so, then ours must be a good church. It is better to know if Christ is with the man than to know simply his name and place of residence, or even political opinions. Humanity is clannish, to an extent anyway; and where is the man who can please all the clans, or even love them all just the same? He may change his name, modify his opinion, and round up the corners of his being until every distinction is blotted out entirely, and even then some inquisitive specimen of the genus homo would propound the question: "Well, what did you change your name for?" and "Oh, just so, yours is the old Southern church, and you lived at the South," so that explanations must be made, and all churches and individuols do make them more or less, and should do so. It is very much more convenient and honoring to state the case simply in keeping with the facts of history

Churches, like men, to be valuable must be distinctly something, anyway. The jelly fish is valueless for use; he can neither swim nor flap, nor fight, and is poor for diet. But a real fish graded as excellent, even though he may have fins and horns, and the power to spin through the water in perfect accord with the designs of his existence, and such is true even though he may originate in frozen oceans or in the waters of the South Sea islands. He is a fish, from whatever point of the compass he may hail, and sensible, unprejudiced people ordinarily will so consider, provided he is not a "mullet head" or a great denizen of the deep with swallowing inclinations too fully developed. The "blind leader of the blind" and the swallower of the churches are alike to be dreaded.

The Methodist Church, South, having its largest plants and greatest strength in the Southern half of the United States, and classing as the second greatest body of Methodists in the world, needs no apology for its existence. By all signs it is divine in origin and approved of God and possesses a distinct mission—not simply for the special work of going to "teach all nations," but also in being qualified abundantly to "begin at Jerusalem," and the Jerusalem of the American country is much at the South, and the "ends of the earth" are to be represented yet more in this section as the years pass.

A WORD FROM THE PARSONAGE.

By Dr. T. B. Holloman.

In the Advocate of July 29th appears an article from the pen of "A Layman," titled "A Word From the Pew," containing several suggestions; and some of which, as pastors, we will do well to "sit up and take notice."

But, if Brother Layman would allow, it might be suggested that there are two sides to every proposition. Now, this writer was reared away out in the country and knows all about the advantages and disadvantages, ups and downs, conveniences and inconveniences of country life—was twenty-five years old before he had any experience in town or city life. My father's house was the preacher's home, and for fifty years he served as steward in the church.

In all this I have heard much conversation concerning church and church life long before I knew any of its real labors or responsibilities. This much, by way of suggestion, that I have only the kindest feeling for the brother in the country and on the circuit. I agree with Brother Layman that the pastor should know ALL of his people, and cannot understand how he can succeed in his work if he does not. From his communication, I conclude that Brother Layman is a man of intelligence, and from its scope, also of experience. My observation has been that the average Methodist preacher does more pastoral visiting, and more work outside of his own communion than any other minister. This is a legitimate fruit of our itinerant system. Time was when on the big circuit he could use the same sermon frequently, but not so in this day of smaller works. This, with the more extensive education of the people, makes it necessary for him to give more time to books and preparation.

As to pastoral visits. What constitutes a pastoral visit? To go from house to house and listen to the same old story of complaints, disaffections, and neighborhood gossip "ad nauseum." Only a few weeks ago, a minister said to this writer, "I'm sick of such talk as I am forced to hear often in my rounds," and this is not an isolated case. Again, how often should the pastor call, under ordinary circumstances? Dr. Theodore Cuyler, the great Brooklyn pastor, and who stood at the head of the list in that particular, said that it was his custom to visit once a year the homes of his people; and then to give attention more closely to the sick and his pulpit preparations. This writer recalls a pastorate which he served, and concerning which his predecessor said, "Brother, you'll find a good many babies there to be rocked," and veritably he was correct; and yet all of my rocking, added to the rocking and soothing syrup of predecessors, never developed one to whom I could feed the stronger meat. After four years they were still demanding more rocking and more of Mrs. Winslow. Often the pastor receives general invitations which bear embarrassment on their face, "Come to my house any time, you're always welcome." "Don't wait for special invitation." "When you come within a mile of my house, just stop, we've always got a place for your horse, and a PALLET for you, just come on."

Many of these invitations are sincere, and others not so much so as the pastor often finds to the embarrassment of himself and the home. There is a member of the Misissippi Conference who had this experience (having had many of these general invitations.) He had preached to a crowded house (for he was a popular man and preacher). "Brother Star go home to dinner with me." "Well, Sister, I dined with you when here last. I'll wait for invitation elsewhere, and if I get none, I'll come." Half hour later found his horse at that Sister's door, and yet there were those who made charge that this brother sought only the select. I am inclined to think that Brother Layman is a member of some board of stewards and as such, he must know how rarely it is that the pastor is assessed more than a bare living—his salary is determined by the question, "How much can he live upon?" and often that is a scant living when compared with his membership, and the family dependent upon his labors. He must supplement with garden patch, which requires his attention. If his people were liberal in assessment and prompt in payment, it would doubtless be different.

Again I would suggest to Brother Layman that with the present collections demanded of the pastor, he might find that it would help the membership to "enjoy their religion," if they would respond to the pastor's calls and thus relieve him of a burden which is an annoyance to any pastor and a hindrance to his "enjoying his religion." I am pursuaded that if such laymen as the brother to whom I write could be at our District and Annual Conferences and hear the almost audible groans of the preachers when discussing these collections, that they would loose and let the pastor go on to the higher work of his ministry. Yes, as a pastor, I thank you Brother Layman for your brotherly suggestions and as minister who has made little reputation other than that of trying to visit, with system, from house to house, I beg that you relieve us of the unnecessary tax to strength and patience in raising these Conference collections.

If you come within a mile of my house, stop and see me, my Brother, and we'll talk it all over, either on the front porch or around the hearthstone.

COUNTRY CHURCHES.

ARE WE ASSESSED TOO MUCH?

By A Local Preacher.

Dear Doctor Boswell: By your permission I wish to discuss briefly the above, and in part answer the question. The question naturally arises if we are not assessed too much, then why are not the assessments all paid in full? This question I wish to answer first. When I hear some things from the pulpit, and see the methods used, and the manner in which these collections are attempted (?) to be collected, I am not surprised at the result in so many instances, and the preacher is forced to make his report to the Annual Conference that the "finances are not in full." Now the pastor should not, when he presents these several claims of the Church to his congregation get up with a long face, and dronelike tone of voice tell his people "that the Church makes it his duty to try to collect the assessment that we are taxed with," and then adds that while he thinks "the two hundred dollars assessed to the circuit is too much," he hopes the brethren will give him a liberal contribution. If a stranger was to step in just at this point he would likely think from the appearance of the preacher and the congregation that it was a funeral occasion, and when the collection is announced, seven dollars and fifty cents being the total from the large congregation, the preacher with great profusion of words thanks the people for their liberality! Now, under this kind of management the assessment is too much. Then the preacher should not, when presenting these claims to the people, tell some funny antedote to tickle the ears of the world, and worldly-minded church members, if he does, the result will not be much better than the above collection referred to. If the preacher is not informed on the subject he should read his Bible and stay on his knees till he learns better. Says one, "How should I present these claims of the Church?" I answer by asking a question, How would you do if acting as a business agent for some great and reliable commercial company? why you would present the claims of the company as politely, earnestly, as intelligently, as business-like as you possibly could. Then the same method will apply to the business or financial part of the Church. Try it, brother, and see.

I am not much surprised at the indifference of so many of our people, when the great mass of them do not know anything about what the Book teaches on this subject and it seems to me that many of our pastors are rather backward about informing them from a Bible standpoint on the subject. Now, Brother, let's get what the Bible teaches on this subject and give the people the benefit of it in the Spirit of the Master, and you will be agreeably surprised to see what an awakening of conscience will take hold of your people, and do not talk about the folks giving to the Lord for until they have paid the tenth they cannot give anything. This, to my mind, is the weak point in our Methodist system. "Cry aloud and spare not," is just as applicable at this point as it is at any other. God holds the preacher to strict account at this, as well as at any other point, where it involves a breach of trust. Let the narrow-hide bound church member cry out "preaching for money," if he will, you know better and the Lord knows that it is a false accusation, so you need not be alarmed at this, you would not miss him much if he should withdraw his financial support from you; the Good Shepherd will look after the preacher that does his whole duty. And the people as a whole will have more respect for him. May we, as preachers, give the people a "thus saith the Lord," for everything we say or do.

LOUISIANA METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

Dear Brethren: By request I am writing a short history of the Louisiana Methodist Orphans' Home.

In 1896, while I was serving my first pastoral charge, at White Castle, I opened my church to Rev. Alfred E. Clay, founder of the Waifs' Home, New Orleans. As I listened to him tell of the Home I was seized with a burning desire to see the Louisiana Conference own and operate a Home for helpless children. The impression grew on me that we should be doing our share in the matter of child saving. About six years later, as I took the train in Cousbatta for Conference at Alexandria (December, 1902), the representative of the Louisiana Baptist Orphanage, Rev. T. J. Barret, alighted. We exchanged the usual greetings and I learned that he was on my work looking after some orphans for the Baptist Orphanage.

I felt more than ever that we must do something ourselves. I went to the Conference with these longings in my heart. On Saturday, Dec. 20, 1902, I introduced the following resolutions: (1) Resolved, That it is the sense of the Louisiana Annual Conference that we as a body establish an orphanage to be maintained and operated under our supervision; (2) Resolved, That we request Bishop Key to appoint an Orphan's Home Board that shall be empowered to receive donations and to locate a site for the domicile for said orphanage. (Signed), J. D. Harper, W. H. Hatfield, G. D. Purcell, H. O. White, W. Moore, L. L. Roberts, R. W. Vaughan, J. T. Sawyer, J. L. P. Sheppard, N. F. Hoffpauir, C. C. Wier, H. S. Johns, J. O. Bennett, F. G. Hocutt, T. J. Upton, H. W. Rickey, J. M. Johnson, Geo. Jackson and J. P. Haney.

On Monday the following Orphan's Home Board was appointed: C. C. Wier, J. D. Harper, F. S. Parker, J. T. Sawyer, H. R. Singleton, H. H. White and W. L. Doss.

The next year (1903) the Conference met in Minden and the board asked for a man to be put in the field, but none could be spared. The latter part of 1904 Rev. C. C. Wier made a few trips in behalf of the Home. In December, 1904, Bishop Morrison appointed Rev. C. C. Wier the financial agent of the Orphan's Home. In 1905 all travel was tied up on account of quarantine and very little was done. In July of 1905 we received our first orphan's from the Whites' Chapel charge, P. M. Brown, pastor. They were boarded in the Orphan's Home, Baton Rouge, for a year, when they were put in a temporary home in Bunkie, where they with other little ones stayed until September, 1907, when they were transferred to Ruston, which town had been accepted as the permanent domicile of the Home, where in a rented cottage, the little folks have been cared for.

At the Conference in Leesville, 1908, Rev. C. C. Wier resigned as financial field agent, and Rev. R. W. Vaughan was unanimously selected by the board as his successor, which nomination was ratified by the Annual Conference, and he was duly appointed by Bishop Ward.

In 1906 a new board was appointed in Shreveport by Bishop Ward: H. W. Bowman, chairman; R. H. Wynn, secretary; C. C. Wier, treasurer; L. N. Hoffpauir, K. W. Dodson, W. R. Harvell and J. E. Denson. Lay members—J.H.Mays, Jr., S. D. Pearce, J. J. Johnson, J. W. Mitchell, S. B. McCutcheon, C. M Roberts and H. L. Baker.

At this Conference there was also appointed a board of trustees, who were responsible for the management of local affairs at Ruston.

Ground was broken for the big new building early in 1908. At this writing it is nearly completed and the present management seem enthusiastic at the idea of entering the beautiful home on the 40 acres of land given by the Ruston Progressive League.

It is with gratitude that I note that our Home has passed the point of indifference on the part of the Conference and is now an acknowledged agent for good in the Louisiana Annual Conference. This worthy institution has just begun to make history.

The members of the Conference board at present are H. W. Bowman, chairman; L. N. Hoffpaiur, secretary; C. C. Wier, treasurer, Revs. K. W. Dodson, W. R. Harvell, J. E. Denson., Lay members—J. H. Mays Jr., S. D. Pearce, Crow Girard, J. W. Mitchell, S. B. McCutcheon, C. M. Roberts, H. L. Baker. Trustees: S. D. Pearce, president; J. E. Denson, vice president; C. C. Wier, secretary; J. H. Mays, Jr., treasurer; R. H. Wynn, Briscoe Carter, J. W. Mitchell, P. K. Abel, C. M. Roberts.

Praying God's blessing upon this worthy institution, I beg to remain yours fraternally,

C. C. WIER.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE—A FINE PLACE FOR YOUR GIRLS.

By Rev. H. M. Ellis.

As just now many parents, guardians and young ladies are considering what college to patronize next session, I believe it to their advantage and interest to hear of the splendid advantages offered by Whitworth College, our great girl's school of Mississippi.

Whitworth College is an old and honored Methodist female college with a history of which it is justly proud. It occupies the most prominent and attractive location in the progressive little city of Brookhaven, Miss., than which there is not a healthier place in the State. Its grounds are as beautiful as those of any institution of the kind I know. Its large grassy lawns, its cool and ample groves, its commodious and comfortable buildings—just now adorned with a new coat of paint, its well-tilled and well-filled garden, its scrupulous cleanliness throughout, all mark it as a place to be sought after and admired.

Its president, Rev. I. W. Cooper, D.D., one of the best known and most loved members of the Mississippi Conference—a man of much experience in college work, is as high-toned, courteous, conscientious and painstaking as any gentleman who presides over any educational institution, and is worthy of the fullest confidence. With him a trust is a sacred thing, and every pupil is a trust.

The faculty is thoroughly competent for its high-class work, each member of which having been selected with the greatest care. The very association with these dignified and elegant men and women in charge of the various class rooms is a privilege to be coveted by any young lady.

The high curriculum and thorough work is the special pride of the institution. Her pupils are educated when they receive their diplomas at her hands. Whitworth would not prove a congenial place for lazy or "slip-shod" students, for it demands ever diligence and the best work.

Its departments of Music, Elocution, Art, and Commerce, are each presided over by acknowledged experts in their several spheres, and offer advantages inferior to none to be found in this or adjoining States. The emphasis Whitworth has always put on thorough and high-class literary work has sometimes made it seem that her specials were not sufficiently cared for; but this is positively not the case. The skill and efficiency of the graduates in each of these departments proves that there is no better instruction therein to be had or desired in this whole section.

At an art levee tendered the Confederation of Women's Clubs during their meeting here last spring several visiting ladies of prominence were heard to remark their surprise that such opportunities in the study of art were to be found in Mississippi. When, later, the King's Daughters were in session here and Whitworth treated them to an evening of music and recitation, the same surprise was repeatedly expressed concerning the excellent work of these two departments.

But I would specially emphasize the wholesome and blessed moral and spiritual tone and influence of Whitworth College. Christ and Christian life are kept prominently before the student's mind. Every-day God's Word is read and his blessing invoked in the chapel by the president or some member of the faculty. Every evening, just after supper, the active Young Woman's Christian Association calls the students together in a prayer, or testimony or praise meeting conducted by themselves, except once during the week, when the pastor has the privilege of addressing them. At some appropriate time each session a special revival is held for the students when every effort is made to lead the saved closer to Christ and the lost ones to trust his love and know the joy of his salvation. And, besides all this, the Bible has an honored place among the text-books for daily study. It is a safe and sane religious life and influence that is found at Whitworth College. No mere formalism, no pious fads, no hurtful fanaticism find support or comfort here. The one test of salvation here demanded is the Christly life with its two elements of purity and ministry, or holiness and service. No parent need fear for the spiritual welfare of the daughter committed to Whitworth College.

I have written this without any solicitation for the reason that I know the institution and too little is said of our female schools in our Advocates. Dr. Cooper, the president, is a modest man—a quality to be appreciated in this brazen age—and is incapable of blowing his own horn. Yet he has met with such success and done such a work that a simple statement of facts by him would seem like boasting. I have tried in this straight-forward way to let the people know the splendid advantages and opportunities awaiting their girls in this, our own, fair sunny-land.

Dr. Cooper tells me that applications are pouring in every day. You will find him ready to respond promptly to any inquiries you would make.

HUNGRY CHILDREN AND THEIR CRY FOR BREAD.

By President Betts.

It would wring your heart to read the letters I get from parents and youths in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, telling in honest simplicity a pathetic tale of intellectual hunger. I could use to excellent advantage already a thousand dollars in defraying the bare expenses of worthy and ambitious youths at our Conference Training School here for one year, who are deeply desirous of attending, but may not for lack of means. I would not ask that money be given them, but loaned, even at eight per cent. whereby not to pauperize, but ennoble the beneficiary. I never tire telling it, and I wish it might be widely known, that Alexander Stephens, aided ninety young persons in obtaining their education and only one proved unworthy. Will not some God-loving man or woman take these risks and help struggling youths, hungering for better equipment in brain and heart for their life-work and citizenship?

As president, I would sacredly disburse the funds from month to month, as the needs arise, giving detail account of same to the persons lending the money. And, I will use my utmost endeavor to encourage the faithful return of the principal with interest at maturity. There are no opportunities here for students to work their way, nor is it always best. The time thus devoted to manual labor is needed and urgently by the student in preparation of lessons and varied scholastic duties. Our curriculum is an exacting one and requires of bright students no ordinary effort to satisfy its proper demands. The plain-plodding youth finds it an arduous task to meet its requirements. Within a short time after finishing his education any ordinary person can pay back the loan.

If friends do not feel disposed to contribute to the Loan Fund we are trying to raise permanently, the interest on which will become part of the fund, then, it will be greatly helpful if any one shall come to our help as mentioned above and lend at legal interest to such young people as we find deserving and needy, the amount of board and fees at least. Thirty-six dollars covers the tuition and other fees, and for ten dollars a month, board, furnished room and fuel is supplied. Some of our excellent housekeepers here have fed and housed boys and girls in their brave fight for education, taking their note for it. Will not the Church at large bear also some humble part in this laudable service. Will Mississippi Methodists let slip by an opportunity so golden? Read the appeal made in deference to a real need, attested, let us believe, by our Redeemer, and act as in view of the Day for which all other days are made.

Take a peep at this from a country mother, in rude chirography-penned and imperfect orthography —but bearing unmistakable tokens of strength of character: "I have two boys that I want to send to school. I have a crowd of boys, but can't send them all at once. Would like to get a place to board them where they could work some, as we are poor people and they are used to work. I want you to do the best you can for them, or rather for me. I know I will have to make a great sacrifice and do without a heap of things. They can do anything about the place, such as milking, getting in wood and water, or anything that comes to hand. I would be glad if you could find them a good place to board where they would have good Christian influences."

Lives there a Methodist in all Mississippi who feels no sincere and practical impulse to help in such a case of real philanthropy? All will not respond at once, but some surely will do so and liberally.

Montrose, Miss.

REV. G. M. LAGRONE.

Rev. G. M. Lagrone was born in Edgefield District, S. C., Oct. 16, 1825, and died at his home in Calhoun County, Miss., May 30, 1909, in his eighty-fourth year, leaving an untarnished record, a memory deservedly honored because of his noble manly life and character of which his children will ever be proud and all who follow him may emulate. At the age of six years, his parents moved to Perry County, Ala., and settled in what was known as "The Dutch Settlement" three miles north of Marion. He was married to Martha E. Glass, Dec. 25, 1845. There were born to them eleven children, seven of whom grew to man and womanhood, and are still living. In 1869, he was left with several children to mourn the loss of the wife of his youth. After five years he was married to Mrs. Julia Davis, and in 1898 she passed away leaving him in age and feebleness patiently to wait the call of his Lord.

Early in life he was soundly converted and joined the Methodist Church. In his twentieth year he was appointed class-leader, when that office meant something, and it proved to be a wise appointment for him and the church for years to come. He soon developed into a most active worker, wonderfully gifted in prayer and exhortation. Because of these gifts he was in great demand at camp meetings, and revivals spending most of the summer for sixty years in this work.

I learned early in life the secret of his great power. Often have I unexpectedly come upon him at his accustomed place for prayer and heard him pleading with God, and I would reverently slip away, feeling that that was "holy ground." If I was ever converted, and I know I was, it was between my father's knees while at family prayers before I was three years of age. Among the earliest recollections of childhood is my father standing before a congregation in earnest exhortation, while Uncle Julius and Aunt Peggy, colored members of the same church, kept me on the back seat. I remember it as though it were yesterday, how my heart rejoiced, from a consciousness of the power of the Holy Spirit as I have it to-day, and how I longed to be good and useful like my papa; and for these sixty years he has been an example and inspiration to me.

In his youth he felt the call to preach, but being of a shrinking nature, and having had no educational advantages, and later in life the responsibilities of a large family, kept him from going into the ministry. It was a long and hard struggle until the General Conference passed an educational qualification. "This," said he, "gave me some relief." In 1869, he moved to Mississippi, and settled in Calhoun County, where he was soon known for his work's sake. Two years after coming to Mississippi he met a new presiding elder, Rev. Amos Kendall, who could find out more about men and get closer to them in less time than almost any other man, who learned of his early impressions, and seeing something of his gifts, he was urged to get license to preach. But he replied, "The General Conference has relieved me by passing an educational qualification that I could not stand, and I have felt somewhat at ease." Brother Kendall replied: "Sir, you can't throw that responsibility on the Church. If you want license to preach you can get it. I leave it with you." Some weeks passed during which he had a struggle. They met at a Quarterly Meeting and he was asked what he had decided to do. He said, "Brother Kendall, you have put me in trouble by your proposition. If you are going to throw the responsibility upon me I can't carry it any longer, and I am in your hands." At the Water Valley camp ground on the Banner Circuit, then Grenada District, Sept. 14, 1872, he was licensed to preach. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Keener, Dec. 1877. For thirty-five years he did faithful service for the church under the direction of the pastor, preaching every Sunday and in the Summer spending from two to three months helping the preachers in revival services. Hundreds of souls were converted under his ministry. He gave time and talent and means to the cause of God, and the Methodist Church, which was as dear to him as life. He was known by all, young and old as "Uncle Mike." The children and young people were devoted to him. He was called upon to marry more couples, and officiate at more funerals than any other man in all that country.

He was a man of the highest honor, and purest integrity. He had convictions and stood for them. He was an ardent Methodist, but had a broad, catholic spirit. No man ever made better use of his talents than he.

His last days were spent in mental and physical weakness, but he had the care and attention of a devoted son, and his good wife and children, all of whom were untiring in their interest and service for him. His tired and worn body rests in the cemetery at Liberty to wait the resurrection morn; his immortal and glorified spirit has gone up to its long-sought home to join with saints and angels in the song, "Unto him that loved us and washed us in his own blood be honor and glory forever and ever."

"Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ,
The battle's fought, the victory's won.
Enter thy Master's joy."

W. S. LAGRONE.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: In the Advocate of the 12th inst. a report of the action of the Methodist Historical Society appears. May I ask that you read carefully again the acts of that session and help me in the items suggested for your attention? Two points would I request that you give attention at your earliest convenience: "Prepare for the Society a sketch of every church on his work." This may be done in condensed form, and take but little time. Again, that any brother, or body, which has [illegible] records, send the same to me at Edwards, or to Prof. R. S. Ricketts, Millsaps College. Many hands make light work, we are told, and so it will be if all will take due notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Historical Secretary.

A NEW BOOK.

FROM DARKNESS TO LIGHT. The Story of Negro Progress. By Miss Mary Helm, editor of "Our Homes," organ of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, 1909.

This book is one of seven books prepared for the Woman's Home Mission Study Course at the instance of a Council composed of representatives of nine denominations whose women are engaged in home mission work. The Council had no book on the subject of negro progress, and one had to be written. The Southern contingent of the Council said "it must be written by a Southerner." To this the Northern contingent wisely agreed, and the work fell to Miss Mary Helm. It could have fallen into no more competent hands. To "Aunt Gilly," Miss Helm's black, "faithful old nurse," to whom the book is dedicated "with tender love and grateful memories," is the author largely indebted for inspiration in the writing. With the inspiration, it was a labor of love to collect, classify and put in order the mass of matter at Miss Helm's command.

The author disclaims any intention to undertake the solution of the "Negro Problem." In saying this she had in mind the problem in all its phases, political, social and religious, and yet she sets forth the only method by which the problem can be settled, viz, by the evangelization of the negro race. To this end there is a recognition of education as an auxiliary, not as a specific, for all human ills, as monomaniacs on education insist.

The book is what it proposes to be, "the study of negro progress from darkness to light." One who has never thought much on the subject, or has seen the negro only in the most unfavorable circumstances will read some of the pages of this book with astonishment, for it is true that in many sections of the country the negroes have made but little progress. This is true of large numbers simply because they have neglected to take advantage of their opportunities.

We commend Miss Helm's book to our readers. We hope it will have an extensive circulation in the North, where light on the negro question is more needed than in the South.

Fourteen Good Reasons for Patronizing Grenada College

First—The unexcelled Home Comforts; unequaled anywhere else in the State.

Second—The Health Conditions; we rarely require the service of a physician.

Third—Our unusually skilled corps of teachers, whom we were able to secure only by paying a salary much above that paid by other girls' schools of the State.

Fourth—The Fine Arts Department, unequaled in the State and unexcelled in the South. Our teacher of Art studied in Germany and France, and our teachers of Music are graduated from the best Conservatories of America.

Fifth—See Descriptive Course of Study, which is conscientiously carried out as indicated.

Sixth—The Lyceum Course, which is superior even to that sustained in the University of Mississippi.

Seventh—The Library, which is fuller and better adapted than that of most girls' schools of the South.

Eighth—Strong Christian Influence dominating all instruction.

Ninth—Personal attention to the individual pupil, with a view to develop the best even out of peculiarities of character.

Tenth—A Superior Student Body as Associates, since most of the indifferent have been eliminated.

Eleventh—The Rates are lower than those of any other school doing the same grade of work owing to the Conference Assessment, which gives us an income not possessed by other schools; further, we have no stockholders to whom we are forced to pay dividends, as are some private schools. Our patrons receive back in excellence of service more than they pay in.

Twelfth—We place but two girls in a room, while most schools put from two to six.

Thirteenth—We require our teachers to continue study. Two are in Europe, two in Chicago, others at other schools in the North and East.

Fourteenth—All these superior features enable us to turn out a larger percentage of graduates, who take high stand in the educational world, than any other school in the State. It means something to hold a diploma of the Grenada College.

Epworth League

THE THIRD DEPARTMENT.

By Miss Blanch Foose.

This the Literary and Social Department of the League, is the least cultivated, but amongst the most hopeful fields of League work. It is evident that in most of our Leagues this department of work is at a low ebb. It has been referred to as the "fifth wheel of the League," in other words, a hindrance rather than a help. Why is this so? Often it is the case that the leader is unsuited for the work.

Care should be taken in choosing the third vice-president, to select a young woman or a young man who is literary—one who has a fondness for the world of letters. Having this real fondness for things that pertain to things literary, the leader will be able to select a course of study suited to the capacity of the members. He should be a good reader so that the habit may become contagious. He should be of a social nature, and as he mingles with the Leaguers, should tactfully discern what they are reading, or if they are reading at all. In a friendly way, he should get them acquainted with and interested in books that will be helpful to them. He must be in sympathy with the members, and then a powerful influence may be wielded in the right direction. There is a need for some one at the head of this department who is intellectually cultured, who can furnish such entertainment as will uplift and create a desire for culture.

Again, the course of study should be arranged in a systematic way. Say, for instance, it is decided that a League will make a study of American poets. The leader, the third vice-president, with his committees should decide what poets are to be studied, how much time can be devoted to one poet and how much to others, and should arrange the programmes and assign the parts for the entire season. This will avoid "jumped-up" meetings and will add to the interest of the literary socials.

At this point it might be well to suggest several lines of study that may prove helpful to some of the Leaguers. It would be excellent training for a League to make a study of the life of Wesley, the Discipline of the Church, or some of the writers of the world-famous hymns. Instructive and interesting courses would be the customs of the different countries, or famous men and women of a country. A very good evening could be made by discussing the editorials and contributions in a given issue of the "Epworth Era." Call it "Era Evening." Helpful ideas are frequently given for this department in the "Department Helps" of the "Era." No two programmes should be conducted in the same way. They should be varied. Each one should hold the interest of the members, and create a desire amongst those who are not members to come again. The social hour holds opportunities of winning and holding the stranger.

God creates us, not for pleasure alone, but for the stern duties of life. Mrs. Watkins, in her book, "The Third Department," says of life, "It is a serious thing, not given us for amusement, nor to be frittered away in senseless pleasure. It is a thing we shall have to meet again before the judgment throne of God, and we must give an account not only for the deeds done in the body, but for all of its lost opportunities and undeveloped possibilities." Such being the case, we should do our best and should improve every opportunity that comes. The world furnishes amusements which add nothing to one morally, intellectually, or spiritually. The League should seek to furnish entertainment which will cultivate a desire for the higher and better things of life.

As soon as the reading course can well be introduced, the committee of the Third Department should encourage the members to get and study the books of this course. Individuals, or members in groups, might purchase sets and arrange their circulation so that each Leaguer will have read the course within a specified time. Under this department, also, is the Era Agency. The agent should be a member of this committee. He should not be satisfied until he has placed the League organ in the home of every Leaguer.

While it is the duty of this department to encourage the study of good books, it must not be forgotten that the Bible, the book of books, must first be considered. Every Leaguer should have a Bible of his own and should carry it to all the devotional services. The workers of this department should interest the members in "The Quiet Hour," a quarterly publication. By its observance, the Leaguers will form the habit of daily and systematic Bible reading, the League will be blessed, and its influence be felt throughout the whole Church. Copies of "The Quiet Hour" should be distributed and subscriptions solicited.

"Let us put forth a greater effort in this work. Behind us lies a great work, but before us are opportunities opening on every hand." "Happy, thrice happy is the League where the Literary and Social Department is in good running order, watched over carefully by a broad-minded discriminating interested, wide-awake member of the League. Here this department becomes in every sense of the word a help, a great factor in the lives of those with whom the organization comes in contact."

COLUMBUS DISTRICT EPWORTH LEAGUE.

The Epworth Leagues of the Columbus District met at West Point, Miss., July 19-20. The programme was carried out exactly as planned, not one appointed to take part being prevented from doing so. Rev. T. W. Lewis preached the opening sermon for the Leaguers on Monday night. He chose for his text Isa. 55: 2, and for his theme—"Wasted Energies." He spoke of man as a spendthrift, wasting his energies in the physical, mental and moral realms on account of ignorance and lack of purpose in life. He stressed the fact that the Epworth League is a preventive of this waste in that it stands for: (1) A saner and sounder intelligence; (2) Teaching a more healthful denominational loyalty, and (3) Consecration of young life to the service of God.

The Quiet Hour service was held Tuesday morning at 6. Brother Lewis read from the lesson "The Beatitudes, which he termed the "Present Tenses of the Christian Life." This meeting was well attended and thoroughly enjoyed as the most spiritual service of the Conference.

At 8:30 Tuesday morning the regular business of the Conference was taken up. Reports were heard from the following Leagues: West Point, Junior and Senior; Columbus, First Church Senior; Columbus, Second Church, Junior and Senior; Cedar Bluff, Senior; Shuqulak and Mathiston had no delegates. League work, in all its phases, was ably discussed. Mr. W. E. Kennedy, president First Church, Columbus League, gave a practical talk on "How to Organize a League Chapter." "The Work of the Devotional Department" was presented by Miss Stokes of Columbus—"preparation" being the key-note. The benefits to be derived from the work in the Charity and Help Department were forcibly presented by Miss Connell, of Mayhew. By far the most inspiring and helpful talk was on the "Missionary Department," by Rev. J. H. Holder.

The West Point Juniors gave a demonstration of the work of the Junior Department, which all present enjoyed immensely. When the Leaguers gathered in the afternoon, Rev. T. H. Dorsey led the discussion on "How to Conduct a Business Meeting." Brother Dorsey believes in promptness in opening and closing.

Mrs. Kennedy, of Columbus, proved to the Leaguers that she knows how to conduct a successful League Social. All present took part in the literary contest she had prepared, and enjoyed the music furnished by the choir of her League.

The committee on resolutions presented the following resolutions which were adopted:

"Believing that the good leaven of the Epworth League ought to have every opportunity to spread until it permeates the life of the young people in every church, therefore, be it resolved:

First, That the District Secretary be requested to call a District Meeting each year at such time and place as will best serve the interests of the League.

Second, That we pledge ourselves to give full co-operation to our District Secretary in planting the League banner in every church possible in our district.

Third, That we extend our heartfelt thanks to the Epworth League of West Point for their delightful hospitality."

The committee on nominations reported the following who were unanimously chosen officers:

President, W. E. Kennedy, Columbus; first vice-president, Miss Bessie Heron, Columbus; second vice-president, Mrs. Q. A. Oates, Shuqualak; third vice-president, Miss Mary Price, Macon; fourth vice-president, B. F. Bell, Starkville; secretary and treasurer, Miss May D. Williams, West Point; Junior Superintendent, Mrs. T. H. Dorsey, West Point.

Revs. Lipscomb, Lewis, Dorsey, Nabors, and Gladney, of the Columbus District; Bachman, of Winona, and Holder, of Booneville, were present throughout the session and added interest to the Conference by taking part in the discussions.

The District Secretary, Miss Critz, is to be congratulated upon the success of the first District Conference of the Columbus District. The sixty-five delegates present spent an enjoyable and most profitable time.

A VETERAN CALLED HOME.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Last Wednesday, Aug. 13, 1909, I was called to attend the funeral of a man who was over 100 years of age. The record is interesting, and worthy of preservation.

Mr. Sterling Arnold was born in Brunswick County, N. C., Oct. 16, 1806, and died near Columbia, Miss., Aug. 11, 1909, lacking only two months and five days of being 103 years old. He was twice married, the first time in 1824, by which marriage he had born to him eleven children. The second time, he was married Oct. 15, 1868, and there were born to him six children. His second wife, with whom he had lived forty years, still survives him. Had his eldest son been living, he would have been 80 years old. Mr. Arnold was converted and joined the Baptist Church in 1829, eighty years ago. During the greater part of this time, he was a deacon in this church. Just one month before his death he declared his faith in Christ in an experience meeting at what is known as Bayliss Chapel, on the Oloh work.

"I'M YOUR UNCLE!"

The Prince of Wales is fond of telling a good story against himself in connectinon with his former visit to Ottawa, some few years ago.

The Prince—then Duke of York—stole away for a quiet bicycle spin early one morning, and in his ramblings met a farmer heading marketwards, his wagon temporarily stalled by the loss of a nut belonging to the whippletree bolt. His Royal Higness, with his usual democratic kindness, assisted in putting things right.

On parting the farmer expressed his rough thanks, and asked if he might know the name of the person to whom he was indebted.

The royal cyclist replied modestly: "I am the Duke of York; and may I ask whom I have the pleasure of addressing?"

A broad, amused smile beamed from the farmer's face as he said: "Me—me! Why, I'm your uncle, the Czar of Russia!"—Selected.

JEAN'S ALGEBRA.

Jean unstrapped her books, and took pad and pencils from the closet.

"I'd like to be polite, Mr. Marshall," she said, laughing across at her father's old friend, who was spending two days with him, "but I never dare to be polite till my algebra is done."

"What makes you like it so much?" Mr. Marshall asked, smiling. "Young ladies don't generally have much taste for algebra."

"Like it!" Jean repeated vehemently; "I despise it. That's why I do it first; if I gave myself the tiniest margin of excuse, I'd never get it done. And I may be stupid—I am stupid in it—but it sha'n't conquer my morals anyhow."

"I see," the guest replied, rising. "Well, good luck to it—and you, Miss Jean. Perhaps you'll like it better after a while."

"Never!" Jean returned emphatically.

A month later the three girls were looking at one another with dazed eyes. They must take care of mother, of course, but how? Corrinne's music? Barbara's art? They had been studied only for accomplishments—they never had supposed that they would need them.

Then a letter came from Mr. Marshall, with the wonderful offer of a well-paid position for Jean.

"Jean!" Corrinne cried; "why, she's the youngest!"

"For Miss Jean," Mrs. Randall read: "A young lady who always tackles her hard things first in the determination that they shall not conquer her morals' is the kind of young lady that we need fifty-two weeks in the year."

"Who would have thought that a little thing like that—" Barbara said brokenly.—Pittsburg Observer.

AN UNEXPECTED QUESTION.

One morning about twenty years ago a lawyer on the way to his office stopped outside a barber shop to get a "shine."

The little bootblack who plied his trade there was no stranger to him, although he knew him only by his street name. This morning the boy was unusually silent. The lawyer missed his bright remarks and began to rally him a little, when suddenly the boy looked up in his face and said:

"Mr. Bartlett, do you love God?"

The lawyer was an upright, self-respecting man, but neither a church attendant, nor much given to religious thought, and he took the question at first as an attempt at a joke on the part of the boy; but he soon found that it was meant in all seriousness. No one had ever asked him the question before in quite the same way, and it staggered him.

"Why do you ask me that, Bub?" he said, after a rather awkward pause. "What difference does it make to you?"

"Well, I'll tell you, sir. Me mother an' me's got to get out, for the place we live in 'll be tore down pretty soon, an' a fellar like me can't pay much rent. Mother does all she can, but you see there's three of us, an' me grandmother's lame; I dunno what to do. Yesterday I heard two men talkin', an' one of em' said God would help anybody that loved him if they'd tell him they was in a hole. I thought about it most all night, an' this morning I made up my mind I'd lay for somebody that knew him well enough to ask him."

The lawyer was embarrassed. All he could say to the threadbare little bootblack was that he had better ask some one else. He had better keep inquiring, he told him; for in a city of so many churches he would surely find the sort of person he wanted. He thrust a dollar into the boy's hand and hurried away.

But all that day he found his thoughts reverting to the bootblack and his strange question. "A fine position for an educated man in a Christian country!" he said to himself.

"Struck dumb by an ignorant street Arab! I could not answer his question. Why not?"

The lawyer was an honest man, and his self-examination ended in a resolution to find out the reason why. That evening he went, for the first time in many years, to prayer meeting, and frankly told the whole story, without sparing himself. From that day life had a new meaning for him, and a higher purpose.

A few days later, at a Conference of ministers of different denominations in the same city, the lawyer's strange experience was mentioned by the pastor who gave him his first Christian welcome. Immediately another minister told of a young man in his congregation who had been awakened to a religious life by the same question put to him by the same little bootblack. The interest culminated when a third declared that he had a call from the bootblack himself, who had been brought to his study by a man who had appreciated his unexpected question and knew how to befriend him.

Such an incident could not be allowed to end there. The boy was helped to good lodgings, and to patronage which enabled him to provide better for his "family." At last he had found somebody who loved God, and in time he had learned to love him himself, and "know him well enough to ask him." Opportunities for a decent education were opened to him, and he showed so much promise that his lawyer friend took him in first as an office-boy and finally as a student.

Many would recognize the bootblack to-day if his name were given, not only as a member of the bar in successful practice, but as a church member and a worker in Sunday School. He loves boys; and the few who know that he was once a bootblack understand his interest in little fellows who need a friend. Helping them is for him loving God in the most effectual way.—Youth's Companion.

"Power for Service."

This is a book of 270 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

TO FRIENDS OF THE ADVOCATE.

To the hundreds of faithful Agents, and the thousands of friendly readers of the ADVOCATE, greeting:

Our fiscal year ends with the 30th of September, just six weeks off. We will close the year with an increased subscription list, but, unless there is considerable advance for the weeks between now and the last of September, the financial showing will not be as good as at the close of last year. This will be solely because the publisher is carrying a large number of subscribers who are behind in payment from one to several months. Few are behind as much as a year. In other words, we are behind in our finances because so many brethren and sisters fail to renew their subscriptions promptly. We are persuaded that well-nigh all these subscribers intend to pay—many of them, the great majority, are only waiting for the preacher to call on them for the money. We have two requests to make:

1. We ask the preachers to call on the subscribers between now and the middle of September and collect all they possibly can—not only the amount past due, but secure as many new cash subscribers as possible.

2. We ask subscribers who know that their subscription has run beyond the time paid for not to wait for the preacher, but to send us the amount due, in cash or money order, by the middle of September. Examine the little red or yellow label on your paper. The date shows when your subscription expires. If it has expired, please remit at once. The amount each subscriber is due is very small, but the aggregate is large, and, if it remains unpaid, a heavy burden falls on the publisher.

A prompt response to these requests will be greatly appreciated by the publisher, who, at this season of the year, as is always the case, is hard-pressed to meet the demands made upon him. He is bound to keep up the credit of the ADVOCATE, both by paying for the material he uses, and by paying those who work in the office.

Brethren, let us hear from as many of you as possible, and at the earliest date. And blessings be upon you!

DR. ELIOT'S NEW RELIGION.

Considering the contempt with which Mr. Harold Bolce's exposure of the teachings in some colleges was received, it is little short of wonderful that the religious press of the country has with practical unanimity condemned President Eliot for prophesying the coming of a new religion to supersede the old. Even our friend of the Arkansas Methodist, who declared that "nobody with a grain of sense" would believe what Mr. Bolce said, characterized the speech as "foolish"—"an old man's 'mid-summer madness.'" Why all this? Mr. Bolce is small game—too small for their sixteen-inch guns.

It is true that Dr. Eliot's speech inculcated, or set forth nothing immoral as charged by Mr. Bolce to some college professors, but he did prophesy the doing away of all authority in religion, and the denial of everything like sin in human nature, and distinctly disavowed the necesity for atonement or mediation. In fact, no vital principle of the gospel is to be retained in the new religion. In one thing the higher critics agree with Dr. Eliot, viz.: the rejection of the supernatural in religion.

In this case we wonder if "the wish is not father to the thought." Does not Dr. Eliot already hold to the kind of religion which he tells us will prevail in the future? If so, what more can he do to encourage the human race to lapse into all manner of immorality, or barbarism. St. Paul tells us of a class of men, who, though not outright atheists, "do not like to retain God in their knowledge." The first chapter of his letter to the Romans tells us how far such men can go who throw off or defy all divine authority. If any reader of this Advocate desires to know what will be the state of society when Dr. Eliot's new religion prevails, that chapter will give the necessary information.

With all the restraints of revealed religion, backed by miracles, and the influence of grace, the good men and women of the world have a hard time in maintaining good society. They will be utterly powerless when these restraints are removed. Verily, when that day comes, "the dragon, that old serpent which is the devil, will be loosed a little season."

CONFERENCE MISSIONARY EVANGELISTS.

Many Annual Conferences, acting under authority of the Discipline, have Missionary Evangelists in the field, nominated thereto, and supported by the Annual Conference Board of Missions. The Oklahoma Conference last year took a long step in advance of her sisters, and put in the field, not Conference Missionary Evangelists, but District Missionary Evangelists, nine in number.

The Northwest Texas Conference followed the lead of Oklahoma, save that Conference appointed only two men, the appointment of one reading "Brownwood, Dublin and Gatesville Missionary Evangelist," and the other "Conference Missionary Evangelist." From this we infer that the Conference Missionary Evangelist has charge of the whole work, while the other works under his direction, but is confined to three districts, or to the three towns, Brownwood, Dublin and Gatesville.

Dr. Lovett, of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, not being satisfied as to the legality of the appointment of a plurality of Missionary Evangelists, Conference or District, inquired for the law governing the matter. The Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn., May 7, says, "The editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate will find the law governing the appointment of Missionary Evangelists in paragraphs 358 and 99 of the last edition of the Discipline. The number of such workers in each Annual Conference is left to the discretion of the Conference Board of Missions.

We seriously doubt the correctness of the Advocate's statement in all particulars. There can be no division of opinion as to Paragraph 99, but it refers only to the time a Bishop may appoint a preacher to such work. It specifically exempts him from the operation of the "time limit." Paragraph 358 is not so clear. The paragraph is confusing if not inconsistent. To appoint two or more Conference Missionary Evangelists, or one for each district, may not be a violation of the letter of the law, but that a plurality of such evangelists was intended is not certain. The first part of the paragraph says: "An Annual Conference Board of Missions may employ suitable persons," etc. But the last sentence in the paragraph evidently confines the Board to the employment of one man in case it should desire a traveling preacher.

Under the law a layman may be employed by the Board, and strangely enough, the Board may authorize him to "hold evangelistic services, to make missionary addresses, and to take collections for the support of the work of the Board;" and stranger still, this Missionary Evangelist, preacher or layman, can do these things only "at places designated by the Board." We find ourselves wondering if Annual Conference Boards of Missions actually designate the places where their Evangelists are to labor. We have never heard of it. And strangest of all, if a layman is selected for the work, he is nominated to the Bishop, if the Conference agrees, and, contrary to all precedent, and in defiance of all regulations governing the itinerancy, he may be appointed to the work.

We do not inveigh against the law. Its intent is all right whether it authorizes one or more evangelists, preachers or laymen, but certainly the law limps mightily. It empowers the Conference Board of Missions to do that which neither pastor, presiding elder nor Bishop has authority to do, viz., to authorize laymen to hold evangelistic services, and nominate them to the Conference and Bishop for appointment. To these conclusions we are led by the reading of Paragraph 358 in the Discipline of 1906. Verily, the law needs interpretation or amendment—the latter by way of elimination.

Not many moons since one of the women of New York, belonging to the "Four Hundred" crowd, "gave a dinner to a monkey." Whether the monkey entertained the invited guests by grinning and chattering, by "monkey shines," or by show of a strong appetite, the society reporter did not say. If we mistake not the monkey's dress suit was minutely described. That was sufficient. Now, somebody out in the Northwest "has gone and out done" the New York set. On Saturday night, Aug. 7, at Logansport, Ind., a magistrate by the name of James Reed "officiated at the wedding" of two monkeys, Master Tony and Julia Krager, owned by one August Larmbrigger, a banker of Orville, Ohio. It is said this marriage was performed in the presence of 200 people. A license was presented bearing the name of the Circuit Court clerk, with the name and ages of the two monkeys. The Chief of Police of Logansport volunteered to give the bride away. The magistrate, it is further said, "used his usual ceremony, and pocketed $5 tendered him by Larmbrigger." The feasting of a monkey at a fashionable table was a bit of folly. The marrying of monkeys was sacrilege. "What fools these mortals be," somebody said, long ago. Were he alive could he not use a harsher word?

People are likely to stand amazed when told that the students at Yale University spent $107,397.20 last year on their games—rowing, track sports, base ball and foot ball. But after paying expenses, each member, we suppose, getting his allotted share, the surplus remaining was $3589.14, for the receipts taken in at the gate amounted to $110,986.34. That looks like business, and we do not wonder that so many boys go crazy over the ball games. But Yale is only one of many large institutions where immense sums of money are spent in athletics. The money spent at Yale alone on sport would pay thirty-five college professors a salary of a fraction more than three thousand dollars, yet the bigger part of that money outside of legitimate expenses, is worse than wasted. It is obliged to result in one of two things: In turning out professional sportsmen, or wrecking for life the morals of the boys. How these boys stand in their classes is not known to the outside. A few years ago it was contended by respectable college men that athletics did not detract from the interest in the class room; but two famous educators, Dr. Eliot and President Hadley, have recently declared to the contrary. That there are abuses connected with the games goes without saying. These are due to inter-collegiate sports and the gate receipts. Abolish these and college athletics would be worth all they cost. The New York Times says: "All the abuses and excesses of athletics are due to the gate or related to it, and without it most of them would disappear."

PERSONAL.

Rev. A. I. Townsley is off for a ten days' visit to his father's home near Fulton, Ky. We hope his visit will prove not only pleasant, but profitable.

Rev. J. A. Taylor, Hopewell Charge, La., favors us with a club of ten subscribers, and says he expects to send more. Brother Taylor has our hearty thanks.

Rev. J. W. Ramsey, Enterprise, Miss., says: "Notwithstanding the hot weather, our congregations continue large. The people are kind and appreciative."

Rev. E. S. Parker, we learn, was in the city on Sunday last, and preached at one of the churches. He is always welcome at the churches of his native city.

Rev. W. G. Harbin is in a meeting this week with Rev. H. C. Brown, at Centerville, Miss. He had given the week previous to the brethren at Topisaw Camp Meeting.

Rev. M. M. Black, at Port Gibson, Miss., is "holding the fort alone," all other pastors of the town being off on vacation. He has been preaching to good congregations.

It has been reported to us that Rev. Geo. D. Anders, at South McComb, is preaching to crowded churches every Sunday. His prayer meetings range about 125 in attendance.

Rev. R. A. Davis, writing from Bienville, La., says: "I have been engaged in protracted meetings with Brothers Williams and Henderson: had fine times and many conversions."

We have received two communications written with pencil—one of them much too long for us to transcribe. If they do not appear in print, the writers will know the reason why.

Rev. E. C. McGilvray, Basin, Miss., remitting for a club of subscribers, says: "A larger number of my members take the Advocate on this charge than any work I have ever served."

We understand that Rev. J. T. Abney and his congregation are about to enter the new church at East McComb. This building is splendidly situated and is one of the handsomest churches in the town.

Rev. J. D. Simpson, of Ackerman, Miss., has been out in Texas—with the church at Millspoint, where he engaged with the pastor in a very successful meeting. Many people were saved and joined the church.

We regret to learn that Rev. J. E. Cunningham, who had been on the sick list, was unable to attend the Oxford Camp Meeting, a good account of which we have in hand, and will print as soon as possible.

We are so crowded with communications, long and short, that the brethren must excuse us for failing to print duplicate reports of the same meeting. This will explain to one or two brethren why their favors have not appeared.

Rev. J. S. Rutledge, Indian Bayou, La., has just sent us in a list of twenty names—eighteen new subscribers and two renewals. He was assisted in securing the list by Rev. A. W. Hompauir, both of whom have our sincere thanks.

The "Scott County Register" speaks in complimentary terms of Rev. H. Mellard, pastor of our church at Forest. His sermon on Sunday morning, the 8th, on "Peace," the Register says, "was one of the best ever delivered in Forest."

Rev. W. W. Graves, Homewood, Miss., reports the death of a patriarch—Brother Willis Eichburger, who passed away at his home Aug. 7 in the 83d year of his age. He was a "prince in Israel," and universally known as "the best man in the country."

Rev. C. D. Atkinson, after a protracted absence in the far west, visiting his sister and friends, and seeing the sights of the Seattle Exposition, taking notes of the great meeting at "Epworth by the Sea," is again at home in good health and hard at work

We give in this week's issue the first of a series of articles on "Our Educational Situation," by Dr. Jno. A. Rice. We ask for these papers, carefully prepared, a careful and thoughtful reading. Dr. Rice knows the situation, and knows also how to deal with it.

We learn from Rev. W. G. Harbin that at the Topisaw Camp Meeting there were 100 conversions and 70 additions to the churches. One very interesting and hopeful feature was the pledges made for the establishment of family altars, 28 homes having been pledged to this daily service.

Rev. and Mrs. A. G. Shankle and children, of Ruston, La., after a month's absence at their old home in Georgia, are back in the parsonage. The visit was pleasant in every way and much enjoyed. Brother Shankle is rested, and ready for the fall campaign, which he will prosecute with energy.

Rev. O. G. Halliburton asks us to say that the parsonage for the Bogue Chitto and Norfield charge is located at Bogue Chitto, not at Bayou Chicot, as it was printed. We beg pardon for making the mistake. It was a very natural mistake for a Louisiana printer to make. He is more familiar with Chicot than with the other name.

Brother T. Q. Ellis, of West, Miss., in renewing his subscription, says: "In 1885 I paid the money to Chas. B. Galloway, then editor, for my first subscription to the Advocate, and it has been coming to me ever since." We think Brother Ellis loves the paper. We know that those who make the paper love Brother Ellis.

Rev. T. S. Randle has just closed a great meeting at Chase, La. The good Lord was present in great power. Nineteen persons joined our church, and four joined the Baptists. Sister Randle, who gives us this good item, sent with it one new subscription, thus finishing her club of ten for this year. Sister Randle says, "We are happy on the way."

Rev. M. H. Honeycutt, Downsville, La., has just closed a meeting at Douglass Church, where he received twenty-nine persons into membership. He has also held a meeting at Wilhite, where he received sixty-nine members and baptized twenty-four infants. He was assisted in this last named meeting by Rev. D. B. Boddie, a local preacher, a faithful and earnest worker.

We had a pleasant visit on Tuesday last from President G. L. Harrell, of Mansfield College, who was in the city working in the interest of his school. He is much encouraged in his work. Mansfield is one of the great schools of Louisiana, and we hope it will continue to grow in favor of the people. Mansfield graduated three young ladies in 1857. Two of them still live and reside in Mansfield.

Rev. W. T. Woodward and his assistant, Rev. J. M. Carpenter, are in the midst of a round of protracted meetings on the Haynesville charge. He is now engaged in building a church, to be called Woodward Chapel, near the State line between Arkansas and Louisiana. The building is in a fine neighborhood. It is the tenth church built by Brother Woodward since his connection with the Conference.

Sunday, Aug. 8 was a great day with the Methodists at Sardis, one of the good towns of the North Mississippi Conference, with a good pastor in the person of Rev. J. T. Murrah. They worshiped for the first time in their new and elegant church. A large congregation was present, both morning and evening, and Brother Murrah preached two good sermons, the like of which, says the "Sardis Reporter," the congregation hope to hear from him during the next four years. We rejoice with the good people of Sardis. We worshiped with the old members in the old church nearly forty years ago, and further back than that, viz, in 1862, we tried our "prentice hand" on them when they had no church of their own, the Presbyterians courteously allowing us the use of their house. The glory of this latter house is greater than the glory of the former, and the people rejoice.

A FITTING MEMORIAL.

Not only our Church and the South have felt a pride in doing honor to the memory of our sainted Bishop C. B. Galloway, but the whole country must have felt a thrill of pride as encomiums have come from foreign lands where the distinguished ability of the Bishop was known and appreciated. It is no idle thing that a church or a nation should erect permanent memorials to the honor of their great. In such memorials there is not only shown a just appreciation of high ability and earnest effort in the service of mankind, but there is stimulated a desire on the part of the young of succeeding generations to emulate the characters of those so honored. In proposing a lasting memorial to our honored dead we should act while the impulse is on, but should consider at least two prime questions: What would most please the departed and what will, while proving a lasting memorial, at the same time accomplish the greatest measure of good to the greatest number of posterity.

In the memorials that have been proposed there is much deserving of favor; yet there is one, we believe, not heretofore publicly mentioned, that meets most fully all requirements of being at once an expression of the highest honor to him whose memory we honor and a provision for blessings to future generations of countless people.

There is, at Searcy, Ark., a memorial begun, the foundation of which, we may say, was laid by the beloved Bishop himself. Through his own efforts and the loving reverence in which he was held by Arkansas Methodism, is Galloway College a reality to-day.

Struggling through years of want and distress for the equipment necessary to afford opportunities merited by the hundreds of young women, who have passed through her halls, this institution has bravely contended with the difficulty which the Church has been unable to move.

With a constant aim for higher and better things a great measure of success has been achieved and to-day the alumnae of this institution compare favorably with the output of other and wealthier schools. Throughout the South they may be found prominent in church work, in society, model home-makers and a blessing to their families.

With a limited equipment for modern work and without a dollar of endowment, the institution has continued to gather, from year to year, the best ability obtainable to impress, not only the minds, but the hearts and lives of our daughters that they may occupy the highest plane in the family, the church and society.

As a result of the work done the general educational board has given Galloway College a place among the "B" class colleges. With an endowment it will speedily be given grade with "A" class schools, and have facilities for giving all the advantages obtainable in the oldest and best. The buildings and accommodations for 200 should be extended to accommodate five times that number.

Occupying the most beautiful spot in a moral, intellectual and healthful community near the center of the State, easy of access and already well in advance of any institution for training of young women in the State, it appeals to the Church and those who would do lasting honor to the memory of Bishop Charles B. Galloway to turn their attention and aid to make Galloway College at once a fitting memorial and an honor to the cause of Christian education in the South.

We have the nucleus, the young women are in sight, some going abroad for what they should get at home and some denying themselves because they cannot go abroad and there is no room at this place. This ought not to be, hence we call upon the Church and friends of our beloved Bishop to do their whole duty in the fear of God and rally to the aid of Galloway College.

TRIUMPHANT FAITH.

Matt. xv:21-28.

The subject of our lesson is triumphant faith. It might well furnish us a study in intercessory prayer as well. The wearied Master led his disciples aside into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon to rest awhile. He would have no man know of his presence, but he could not he hid. A mother's heart and yearning desire found out the Christ. Her daughter was sadly afflicted and needed the Master's help. Here, as ever in the past, and always in the future, faith found the one who could help, and saw the one all sufficient one, hidden from other eyes.

Even love will sometimes put faith to the test. The Master did not at once grant the request of this longing mother. He had devoted his earthly ministry altogether to Israel. His mission was for the whole world, but in the wisdom of God, the message of salvation was to come through the one people, and the sacrifice was to be made in their midst. The miracles of healing performed by the Master were among the Jews. Now a woman of a strange people called upon him. He knows no north, nor south, no east nor west, when it comes to the administration of his kingdom, but the universal kingdom was to start, where the foundations had been well laid. From Jerusalem it was to go to the ends of the earth. So this Syro-Phenecian woman is told that it is not meet to take the bread from the mouths of the children to give unto dogs. Evidently there was something in the face of the Master, or in the use of the words that made them less harsh than they seem to us, for the woman answers at once, "Truth, Lord, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs that fall from their master's table."

Faith was triumphant, and love prevailed. The Master answered in words from which all harshness had departed: "O, woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee, even as thou wilt." Mark you, it is the faith of the mother, that works for her daughter's benefit. And so closely does the mother-love identify herself with the need of the daughter, that the Master seems to recognize it, for he says, "Be it unto thee, even as thou wilt." Then he assures the mother that already the thing is accomplished.

It is the story, old as the world, and that has come to us in multiplied forms. At the prayer of Abraham, Lot is delivered from the destruction of Sodom. When Job intercedes, his friends are forgiven the unwise things which they have spoken, and even Job profits, for it is only then that the Lord turns again his captivity. When the palsied one borne of four, appears before the Christ, the record says, "seeing their faith." So it is, where love prompts, and faith will not let go, the prayer of intercession, is ever triumphant.

FROM EARLY GROVE, MISS.

Dear Advocate: We have just closed the most successful protracted meeting we have had at Early Grove, for a number of years. The success of the meeting was due to the good management of Brother Hall, preacher in-charge, and the preaching of his co-laborer, Brother Broom, a brilliant young minister of the Waterford Circuit, Miss., who seemed, from start to finish, to be filled with the power of the Holy Ghost.

We had two additions to the church; two children baptized; two professions of faith, and the entire membership of the church was benefited and revived, with "the old-time religion which is good enough for us."

BY A MEMBER.

ARTESIA.

Dear Doctor Boswell: We have just finished our revival services at Artesia, of the Columbus District. In many respects it was a very great meeting. "Best in twenty years," said some. There were twenty-one additions to the church, and the results otherwise were exceedingly fine and far-reaching.

Rev. L. M. Broyles, pastor at Corinth, who grades easily with the best of North Mississipi men of the pulpit, was the principal minister and worker of the occasion. Brother Broyles was happy in the service from the first unto the final finish and as a useful factor among the people indicated constantly his good skill as a Christian worker and as an "embassador for Christ."

For cheerful earnestness and cool sincerity, the Artesia congregation is not often exceeded. They were awake to the meeting, and splendidly helpful from the beginning, and were still enlisted at the last benediction, at which final service a great audience was present and five young men were added to the church.

Artesia is a railroad center, and growing town on the Mobile and Ohio, and all indications point to an interesting future.

The strength of the church there and the community's prosperity, is prophetic of a station at some future time, instead of a half-pastoral charge as at present.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the propertyholders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the propertyholders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

EDUCATIONAL.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE OF ALABAMA

LOCATED in the historic City of Montgomery, well known as one of the most beautiful and cultured of all the Southern cities. Genial climate offers finest health conditions. Young ladies from the North, desiring to escape the rigor of long winters would find here an attractive College home. Campus of fifty-seven acres in one of the city's most attractive suburbs. Tennis, basket ball and other outdoor recreations emphasized. Under the auspices of the two Alabama Conferences of the Southern Methodist Church. Annual appropriations from the two Conferences added to other productive funds equivalent to an endowment of $150,000; a substantial nucleus for a continually growing fund. Endowment as above-named enables the College to give, at reasonable rates, the finest advantages in the various departments of study. Music Conservatory, Art, Expresion and Literary departments are in charge of experienced teachers who bring to their work the best training of the Universities of this country and abroad. During the ensuing session, which opens September 30, 1909, only "B-grade" work will be required for graduation; the following session, beginning September, 1910, full "A-grade" standards will be maintained, while a Junior Department continues the preparatory courses. Mrs. RUTH COCHRAN (nee Champenois) wife of J. A. Cochran, was born in Mobile, Ala., Dec. 28, 1835, her age at death being 73 years, five months, and twenty-one days. She was the mother of ten children, six of whom are living; she has also thirty-seven grandchildren and thirty-six great-grandchildren. Sister Cochran lived a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for sixty-five years. All through her active life her home was the home of the preacher and now that she is gone her children are walking in her steps. She was a faithful wife, a devoted mother and a true Christian. She is gone, but her influence abides in the hearts of her loved ones: and may they all so live that finally they shall come to the land of eternal day.

E. D. PHILLIPS.

Mrs. SUSAN A. McCAIN was born Oct. 14, 1832. She joined the Methodist Church at the age of fourteen. There was never a charge brought against her in all her Christian life; which was over sixty years. She was married to Mr. F. M. Pitts, Jan. 9, 1853; lost her husband June 22, 1862, leaving her to care for five children, all surviving her, but one, who died in infancy. She was a sufferer sometime, though not bed-ridden, until a few days before she passed away. Her pastor visited her a short while before she was taken down and she assured her friends and pastor that she was prepared to depart and be with her Heavenly Father. She sweetly passed away July 31, 1909. On Sunday evening, Aug. 1, we preached her funeral to a large congregation at old Saline Baptist Church, Bienville Parish, La., and buried her in the cemetery near, where she sleeps till the resurrection morn. May we all met her in heaven. Alabama religious papers please copy.

Her pastor, R. A. DAVIS.

JAS. S. PURCELL was born July 25, 1843, and died July 2, 1909. We find recorded in his family Bible that he was baptized by Rev. T. O. Summers; joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1854; was converted, 1858. About ten years ago he moved from Black Hawk, Miss., to a farm which he had purchased near Bolinger, La. His location near here has been a blessing to this community. His upright life and his uncompromising attitude towards all forms of vice has gradually had a wholesome effect upon the people of this milltown. When he first moved here there was much disorderly conduct, not much interest in spiritual things. Now this is a remarkably quiet and orderly place and through the influence of himself and family, there is a regular appointment for the Methodist preacher of this circuit, for which the mill officials obligate themselves to pay $240 a year. So his influence for good continues to live on after his death. Brother Purcell was married to Miss Fannie M. Cole in 1868; who, together with eleven children, are left to mourn his departure. Two of his sons are Methodist preachers, Rev. Geo. Purcell, of the Louisiana Conference, and Rev. Jas. S. Purcell, of the Mississippi Conference. May God's grace sustain and comfort the bereaved family.

H. B. VANDENBURG.

Mrs. LOUISE LENOIR TAYLOR: daughter of James L. and Carrie W. Lenoir, was born in Prairie, Miss., Jan. 17, 1872, and died at the home of her parents in Amite City, La., Aug. 1, 1909. Sister Taylor was baptized in infancy by Bishop Robert Paine, her uncle; was converted at ten years of age and received into the M. E. Church, South, in which she continued throughout her life, a faithful and loyal member of its communion and a devout and exemplary Christian. Although suffering much she passed away in the full triumph of a precious faith, assuring her loved ones in the last sweet hours that all was well, and fell on sleep, a radiant smile playing over her wan, pale face. Sister Taylor was married to Brother Jas. R. Taylor, Nov. 6, 1895 who, with one son, survives her, a bright boy of ten years; their first-born, a daughter, crossed over the river in infancy. Sister Taylor leaves a father, mother, husband, a son and five brothers to mourn their loss. On Monday, Aug. 2, 1909, we laid her to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Amite, there to wait the resurrection of the just.

J. W. LEE.

To the above tribute, we add the following by Mrs. Dr. J. L. Lenoir, a sister-in-law: "At the approach of death, a bright smile played over her face and she repeated these comforting words, 'The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want.'"

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to call to that last home, our loved sister and friend, Mrs. CARRIE WHIDDON, therefore, be it resolved,

First, That the L. P. A. Society, of Rocky Springs, Miss., do extend to the bereaved father and husband our heartfelt sympathy that the grace of God whose dispensations are past finding out, may sustain the heartbroken father, husband and the motherless babes in this great affliction.

Second, We shall ever miss from our midst, one who was our vice-president and a faithful worker.

Third, That this be spread upon the minutes and published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and that a copy be sent to Mr. Barkesdale and Brother E. L. Whiddon, as a last token of love and respect to our departed sister and friend.

Some of the insurance companies are establishing hospitals and health resorts for the treatment of tuberculosis among their patrons. This has been denominated practical benevolence on some sides, and enlightened selfishness by others. Since over 18 per cent of the deaths in one year for which the companies paid were from tuberculosis, they argue that it is cheaper and better to give free treatment and restore men to health who will continue to pay premiums, than to pay the death benefits.

TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES AMONG EUROPEAN TEACHERS.

About 250 teachers in Denmark have become members of the Danish Abstinent Teachers' Association in addition to about 300 teachers who belong to other temperance societies. At the last annual meeting it was decided to send out a series of questions to teachers inviting suggestions as to methods, helps, needs, etc., for promoting training among school children. A similar association in Holland has a membership of nearly 900. It has received from the government an appropriation of 3000 marks. It publishes a paper which has a monthly circulation of nearly 2000 copies.

In Scandinavia the Norwegian Teachers' Abstinent Society is growing, while the Swedish Association numbers nealy 1000 members in 23 local branches. The special endeavor of the latter during the past year has been the building up of pupils' temperance societies.

Obituaries.

Mrs. TRANQUILLA STOKES HAMBLEN, wife of Rev. Jas. K. Hamblen, died at Greenville, Miss., on the 26th of June, 1909, in the 75th year of her age. She was born in South Carolina, the daughter of Samuel J. and Martha Stokes, and was brought by baptism into the Methodist Church in her infancy. Thus early taught the ways of the Lord, she continued in them through all her days. In the year 1840 her parents moved to Madison County, Miss., where she grew up, being educated in Sharon Female College. She was married on the 10th of December, 1863, by Rev. J. M. Pugh to Rev. Jas. K. Hamblen. Six children survive her, three sons and three daughters. In 1904 the family moved to Greenville, Miss. During the last year of her life she was the subject of affliction, experiencing the common lot of those who live beyond three score years and ten. She was of a meek and quiet spirit, devoted to her family, her church and her God, and beloved by all who knew her best. It is sad, indeed, for one whose companionship has been the joy and comfort of your soul to be suddenly called from your side in the journey of life. Yet not without hope, for the promise is that those who have lived by faith shall meet where age and sickness and parting are not known. This comfort the bereaved family may claim in full measure. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

CHAS. H. WILLIAMS was born in Illinois, March 7, 1855 and died in Tallulah, La., July 19, 1909. On Dec. 28, 1880, he was married to Miss Margarette E. Friesland with whom he lived happily until the day of his death. This union was blessed with eight children, five of whom, together with the sorrowing wife and mother are left to mourn their loss. He was a good citizen, a kind husband and a loving father. He came to Tallulah about five years ago where he has since lived, respected by his neighbors. For several months he was sorely afflicted being confined to his house most of the time. He suffered much. He had never made a profession of religion. The writer visited him often and found him ready and willing to talk about his spiritual condition. One day in April, he said: "I want you to baptize and take me into the church." After some conversation with him this was done on the 2nd of May. After this he seemed to be resigned and submissive to the will of God, and expressed himself as ready to go. May God bless and sustain the bereaved family and may this draw them to the foot of the cross. Sister Williams had prayed long for his conversion. May God comfort her now! Her pastor, R. O. WIER.

Brother ISAAC LAWSON died Aug. 31, in the twenty-fifth year of his age. Ike, as he was usually called, was considered a good boy. He was converted at the age of sixteen; united with the M. E. Church, South, and remained a member of the same to his death. He leaves a wife, father, and mother, five brothers, two sisters and many friends to mourn their loss. We would say to his loved ones: Be faithful to God, and you will meet again on that beautiful shore where parting is no more.

R. T. NOLEN, Pastor.

On July 26, 1909, the death angel visited the home of Mr. W. B. Hammond and wife and took from them their darling little babe, JAMES HAMMOND, who had been with them only a year. The separation from our little one is sad and we are lonely. We know that we can never again in this life see the smiling face, or clasp the little hands or hear the dear little voice, and we almost cry out of breaking hearts: Why does all this great sorrow have to be? Our darling suffered severely in all the four days of his sickness, but when the spirit left the tired little body, it seemed to linger a few moments to kiss away the lines of pain and suffering. We will try not to grieve, for our blessed Savior needs little buds as well as full blown flowers in his bouquet of glorified spirits.

Lovingly,

FATHER AND MOTHER.

RESOLUTIONS.

We, the committee appointed by the Methodist Ladies' Aid of Slidell to write resolutions on the death of our beloved sister, Mrs. SYLVINIA TALLEY, who departed this life May 22, 1909, submit the following:

First, That we, the members of the Aid deeply regret the loss of our Christian friend and sister, who was ever ready and willing to do for her Master and, though a sufferer was cheerful and patient. While we bow in submission to his will, we cannot but grieve her departure.

Second, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family who have our heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement; a copy be sent to the Christian Advocate, which paper she loved and that a copy be spread upon our Minutes.

MRS. N. C. ROUSSEAUX,
MRS. J. A. BOUSQUET,
MRS. A. V. HOVER,
Committee.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father has seen fit, in his infinite wisdom, to remove from our midst our friend, and Christian worker and member of our Woman's Home Mission Society, of the Richton M. E. Church, South, Mrs. EDWINA CLARK PULFORD; and whereas the intimate relation held with her as, at one time, treasurer and secretary of the Woman's Home Mission Society and Sunday School teacher and consecrated Christian worker in other ways; makes it eminently fitting that we express our great appreciation of her, therefore, be it resolved,

First, By the Woman's Home Missionary Society that the sudden removal of such a life from among us leaves a vacancy that is deeply felt by not only members of our society of the M. E. Church, South, but by the entire community, and that we have lost one of our most consecrated Christian workers.

Second—That we extend to her bereaved husband, father, brothers and sisters left to mourn their great loss, our heartfelt sympathy. We mourn deeply with them in this, their great hour of trouble, and words are inadequate to express the depth of grief we share with them, but we can only point them to the one who has promised to comfort those who mourn, and to urge them to look forward to and prepare for the great reunion in heaven.

Third—That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Woman's Home Missionary Society, that a copy be furnished the husband and father, and that the New Orleans Christian Advocate be requested to publish them.

FROM EUNICE, LA.

Dear Advocate: I assisted Rev. J. E. Craig in a revival meeting at Prudhomme three or four days. Some Some good accomplished, but the rain and other things together pretty near knocked us out. However, the meeting was not a failure, and if we could have run it about ten days longer, we would have had a great time.

From Prudhomme I came home and filled my appointments at Long Point and Eunice and then went to Brother Craig at Branch and remained until Sunday at the morning service at which time we closed a very fine meeting and one that should have continued at least a week longer, hut circumstances were such that I could not stay, and against the wishes of the people, and my own wishes and of the pastor's too, we closed. The power of God was there in every service and eternity alone can tell of the good done. I had a delightful time and made new friends, and met some old ones, and had a delightful stay in the hospitable home of Brother Lyons and family, also had the pleasure of enjoying the hospitality of several other homes for the noon-meal, and had many kind invitations that I could not accept. May the Lord bless Brother Craig and his dear people. Brother Craig is a true man, but has one fault that some of our other good and devout preachers have, and that is, he wont get married. That is his only fault. Well, maybe they are excusable.

My third Quarterly Conference was held at Long Point, July 28, the presiding elder, presiding. We had a good attendance and the presiding elder, Brother Denson, preached two fine sermons, and with his two sermons the revival meeting opened.

On Friday, Rev. G. D. Purcell, of Boyce, came to my rescue, and he came in power and demonstration of the Spirit.

Rev. J. G. Sloane, of Haughton, being down on a visit, rendered valuable assistance in the meeting, and preached a very impressive sermon on Sunday at 11 a. m. Long Point is Brother Sloanes old home, his parents and brothers and sisters live there. We were delighted to have him, our only regret was that he could not stay longer.

Brother Purcell did some very fine preaching; in fact, I never heard any man preach sounder and more earnest sermons in my life. I was delighted to have him. We had been associated together a great deal in the years gone by.

The meeting was very well attended considering the weather and much good accomplished. Several conversions, mostly in the church. One addition to the church.

My meeting will begin here the 29th of this month, Brother Harbin will do the preaching.

God bless the Advocate, and everyone connected with it.

S. D. HOWARD.

A REQUEST.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I wish to say the following to the pastors of the Louisiana and the two Mississippi Conferences:

Brethren, please send me the names of any from your charges who have come, or who may be coming, to Bogalusa. By this I can get in touch with the Methodists as soon as they arrive. Otherwise, they may come and remain only a few days and are gone before I can locate them. This will cost you only a 2-cent stamp or a postal card, and you will not only help our cause here, but perhaps save some soul from being finally lost. It does not take a Methodist long to "backslide," particularly in a place like this.

You will appreciate how hard it is to meet all the people who are daily coming here, many of them remaining only a few days. This is said to be the largest saw-mill town in the world, with a population of over five thousand people.

We can save many to our church and to the Lord if the pastors will promptly notify me when any of their members leave for this place. I really think we ought to have a law providing that the pastor shall notify at once any other pastor where their members may be going when they leave his charge. By this we would save many who are otherwise lost.

Brother Lipscomb, of Trout, La., has just sent me the names of some members leaving his work and as a result, I now know them and they are interested in the church

I hope to hear from many of the brethren soon. J. M. ALFORD.

Bogalusa, La.

SHILOH CAMP MEETING.

The Shiloh Camp Meeting, of the Shiloh Charge, Newton District, will begin Friday night before the first Sunday in September (Sept. 3, 1909). Rev. T. J. O'Neil, presiding elder of the Newton District, and Rev. W. L. Hightower, of the Philadelphia Charge, have consented to do most of the preaching. Rev. H. F. Tolle, of the Lake Charge, will conduct the singing.

All preachers are invited to be with us to help in the work of our Father's kingdom. We earnestly desire the prayers of God's people for the conversion of sinners and the perfection of Christians.

TO YOUNG WOMEN

You may be laying up for yourselves much future suffering, by not treating your ailments promptly, (before they have a chance to become chronic), with that well-known female remedy, Wine of Cardui,—about which you have so often heard.

Look ahead, and plan for a healthy, happy life, by preventing female trouble from getting a foothold.

Try it that famous medicine, Cardui, which has helped so many others, will help you.

For young girls just entering into womanhood and young ladies whose life duties have not long begun, Cardui is often of vital importance, giving them strength for daily tasks.

Read what Mrs. Mary Hudson, of Eastman, Miss., says about her young sister: "While staying with me, and going to school, my young sister was in terrible misery. I got her to take a few doses of Cardui and it helped her at once.

"I have taken Cardui myself and believe I would have been under the clay, if it had not been for that wonderful medicine.

"Now I am in better health than in three years."

Try Cardui.

LESSON FOR AUG. 22, 1909.

PAUL'S THIRD MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

THE RIOT IN EPHESUS

Acts xix:23-41.

Golden Text: "He said unto me, my grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness." II Cor. xii:9.

It took two long years of hard work on the part of Paul and the working of mighty special miracles at his hands by the Lord, to bring about the splendid results related in our last lesson. The wide-spread superstition among the Ephesians had received a severe check when the magicians and workers of sorcery destroyed their books and paraphenalia used in their nefarious business. After that public manifestation of repentance "mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed." A wave of reform had swept over the people, changing their manner of life in such a way, that those who were wholly interested in commerce began a howl of calamity. Modern reform is viewed in much the same light in some sections, especially where horse-racing and the liquor business is in jeopardy.

Prominent among the pessimists was one Demetrius, a silver smith, who must have concluded that the depression in business was caused by the Christian life that Paul preached and lived among the people. The sales of the Dianian shrines that Demetrius made had fallen off alarmingly, and something must be done at once to improve trade. So the silver smith called together the workmen of like occupation, and made a speech to them. He first made an attack on the religion that Paul preached, saying that not only in Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, had much people been turned away from worshiping the goddess Diana, and taught to believe "That they be no gods which are made with hands." He warned them of the impending danger to their craft, naming that first in which he was most concerned; also the tendency to abase the great temple of the goddess, causing it to be despised, and its magnificence destroyed, which all Asia and the world worshiped. Demetrius was a leader, and his speech being inspired by the wicked one, his hearers were soon transformed into a howling mob. "Great is Diana of the Ephesians" they cried, with wrath impelling them to ignore all laws. The whole city was filled with confusion, and two of Paul's companions were caught and rushed into the theatre. Paul wanted to follow and aid his fellow-workers, but the prudence of the disciples prevailed with him and convinced him that it would be a useless exposure of himself to danger. He was also thus advised by a message from some influential friends, "of the chief of Asia." An upright Christian character will command respect and admiration from all unbiased people, whether they agree in creed or opinion or not. The confusion increased as the mob entered the theatre, "some cried one thing, and some another" and "the more part knew not wherefore they were come together." The Jews had their part in this demonstration, but they were not drawn together by the same object as were Demetrius and his crafts-men, their animosity was more deep-set and of longer duration; they just yielded to an innate hatred of "Him who came to his own and his own received him not," and they hated Paul because he was a Jew, a Pharisee, preaching Christ and the Christian life. These Jews wanted to show the people that they had no sympathy with the affected reform, or with the man who was responsible for it, so they put forward one of their party to take a leading part in matters before the noisy audience; but when they saw that it was a Jew that was about to address them, they began their wild howling again. They cared nothing for the enmity between the Jews and Christians, and it was no time then to air grievances in which they were not interested. When Alexander attempted to speak he was only greeted with the cry of "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." This commotion continued about two hours, when the town clerk came upon the scene. Judging from his common sense talk, he was a man equal to the emergency, for in a few words, relating only well known facts, and a warning that such an uproar in the city of Ephesus would likely call for an explanation to the Roman authorities. Then turning to Demetrius, he administered a severe rebuke, telling him not to take the law into his own hands, and that if he had a matter against any man, he could bring legal action. Then paying a tribute to the manner of life, and the considerate feature of argument, on the part of the Christians, the town clerk dismissed the assembly.

The followers of Christ need not be alarmed at the wild and unreasonable speeches of those who oppose every kind of reform, for their influence for evil is but one of the "gates of hell" that Jesus said should not prevail. Men who work against piety and morality generally cloak their object under the guise of some popular sentiment. Demetrius did not know that he was the tool of Satan, used in the vain attempt to check the advance of Christianity. Under God, the preaching of Paul reached the ears of them that never heard him, for "he maketh the wrath of man to praise him," and it is a fact that which is opposed by wicked men, is often a matter worthy of commendation.

History daily repeats itself; those that stand for good morals in the near-by vicinity of Opelousas, have suffered persecution even to the threatening of the ministers of Christ. Satan grows more fierce as the fight against him waxes warm. In the light of the Scripture there is no place for wonder, for "the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." This warning is from I Timothy iv:1; and in II Timothy iii, the prediction is so clear that "he who runs may read." The time may be near when all that name the name of Jesus may be tried as by fire.

Let us hold fast to the faith that was once delivered to the saints, and having on the armor of God, the victory will be ours, under the leadership of the Great Captain of our salvation.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for a list of testimonials.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Dear Friends: I would like to send a personal letter to each member of the Home Mission Society in Louisiana, but as this message will reach most of you, I am sure you will deem it sufficient.

The Board of Home Missions has fixed the dates of meeting for Octoher 14-21. Names of those who attend must be sent to Miss Annie Knox, 214, 36th Street, West Savannah, Ga.

Our Week of Prayer is to be held October 4-10, and the proceeds this year are to be appropriated to much needed improvements and repairs at the Sue Bennett School. Just here I want to express my appreciation of the love and good will contained in the letters received from the Conference officers and District Secretaries, and above all, I would commend their zeal and faithfulness in the Master's service during the hot summer months.

I would like to tell you something of Mount Vernon; its beautiful homes and churches, its genial climate and Christian people; also of the many little wayside journeys here and there in the great city of New York, but I must condense this article and tell you of one visit that impressed me more than all the rest. It was my good fortune two weeks ago to listen to a great sermon by a great man, Dr. J. H. Jowett, of Birmingham, England. His text was from Gal. 2, 20—"I am crucified with Christ." His exposition of these familiar words of the great apostle seemed to sweep aside everything but the "Christ," and lead one to grasp the deep significance of the words: "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Somehow, this sermon followed me as my friend (Mrs. Wolfe) and I threaded the rough, dirty streets leading to the old Jerry McAuley mission in 316 Water Street, nearly under Brooklyn bridge.

Most of you perhaps are familiar with the story of McAuley's life and the life of S. H. Hadley, a convert of this mission; hut to see the plan and result of his life work is most impressive. I have before me the 36th Annual Report of this mission, with its motto: "We help men and women to help themselves." As I listened to the superintendent telling of the hungry fed, the naked clothed, the mighty services for men and women; as I thought of the thousands of broken lives saved through this man's influence, this man who had been a convict, a river thief and drunkard, the very chief of sinners, the mighty power of redeeming love reached my heart as never before, and the words, "He is able to save unto the uttermost," seemed invested with new meaning. Uncounted thousands have gone from this mission to seek and save the lost to testify of God's power to save from sin.

The Mission Home is located in what used to be the worst den in New York city, the hiding place of thieves and murderers, drunkards and pickpockets. While the surroundings are still rough, there is a great change. On the walls of the room we entered were neatly framed Bible texts, and underneath a large picture of Jerry McAuley, these words: "He rests from his labors and his works do follow him."

Dr. McKay, the late pastor of Fifth Avenue Collegiate Church, once said that whenever he felt discouraged in Christian work, he went down to the McAuley Mission to listen to the testimonies of the men there, who had found Jesus such a great Savior—"saved and kept" by the power of God from the lowest depths of crime and strong drink.

During the past twenty years over a hundred missions have resulted from this Water Street mission at home and across the sea, and the work still goes on to-day. The Mariners Church and Home, near by, on Catherine street, brings many sailors to this gospel centre, and a hoat called the Sky Pilot, connected with the mission, is carrying the good news of salvation to the vessels anchored there, and so the great work inaugurated thirty-six years ago by Jerry McAuley is still a fountain of "living waters" to thirsty multitudes on land and sea. The story of McAuley's life finds a fitting close in his dying words: "It's all right—up there." Dr. Prime, who conducted the funeral services in the Broadway Tabernacle, said: "There is no one pastor in New York who is doing the work of this humble man, and no pastor who will have a wider vacancy when he falls on the high places in his field of duty. When I have sat in the midst of publicans and convicts and thieves, drunkards and other vile and wretched human heings, down so low that no human arm is long enough to reach them, when I have heard them in broken accents, amid sobs and tears, tell what the grace of God has done for them, the tears have run down like rivers of waters from mine eyes and I have prayed that hundreds and thousands of preachers like Jerry McAuley, might go in the name of Jesus to seek and save the lost."

Let us then rememher not to he discouraged or cast down. Let us take our prohlems to One who is ahle and willing to solve them, and whose mercy is boundless as the waves of the sea.

In closing, these items from our General Secretary, Mrs. MacDonell, may he of interest: "The work grows at every center and opportunities multiply. The gulf coast work has increased our expenditures and enlarged our opportunities. Since July, 1908, the Immigrant Home in Galveston has cared for 1734 immigrants, and 500 additional, who were returning home. Work was found for 195 of these strangers, and 497 Bihles given or sold. In New Orleans we reach more than 200 different people per week in St. Mark's Hall,and many sailors in Gulfport have our ministry."

Let us not forget our Week of Prayer in October. Let every Auxiliary in the Conference ohserve this season, and with one accord unite to seek a special hlessing upon our work in the Louisiana Conference and elsewhere. When depressed by the magnitude of the Home Mission field, its crying needs and insufficient means, let us call upon Him who can make the "great mountain" a plain, and bring joy and gladness into the waste places. "Not hy might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." Yours with love,

MRS. E. R. KENNEDY.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To the Home Mission Society of the Mississippi Conference—

Dear Sisters: The following extract is from a letter recently received from Mrs. MacDonell:

"I am writing to announce that at an executive meeting of onr Board the latter part of June, we appointed Miss Rhoda Dragoo, a graduate of the Methodist Training School at Nashville and a deaconess, to the work at Biloxi in connection with the Gulf Coast work. Miss Dragoo went to the Seashore Assemhly the 22nd of June, and remained after the meeting. This meeting gave her an introduction to the people of Mississippi and a touch with the people who gathered there. We feel in giving you Miss Dragoo that we have made an effort to give you a strong worker and leader. She is a college-hred woman of great ability and soon wins the love of the people who need her."

This is the deaconess for whom we have heen waiting a year since the failure of Miss Boykins' health, necessitated discontinuing the work in Biloxi. Now the work is under control of the General Board and on a much more stahle foundation than when we first enterprised it.

The contrihutions to support of Biloxi Mission were liberal and prompt and we urge upon the Home Mission Society of the Mississippi Conference the same generous support for the work under the new administration. Miss Dragoo is our missionary given to us hy our special request to continue the work in which we are so deeply interested in Biloxi. Let us rally at once to the support of the work.

All money contributed to this cause must be sent to the Conference Treasurer, Mrs. J. K. Dunn, McComb, and hy her forwarded to the Treasurer of the General Board. MRS. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

TO OUR AGENTS AND ABOUT CLUBS.

Every preacher in charge of a church in the bounds of the patronizing Conferences is recognized as an agent of the Advocate. We are willing for any one, on his own responsibility, to raise a club and send it in where it does not conflict with the work of the pastor; but the preacher in charge is our authorized agent.

The rate of the regular subscription has been fixed at $1.50, as you have seen in the many notices we have given. The rate of commission on either new subscribers or renewals, will be 10 per cent of the amount collected. For a subscription at the rate of $1.50 the agent who collects is authorized to retain 15 cents.

The club rate will remain from now until the sessions of the Annual Conferences—$1.25 on clubs of ten or more subscribers. The commission on the clubs will remain unchanged at 25 cents until Conference. These clubs do not have to be sent in all at one time, and the number may be added to indefinitely until your Annual Conference meets. We make no distinction between new and old subscribers in the clubs. The only conditions are that you secure enough subscribers to be entitled to the club rate, and that arrearages be paid.

Any preacher who so desires may give his subscribers in the club Go Forward, instead of retaining his commission. To make it more plain, if you send ten or more subscribers and $1.25 with each name we will send Go Forward if you make especial request for it.

When personal checks are sent or cashier's checks, add 10 cents to cover exchange. The banks charge 10 cents for collecting either the personal check or the cashier's check. Almost any bank where you have an account will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. If you will notice the receipts we are now sending out, we give receipt for the amount actually realized on the check in this office. In the case of small checks we will give credit on the subscription only as far as the amount actually realized will pay.

The reason that we have reduced the former commissions paid, and the reason that we are watching so closely even the exchange that we have to pay on checks is that we have reduced the price of the Advocate, and there is no margin for unnecessary expense. Ten cents in one instance does not amount to much, but it may he the whole of the profit to us. When you multiply it by thousands, it becomes a serious matter, and we are cutting off all the margins in order to give all our subscribers the benefit.

"PROVE ALL THINGS; HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD."

WHOLE No. 2794.

The papers are reporting a great revival in business throughout the country, and the prospect is for a very busy season in all lines. The Picayune of Aug. 17 says: "From all parts of the country come reports of bountiful crops, with the single exception of portions of the cotton belt, where there are complaints of less promising prospects of a good yield than could be desired. Even the prospective shortage in the cotton yield in parts of the South is offset in a large measure by the favorable outlook for paying prices. The big crops of grain in the West promise to tax the facilities of the railroads to their utmost capacity, and already the supply of idle cars, which was so formidable during the spring and early summer, has practically disappeared." In the northwest the wheat growers experienced some difficulty in securing harvest hands, even at good wages. In one section—in Nebraska—a young woman offered her services to a farmer if he would pay her as much as he paid a man, agreeing not to charge him a cent if she did not do the work. He accepted her offer, and with three other young women she went into the harvest field. The farmer said they did as good work as any hands he ever had. And the women went into the fields by the dozen, earning as much money in one day as they earned in the towns in a week. So goes the story.

The Standard Oil Company is not yet willing to give up trying to make money. Having conquered many worlds, it has started out to conquer another. It proposes to make everything possible to be made out of coal oil. Its latest venture—at least the latest we have heard of—is to run up against the butter industry. They do not care to spend their hard-earned money for pure cow's butter; it is too scarce and too high-priced. They are not even willing to take a compound of beef tallow and cotton seed oil. If oil must go into butter at all, they have decreed that coal oil is the proper thing, and are going into the manufacturing of coal oil butter. The papers call it "petroleum butter." By what name it will be thrown on the market we do not know. It will be a fanciful name, of course, and we have no doubt will appeal in color, substance, aroma and eating qualities to many people who are tired of paying fancy prices for "golden Goshen" and blocks of oleomargarine. Private John Allen says, "there is no telling what a horned buffalo will do when it is after grapes." So we say there is no telling what the Standard Oil Company will do, when it is after butter. The Irish cook, it is already reported, when asked by the mistress "what has become of the coal oil butter," replied: "Sure, and I took it this morning to kindle the fire!"

Alabama has now, perhaps, the most stringent prohibition laws of any state in the Union. They are regarded by some as extreme, and not a few look upon some of the measures as unconstitutional. One of the kind is the article forbidding the newspapers of the state printing liquor advertisements. This is looked upon as an infringement upon the freedom of the press. A perfect howl is being made by some of the papers of the state, and they are rehearsing the same old song we heard away back yonder when prohibition first began to make headway in the South. But the cry of "sumptuary," "paternalism," "trying to legislate virtue into men's lives," no longer scare people. That the Alabama laws just passed to strengthen the prohibition statute are drastic, nobody will deny. They were made so on purpose. The liquor forces and their allies are wholly to blame. Had they, in common with the law-abiding citizens, obeyed the statute, these drastic measures had never been passed. Instead, there was systematic effort made almost everywhere to evade it and set it at naught. Locker clubs, which were nothing more than drinking places, abounded in all the cities, and were constantly multiplying. Blind tigers all but let their eyes shine, and when brought into court, juries would not convict. This was disgusting to honest judges, and outraged the governor and a majority of the members of the legislature. They were simply driven to desperation by the liquor forces, who were determined not to obey the law. Will they obey the laws just passed? Of course not. But if they do not, it will be harder for them to escape its penalties. Nor will they if there is any honesty and backbone in the officers whose business it is to enforce it.

One who makes a study of social questions and conditions declares that "in our race for wealth the very purposes of life are being forgotten, and the future of the nation is being sacrificed to the exigencies of the present time." This is said of conditions in England, but the statement applies quite as well to our own land, for the rush for wealth is as much in evidence here as in that country or any other. It is not the exact truth to say that "the purposes of life are forgotten." They are deliberately set aside, as evidenced by the fact that "many men choose their wives with a view to their earning capacity, and after marriage the advent of the infant is regarded as a serious obstacle to the woman's wage-earning capacity, and race suicide results. This craze for money does not end with race suicide, for not only is the birth rate decreased, but immorality of all kinds is rife." So far as our own land is concerned, the conditions alluded to exist only in the cities where women are employed in factories, shops, etc., or among the rich, who give themselves up, soul and body, to the demands of society. Country life is as yet unaffected, and the way to keep it so is to keep our country girls at home. This, under present conditions, can be done only by a proper recognition of the true sphere of women, and a determination on the part of fathers and brothers, not only to protect their daughters and sisters, but to see that they are provided adequately with the comforts of home. Any pure country girl will make a good wife and mother if she is given a home—no matter how humble, and surrounded by home comforts. Given these, she will willingly help her husband acquire the luxuries, and will patiently wait for them.

So much has been said in recent years concerning the tendency of our government towards imperialism, especially manifested in the retention and control of the Philippines, that we have been inclined to the idea of surrendering the Islands, and giving them self-government. But an article in the "Presbyterian of the South," in its issue of Aug. 4, quoted from the "Westminster," has caused us to hesitate. The writer says, after declaring several good personal qualities of the natives: "Should the United States in a few years retire from the islands and allow these people to rule themselves, as a goodly number of politicians at home are urging? I asked this question of many persons who were in a position to know in part at least. I will tell you what they said. The army men, who are soon to have the delicate and dangerous job of disarming the fanatical Mohammedan Moros to the south, and thus remove what is a constant menace to the peace of the Island, said unhesitatingly: No, never. There is no coherence among the people of these islands. Tagalogs, Moros, Igorrotes, Negritos are as totally dissimilar as though they lived at the ends of the earth. The people of these islands speak eight different languages and seventy or more dialects, which are incomprehensible to one another. Let the power of the United States government be withdrawn and as a result you have in place of government a regular cat-and-dog fight ad infinitum, with no possibility of a peaceful settlement. This is the way the army men talk." Another man in civil life, a schoolman, in answer to the question, said: "Not in a thousand years." Still another in a government office said: "Not in a hundred years." The writer, looking at the matter from another point of view, declares: "After all, their great lack, I am convinced, is not intellectual, but moral. This notwithstanding the body of the people are Roman Catholics."

* * *

The Chicago Record-Herald, considering the matter of prices and farm labor, has this to say: "Secretary Wilson returns from a Western trip with the conviction that his previous explanation of the upward trend of food prices is sound. He attributed the troubles of the consumer to the scarcity of farm labor, and he sees no reason to change that view. Thousands of fertile acres, he says, are lying idle in the Far West because their owners cannot get 'hands' at any rate of pay. American boys drift to the cities, while immigrants, even if from purely agricultural districts, are either unable or unwilling to do farm and field work, while many of those who try it prove to be incompetent owing to the different methods and the improved machinery employed here. Those who regard this theory as inadequate and who think that monopoly is not without considerable responsibility for the high prices of foodstuffs must admit that the scarcity of agricultural labor is a fact, and as such it at least partially accounts for the phenomenon in question. Hence, it is highly desirable to continue and extend the work of the Federal information division of the Bureau of Immigration, which has sought to promote the better distribution of immigration and has taken particular pains to direct the aliens to the Western States or localities where the shortage of labor is greatest."

OUR EDUCATIONAL SITUATION.

By Rev. J. A. Rice, D.D.

II.

We suggested in our last that education was the development, regulation and satisfaction of our fundamental desires and direction of its abiding interests. We may regard it also as the introducing of the soul into immediate, conscious contact with reality. And what is reality? Everything there is in this or any other world. Any man that looks about him will at times be overwhelmed by the infinite stretches of boundless space. When he tries to think of its contents he is forced to begin with a frictionless medium in all and filling all. And moving with irresistble power and unthinkable speed in this infinite sea he finds tireless energy gathering here, distributing there, forming here, reforming there. A closer glance reveals a universal reign of cause and effect in definite order of sequence, and reason seems supreme over all. A yet closer glance brings to light a ceaseless struggle from lower to higher, from inanimate to animate, and from lower to higher grades of life. Everything seems to be pushing upward toward man, the culmination of all, who is himself working in ever advancing stages of progress toward a far-off goal. For

"I doubt not thro' the ages one increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men are widen'd with the process of the suns."

But the heart cannot rest here; it must find back of all this a cause out of which it all comes, back of all nature, an intelligent first cause, back of all history a purposeful mind and a throbbing heart, back of all life a great first life, back of every child a Father.

Let us be reminded that the whole range of reality, this educational material, is a unit not to be cut up and dealt with in sections. Dealing with one part is dealing with all. In the background of all our thinking must be felt the whole vast range of things. The breadth of our education will be determined by the extent to which this is true. Specialism that is sane can arise only when, with this whole background in view, a portion of reality is grasped and mastered. We must not forget also that the soul is not an aggregate of separable faculties, but a unit, each of whose activities involves all the others. So simple a process as an act of judgment involves thinking, feeling, willing also. The ideal education seeks to bring the whole range of reality into contact with the soul, and the extent of this contact will measure the extent of our education; but the central element in all reality at every point is the great first cause. We can touch it nowhere without touching Him. He is back of all the material of psychic movement. For in Him all things live and move and have their being. If, therefore, education is conscious contact with reality, the ideal education is conscious contact of the whole soul with the whole range of reality, then nothing is education which is not conscious contact with Him, and none ideal that does not seek to bring in glad captivity every thought to the obedience of Him.

We come again, therefore, by another route, to the position of Moses, with whom the beginning of all true education and statecraft alike was the bringing of God to the people and the bringing of the people to God.

The same conclusion is reached if education be the expansion of the soul's limitations to a complete selfhood. There are roughly two worlds open to us all, that of sense in which we are born and from which, alas! too many never escape; and that of thought, vision, sentiment. The diameter of the first is the distance from finger-tip to finger-tip, or at most, the distance across one's premises or material possessions. Only material things are there. Only what can be smelled, tasted, heard, touched, seen with the natural eye, felt with the body, is real to this

"Savage race
That herd, and sleep and feed, and know nothing."

It is the mission of the educator to lead us out of this, to liberate us, to bring us into

"That untraveled world, whose margin fades forever and forever, when we move," helping us to escape "the merciless miles of the plain" and to

* * * "Fly in the greatness of God as the marsh hen flies
In the freedom that fills all the space 'twixt the marsh and the skies."

The possible as compared with the actual area of our lives is evidenced by the fact that of the 600,000,000 nerve cells in the brain, hardly more than a third are ever discharged; and by the fact that of the 250,000 words in English dictionaries few of us use more than 3000 to 5000, even Shakespeare commanding only 15,000, Milton 8000, the illiterate perhaps less than 1000. If it be true that we multiply ourselves by two for every new language learned, and if only one can think for every thousand that talk, only one see for every thousand that think, who will not mourn our wasting intellects?

The circle of our interests is determined by that of our knowledge. We care nothing for things of which we know nothing. The scope of interest to those who live in the world of sense is in mere things, or phenomena as they are observed or experienced; only with the extension of our thinking to the deeper causes and relations of things, to the aesthetic, to individual and social life, to God, do we approach the limits of ourselves. For only within the area of knowledge does effective action or even feeling arise, and beyond this neither can go. These boundaries within which we are to live our lives and do our work are largely fixed in the college period. Men rarely get new classes of ideas or interests after they are 25 or 30. And Goethe was not far wrong in saying that the world is ruled by the opinions of men under 24. Both the scope and the speed of after development are determined within this period. I heard an address on "Little Things" when only a boy, in which the speaker said ants had a regular system of warfare, a regular retinue of servants and even milk cows. I was astounded, and from that day to this these little people have had an undying interest for me. Carlyle could rewrite the history of the French revolution when destroyed, but helplessly lamented his inability to make the acquaintance of the tiny neighbors that daily crossed his path. To him that hath shall be given, is as universal as the law of gravitation. What we get out of the world depends upon what we bring to the world. Men went to the Chicago fair and saw nothing but Buffalo Bill, or to the St. Louis fair and saw nothing but the Boer war or the Filipinos. Not only is the scope of our future soul movements determined thus early, but the speed of our acquirement as well. He that has but little to build to, will build but slowly, while all truth hurries to the heart that knows. Hence Goethe's warning: "Be careful what you pray for in youth, lest you get too much of it in old age." This brings a solemn warning to the youth that takes a wrong attitude toward religion, for but few change that attitude after leaving college walls. Hence the soul whose limitations are freed on every side but bound on this has but little chance to the highest in after years. When Marconi sent his first wireless message to a ship in mid-ocean only that one which was atuned to the home office of all that were sailing on the deep, caught the flying sentences. Only the sailors on life's tempestuous sea who are in tune with the infinite can catch the flying messages of truth and love that are rushing in upon us all from far away shores, from abysmal deeps, from transcendent heights. He who leaves college without meeting God will likely forever remain a stranger to the sweetest followships known to man.

The ideal soul, on the contrary, will be careful to describe the circle of youth so as to include in its sweep everything vital to the human heart, and then liberated, expanded, draw to-morrow's horizon outside to-day's, next week's outside this week's, next month's outside this month's, next year's outside this year's, the next life's outside this life's.

Yet again, education can be regarded in the words of President Butler as the bringing of the soul into its complete inheritance. The real heritage left us by our fathers is not primarily in material wealth, but in the things of the mind no outer titles can secure. Their joys and sorrows, their hopes and fears, their faith and doubt, their aspirations and disappointments, their thoughts, their efforts, their heart passions, are crystallized in the literature of every generation. Their successive efforts to classify and explain the phenomena of the universe lie in the various fields of science and philosophy. The results of their struggles to achieve themselves in association with each other have come down to us in the institutions of society; their revelings in the picturesque, the sublime, and the beautiful are preserved for us in the field of aesthetics. Deepest of all in the struggles of the race has been the religious instinct. It has ever laid its hand relentlessly upon the best that men had and written much of its history in human blood. Through the ages it has been searching for three things: a higher power upon whom it could depend, a higher personality with whom it could commune, an adequate outlook for its undying yearnings after immortality. This search was perfectly voiced in the cry of Philip, "Show us the Father and it sufficeth us," and perfectly answered in the reply of Jesus, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father," which men in all ages since have verified and approved with a universal "amen." In a word, the heritage of the past is the total experience of the race, deepest, most universal, most abiding of all, the religious experience. Huxley bids us think of life as a game of chess, only we cannot see the one who is playing on the other side. How men and nations have played and won, played and lost, what moves we cannot make, as well as what we can—to know this is at once to deepen the shallow, strengthen the weak, and broaden the narrow life of the individual.

Not only the experience of the past, but the race consciousness of the present is among our highest possessions. Each individual is an element in the social mind, in the solidarity of the race, and can play his part only by vital touch with the whole. Whether we consider the experience of the past or the present, the one all-important element in our inheritance, the one which none dare overlook or disregard, is the spiritual. Poor beyond expression is the child that gets all else and misses this. We are brought, therefore, again to appreciate the course of Moses in making God basal in all education and government.

ANSWER TO PRAYER.

By Wm. T. Beall.

In reading Mr. W. C. Wells' article in the Advocate of the 29th of July, I was forcibly reminded of three circumstances in my life which demonstrated the efficacy of prayer. In July, 1868, my wife was in bed in a room upstairs, with our baby-boy, Samuel, and I in the room downstairs immediately under her, with what was then termed swamp-fever, and not expected to recover. There was a lady in the neighborhood, visiting some friends. Though a stranger to us, she came over to see us; was invited upstairs to my wife's room, and told her that she had heard that her husband was very ill and could not live, and she had gone to her closet and put the case before the Lord, and had come over to tell her that her husband would not die. And I did recover. The lady left the neighborhood without my seeing her, which I regretted very much.

In 1876 or '77 I was again very ill with the same disease, when my friends all doubted my recovery. Uncle Tommie Wells, of sacred memory, the father of Mr. W. C. Wells, came into my room with great concern written on his countenance, and said: "Doctor, has the Lord made any revelation to you as to the result of your illness? We feel that we cannot spare you." I replied: "He has not; I am awaiting his will."

The Presbyterian pastor of Bethesda, a church not far from my home, where myself and family worshiped for a number of years, heard of my illness, and rode fourteen miles to tell me and my friends that I would recover, he having petitioned the throne of grace in my behalf.

I had consecrated my baby boy, Samuel to the Lord, but was not able to educate him, having seven daughters to school. But I did not take him off the altar, making it a subject of prayer until, when he was 18 years old, one of God's messengers, in the person of Brother Peter James, well known in Southern Methodism, came and told me to send him to Centenary College, and he would educate him. He gave up a lucrative clerkship, went to Centenary, graduated, chose the ministry as his calling, and is now district evangelist in San Antonio District, Texas.

Thanks be to God for condescending to regard our prayers.

II.

While I was away on that extended trip, which I wrote of in a recent issue of the Advocate, three of the children took advantage of my absence to have the smallpox, which experience contributed what it could to the reduction of that wealth of good looks that had descended to them from their immediate paternal ancestry.

When I had again made the acquaintance of my family I went to Baton Rouge, at the request of Brother J. M. Henry, to preach for him while absent at the meeting of the Board of Church Extension. I preached at his church at 11 a.m., Sunday, and for Sheppard at night. Here I was again in the limits of things and persons once known. My earliest recollections are of things and people at Baton Rouge. Brother Henry is in fine favor with his people, and the work is extending. A well-organized Sunday school here, under the leadership of Brother Will Holmes, is one of the most hopeful indications of the life of the church now, and the prophecy of its future force.

While at Baton Rouge I was entertained by Sister Henry and the baby, and on Sunday had the pleasure of dining with Sister S. B. Jones and her family.

The Crowley District Conference was next visited by me. It met at Jennings, and was looked after by Battle, another of my boys. There we had a good time together; heard some good preaching. I could not remain to hear all, but had to go. Denson was there, and has the things of the district well in hand. All of the interests of the church were reviewed. Some very encouraging notes were sounded, especially the great tidings of the success of the work among the French-speaking population and the response with which the presentation of the work met, the Conference pledging somewhere about $300 for the work. This work ought to receive our help. You all know—you preachers—that Breithaupt went there as a volunteer, with nothing but the promise of the Board to stand back of him; that three members of the Board gave their note for $300 to start him in the work, and that he looks to the extra efforts which the Board is to make through its officers, and response of our people to this extra call for his maintenance. Surely, we ought to respond. I attended every district conference in the state this year, and I am glad to say that all responded with collections running from $60 up to $300 except one, which refused to respond to the call at all.

From Jennings I went to Jena, the seat of the session of Alexandria District Conference. Found the conference in session when I got there, and one of the new elders presiding—Brother Brown, I think, presided to the satisfaction of all. There is no occasion for uneasiness about the new elder. You know, it is a common human infirmity to think that a great deal depends upon the tried; hence in some quarters you find men in the eldership so long that the memory of man runneth not to the when of their beginning. The conditions existing in those conferences are eloquent, but there seems to be no ears to hear! I don't believe there was ever a better condition in the Conference than now. The Conference is in better form, the brethren are in better mood; they have the work in hand better than I have known.

Then on to Slaughter to the Baton Rouge District Conference, where the other new elder was at the steering gear and everything under control. Here we had far from a dry time. In fact, "the excessive humidity of the atmosphere resulted in such copious aquatic precipitation" that many of the brethren were hindered from attending. Here I was prevented from staying more than a day, but Brother Miller gave me an opportunity to present the great work committed to me. Had time permitted, I might not only have talked education, but have had a chance to preach also, as I had to the brethren at Jena; but I was like the brook; I had to "go on." So I went to Dodson to preach the commencement sermon to the High School there; though in so doing I had to miss Dr. F. N. Parker at Centenary the same day. I certainly appreciated that invitation, and would have foregone a good deal to have had that opportunity, for I had been four years in that district and had preached a good many times to those people. While there I was entertained by those faithful laymen, Brothers Stovall and Pyburn. I had a great congregation, and attempted the deliverance of a great message. I trust God blessed the effort for the spread of the kingdom. By a forced march, I was present in Shreveport Monday morning for the commencement exercises of Centenary College, and heard the splendid address to the Alumni by Judge Murff—"Jack," as his old schoolmates affectionately call him. Here was closed the first session of the school in its new quarters, and a most encouraging session it was. The Board of Trustees was pleased at the report made by President Weber. Next session we will increase our capacity for boarders by forty; instead of four, we will have seven instructors.

Owing to important business of the Board of Trustees at a distant point, I was hindered from being present at the commencement at Mansfield, the first absence on my part since 1902. Good reports, however, have come to me of the exercises there. Prof. Harrell enters on the work there this summer. He is a schoolman of experience, and I confidently look for growth there.

On my way to the Preachers' Institute at Nashville I stopped over in New Orleans, and, as Brother Holmes was sick, I agreed to preach to his people. I believe that was my first at this place, if my memory serves me right. There was at least one who enjoyed the service.

NEXT SESSION OPENS SEPT. 15.

Fourteen Good Reasons for Patronizing Grenada College

First—The unexcelled Home Comforts, unequaled anywhere else in the State.

Second—The Health Conditions; we rarely require the service of a physician.

Third—Our unusually skilled corps of teachers, whom we were able to secure only by paying a salary much above that paid by other girls' schools of the State.

Fourth—The Fine Arts Department, unequaled in the State and unexcelled in the South. Our teacher of Art studied in Germany and France, and our teachers of Music are graduated from the best Conservatories of America.

Fifth—See Descriptive Course of Study, which is conscientiously carried out as indicated.

Sixth—The Lyceum Course, which is superior even to that sustained in the University of Mississippi.

Seventh—The Library, which is fuller and better adapted than that of most girls' schools of the South.

Eighth—Strong Christian Influence dominating all instruction.

Ninth—Personal attention to the individual pupil, with a view to develop the best even out of peculiarities of character.

Tenth—A superior Student Body as Associates, since most of the indifferent have been eliminated.

Eleventh—The Rates are lower than those of any other school doing the same grade of work owing to the Conference Assessment, which gives us an income not possessed by other schools; further, we have no stockholders to whom we are forced to pay dividends, as are some private schools. Our patrons receive back in excellence of service more than they pay in.

Twelfth—We place but two girls in a room, while most schools put from two to six.

Thirteenth—We require our teachers to continue study. Two are in Europe, two in Chicago, others at other schools in the North and East.

Fourteenth—All these superior features enable us to turn out a larger percentage of graduates, who take high stand in the educational world, than any other school in the State. It means something to hold a diploma of the Grenada College.

The next place I visited on my return to the State was Haynesville, where the Ruston District Conference held its session. I was there only one day, and greatly enjoyed the renewal of old associations. I was in the midst of a lot of friends and brethren whom I hold dear, not only for the work's sake, but for the bond of friendship that reaches far back into the past. The elder gave me the opportunity to preach at 11 o'clock that day, and how I enjoyed preaching to those brethren, some of whom were my faithful fellow-laborers the years I was their associate on the old Arcadia District! The elder is in favor with the people, and as to the preachers, nine, at least, I now recall that have served with me, all or part of my time there; and of them and their work in those parts, as to its fidelity and unselfishness I heartily bear witness.

While there I shared the hospitality of Brother and Sister Tom Taylor and Brother and Sister Baucum. The Conference showed a fine spirit and closed with a beneficial service. I only had an opportunity to hear one sermon, but heard good things concerning the others.

Then, after a stop at Homer with Coleman Friday night, I was off again to Monroe to preach for Brother Wynn. The memory of the heat of that Fourth of July will abide. Also the exhibition of patient endurance given by that congregation. Wynn has had an arduous task there, but he is meeting the demands, and his people are responding to his efforts. There are great possibilities for Methodism in that beautiful city on the banks of the Ouachita, and Bob is able to bring his people to a realization of them.

Tuesday morning we started to Mer Rouge for District Conference. Found Dr. Keener and his wife and several of the preachers on the train. When we arrived we were met at the train by Brother Skipper and some of the brethren, who assigned us all to pleasant homes, "and led the way." There was a good attendance of the preachers, but a small attendance of the laymen. That District Conference "took me away back" to the first District Conference of which I was ever a member, for Dr. Keener was in the chair then; he was the first elder under whom I served, and so, though never before in the district, I felt "at home" under the shadow of the great elder. The reports heard by me were cheering, and they showed a great deal of faithful and hard work upon the part of those men. Here I was entertained by one of my kinsmen, Allyn Carter, in whose pleasant home, out of town a little distance, I should have liked to spend a few days, but, being away from home so long, I turned my face homeward again.

When I got home I found two of the children making preparation to visit friends in Ruston. Happy children! I told them I would put them on the train the next morning; so I took Howard and Sam down and gave them into the charge of Cousin "Bob" Chapman, that genial gentleman, whom everybody that has ever traveled much on the V., S. & P. knows, and returned to the house. It certainly is a peculiar sensation when all of my children are gone. The other two, Charles and Ruth, had gone the week before, and wife and I were back where we started more than fourteen years ago. Those days were just like the days when a boy goes to see his sweetheart every day, with two trips on Sunday. So I had a good time courting, not because I had to do my work over again, but because I liked to, and my wife does also. Too soon the time for the Shreveprt District Conference comes, and I go, too, leaving my wife to think it out for herself, with us all gone. Fancy, if you wish, the record of the interim of perfect silence! Correspond with her.

When I got to Logansport I found the Conference about over, except the election of delegates to Annual Conference, the choice of place for holding the next session and the report of the Committee on Resolutions. The action of a District Conference over which Warlick presides reminds me forcibly of a record of activity mentioned in an old Book. Some of the phases of this activity have been before the readers in a contribution by Brother Lowrey. The brethren there are all at their posts, and there are hopeful signs all along the line. Warlick has more young preachers in his district than any other in the Conference. The various interests of the church had consideration in the speeches made from time to time on the report of the Committee on Resolutions. Brother Joyner spoke for Missions; Brother Dodson for Mansfield and its pressing interests; Brother Lowrey for the Sunday schools and Leagues. I had the pleasure of preaching and speaking on the educational interests. Brother Weber made an admirable address on education, which was highly appreciated by the people who heard him. The closing sermon was preached by Brother Harp.

While in Logansport, with Brother J. M. Brown, I shared the cheerful hospitality of Brother Carraway and wife. This closed the round of District Conferences, and I think the preachers can, for the most part, at roll call, say "we have had a good year, Bishop." This ought to be one of the banner years of Methodism in Louisiana. My observation tells me the people called Methodists do better when times are hard. Having less of this world's goods to need their care and thought, they give more to God and his cause. So far, I have not gone to many places, but I have been greatly encouraged by the show of interest on the part of our people in the great cause of Christian Education. The only needs, we can supply; and there is a growing determination on the part of our people to meet these demands and to put our work upon such a basis as will enable us to do what we must do in order to meet the demands in this direction.

Let every preacher put us in touch with every boy and girl that he thinks can be got for Mansfield and Centenary, and we will do our utmost to bring them in touch with it. Use your catalogue to inform yourself as to cost, and be ready to answer that question, for that frequently settles the question. The outlook for us is encouraging.

"THE EVERY MEMBER CAMPAIGN."

By Rev. M. M. Black,
Secretary Board of Missions, Mississippi Conference.

The call to aid in the blessed work of evangelizing the world comes to the whole church, and to every man in the church. Freely we have received; freely must we give. The mighty enterprise of winning the world to Christ is just what the church needs to save her from the blight of selfishness and sloth, to develop her in faith and love, and to call forth her best energies.

While all of us cannot go to the foreign field, all can give something to aid in spreading the gospel. Sad to tell, however, according to the best statistics, upwards of 60 per cent of the members of the evangelical churches of North America give nothing to missions, the chief business of the church. Who, after all, is to be authority on the church's obligation to mission work—the Bible, or the yellow journal; Christ, or godless newspaper reporters and mammon-worshiping business men?

The stirring watchword of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, as well as of the Student Volunteer Movement, is: "The evangelization of the world in this generation." According to the most reasonable estimate, Christian America is responsible for 500,000,000 of the unevangelized peoples of heathen lands, 40,000,000 of this vast host being allotted to Southern Methodism. In order to evangelize these millions who must look to us for the gospel, and for whose spiritual destiny we as a church are responsible, 1,600 missionaries will be required, and an annual outlay of $3,000,000. Our Methodist laymen at the Chattanooga Conference last year declared that "in view of our wealth and equipment, together with the urgency and readiness of obligation, it is neither an unreasonable nor an impracticable task," and they resolved to make one million dollars for missions the goal for the present year, this being an increase of a little more than 30 per cent over last year.

At the recent meeting of our General Board of Missions it was resolved to aim at an average of $2 per member, and also a contribution from every member, the $3,000,000 required being about four times what we are now contributing. The average of $2 per member, which is the standard we must strive to reach, represents about two postage stamps per week for every member, and surely is not an impossible goal. The total contribution to missions last year by our great church was 48 cents per member. Unfortunately, however, only about one-third of our members do the giving, the other two-thirds being non-contributors. Including the amounts raised by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, the Mississippi Conference last year contributed 41 cents per member to misions.

The Southern Presbyterians have resolved to raise four dollars per member, in order to evangelize the millions assigned to them, and are moving vigorously toward the mark. Says the July "Go Forward:" "Their net gain last year for missions was $87,277. Their gain was an average of over thirty-two cents each for their 268,733 communicants. This brings their average to $1.53 per member. At the same rate our Church would roll up $2,708,100."

All the evangelical churches of Christendom are taking an active and enthusiastic interest in the forward movement for misions, and are making plans for larger giving, from $4 to $6 per member being the aim of most of them. As our Missionary Secretaries well say: "The question is not now who shall head the procesion, but who will be able to keep up with it." "The time has come," they declare, "for a great advance in missions. This conviction is deepening throughout the Church. It has been voiced by the Board of Missions, and constitutes a challenge upon the part of our laymen. We are not making the progress we should, and yet the demand for an advance in every field is the greatest in our history. What we need is a thorough and uniform method for reaching all our people. We must have a contribution from every member. If a direct and persistent effort is made to secure this, it will put us in the front rank of missionary churches."

In this last statement our Missionariy Secretaries have struck the key-note of success. The pastors and lay leaders throughout the Church must unite in enlightening the conscience of every individual member in regard to missions, and in securing the hearty co-operaton of all in the great advance movement. Unless this is done diligently, systematically and prayerfully, the results are sure to be sadly disappointing, and our contributions to missions instead of showing a decided increase, will remain at about the same figure. Spasmodic effort will not do the work. Our General Secretaries at Nashville are ready and anxious to furnish every pastor and lay leader with stirring leaflets and cards giving full information regarding the needs of the hour, and the best methods to be used in the campaign. The splendid leaflet by C. A. Sanford, "My Personal Financial Obligation to God," ought to be put into the hands of every layman at once.

Above all, let us not fail to unite in prayer for the divine blessing to rest upon the whole Church and upon every pastoral charge in this great missionary campaign. It is an inspiring fact that the Laymen's Missionary Movement was born in a prayer meeting. "The Churches at home need a new baptism of power. Only thus can they become 'the light of the world.'" Unless the call for concerted prayer is earnestly and generally heeded, we will be like the Israelites who listened to the report of the ten spies, and defeat will be sure to overtake us,

"WHAT ABOUT MATTHIAS?"

By Rev. D. M. Geddie.

To a near-sighted man it might appear that Dr. Featherstun in demolishing my house of glass, knocked out some of the valuable windows of his own stone-built mansion with his thunderbolts of denial. He says that to suggest that Peter was presumptious "is evidently an unwarranted assumption." If that means anything it means that Peter could not have been presumptious. In that case, he was infallible. Will he please tell us when, where and how he became infallible and how long he remained so? The New Testament shows that before this and after this, Peter acted presumptiously. If Dr. Featherstun questions it, I will prove it, giving the instances. Now if he was presumptious before and after the election of Matthias, could he not have been at the time of the election? If the silence of the record proves nothing for me, it certainly proves nothing for him. I did not accuse Peter of being presumptious in the election of Matthias, and I will not do it. At worst it was only a case of misguided zeal for the Lord's kingdom. But I can come as near proving that he was presumptious as Dr. Featherstun can of proving that he was not. So, when he proves that he was not, I will prove that he was.

If Peter was divinely inspired to select Judas' successor, as Dr. Featherstun says, it is somewhat strange that the choice was submitted to the vote of all the disciples present. That is not the way that Christ selected the others, and it is not the way that he calls men to the ministry to-day. His submitting the matter to the uncertainty of an election is proof that Peter was not absolutely sure who was to take Judas' place; if Christ had wanted Matthias, it would have been more in keeping with his methods to have appointed him. He had abundant time during the forty days between his resurrection and ascension. Never before or since was a matter of so great spiritual moment turned over to the church and made to depend on its uncertain choice between two or more men.

But Peter and Luke, both, he tells us, say Matthias was an apostle. Where do they say it? Will he please give us chapter and verse? All that Peter says, so far as the record goes, was said before and during the election. He does not say that God accepted Matthias in Judas' place as Dr. Featherstun says he does. And Luke only says that he was numbered with the eleven apostles. He might have intended to say that the Lord numbered him with the eleven apostles, but, if so, he failed to do it. (Doctor, you think in my case, silence proves nothing; and I suppose you are willing to take the medicine you give. So, it would seem that you have made an assumption, too.)

Dr. Featherstun says that I argued that Matthias had never been called to the ministry. That is a mistake. I did not say one word about Matthias being called to the ministry. I argued that the church had no right to call men to the ministry, and that if she had no right to call men to the ministry she had no right to call men to the apostleship. I think it is very probable that Matthias was a minister, but he, Barsabus, nor any other minister of the early church was called and commissioned by a church election in which there were two or more candidates for the same office. St. Paul informs us that when the Lord ascended on high "he gave some apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers," but does not give us one word about the church calling men to the ministry by casting lots between two or more candidates first nominated from a multitude of others who, perchance, might be as eligible as they.

In speaking of my position that there was no general conference, Dr. Featherstun says: "Brother Geddie's assumption is utterly baseless." He then informs us that St. Luke says there was a general conference. St. Luke may have said it in some apocryphal book, but he certainly does not say it in the book of Acts contained in the New Testament. But Luke tells us that there were present "about one hundred and twenty," and that means that it was a general conference. One hundred and twenty disciples gathered into one company constitutes a general conference clothed with authority to do what it pleases, even to the election of apostles, and all it does is sealed with divine sanction and binding force! That is something new under the sun. But Dr. Featherstun knows.

But "Peter," he says, "certainly believed that this conference had authority to elect a successor to Judas, and Peter was the inspired head of the church just then."

Where did Dr. Featherstun get that? The record says nothing about Peter being "the inspired head of the church just then." The record would rather lead us to believe that Peter, like the rest of the disciples, in obedience to Christ's instruction, was waiting for inspiration. The Spirit which was to guide them into all truth, and bring to their remembrance all things whatsoever the Lord had spoken, had not yet been given. It does not stand to reason, or the Word of God, that Christ should prohibit Peter from preaching because he lacked the spiritual qualifications and at the same time give him the inspiration of the Holy Ghost to make him the infallible head of the church in selecting by vote of the church a man to take the place of Judas. If the election had taken place after the Pentecost the aspects of the case would have been quite different. But even then, in the absence of inspired declaration to that effect, there would have been room to doubt its divine authorization.

But Dr. Featherstun's statements are to the effect that the church has divine prerogatives to do whatever it pleases. Whatsoever it shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever it shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. But evidently Christ intended that such utterances of his should have some restrictions and limitations in application and use. Otherwise, Roman Catholicism would be right and Protestantism would be wrong. When he told Peter that he would give unto him the keys of the kingdom of heaven and that whatsoever he should bind or loose on earth should be bound or loosed in heaven, he only meant that Peter should declare the conditions of salvation to men and that those who accepted these conditions should be pronounced forgiven and that those who rejected them should be pronounced unforgiven. Peter was endowed with no divine power to withhold salvation from any one who complied with the conditions or to grant salvation to any one who rejected these conditions.

Nor was he empowered to call men into the Christian ministry by his own personal choice or through the election of the church. Nor did he have power to prohibit any one from preaching who had been called. If Dr. Featherstun will not accept some such construction of Christ's teaching, then I will be compelled to class him with Roman Catholics, and not with Methodists. His intimation that the apostolic office in the early church and that of Bishop in our church is the same or analogous, is so far afield that it needs no reply at all.

Dr. Featherstun says that the thought of there being thirteen apostles is revolting to me. How did he learn that? I certainly did not say it. If I ever had such a thought I have not the faintest recollection of it. No, doctor, if the Lord had called a million men to the apostleship it would not have been revolting to me. That is a narrowness and littleness of which I have never been guilty, and I hope I never shall. If you were to have your congregation (you have a hundred and twenty, I suppose, and that makes a general conference) to elect you or any one else to the apostleship, giving us the fifteenth apostle, and show your divinely inspired authority for it, I would not contend with you one minute about it. I only gave my view of the question, assigning some of my reasons in reply to Brother Williams, who took me to task for what I had previously written.

Dr. Featherstun says that my view is no new one. I did not give it as such. I thought I was sitting at the feet of wise and scholarly men and reiterating their matured convictions. I was so sure of that that I did not offer or even think of offering any argument in support of it on the start. But the strange thing is that Dr. Featherstun has been so long familiar with this "mere dream," and yet the best argument and proof he can produce against it is his assertion that it is a "mere dream."

Dr. Featherstun says: "I am not sure that he ought to have been elected. It is not my province to defend his election." Why then, Doctor, do you defend it? What was your motive in stepping into Brother Williams' shoes and replying to me? If you entertain doubts about the rightness of his election, and think that it might possibly have been a gambling machine that put Matthias into the apostolic office, why do you argue that it was the church acting in corporate capacity, and that, therefore, it received divine sanction? What good did you hope to do the church yourself or me in writing as you did? I would very much prefer the view that Matthias was an apostle duly and divinely chosen and ordained through the vote of the church than in any way to impeach the motives of the disciples. Whether wise or unwise, right or wrong, they were all reverential and devout, and acted in this matter with a sincere desire to glorify God, and to extend his kingdom. Nowhere do we learn that the election was divinely sanctioned.

DIET IN OLD AGE.

Dr. Henry Campbell, physician to the West End Hospital for Nervous Diseases, London, said, in a clinical lecture on the diet of the aged, reported in the Medical Press and Circular (1908), that the older a person is the more he should conform to the ideal diet. And the ideal diet is thus described in the same connection:

"The ideal diet should consist of bread, ordinary dairy produce, any kind of animal produce provided it is simply cooked; a little salt and a little mustard and tea and coffee, but no condiments and no alcohol."

In illustration of the point, Dr. Campbell cites the case of a gentleman 66 years of age who came to him, complaining of nosebleed, flushing of the head and giddiness, a high tension pulse, and several other troublesome symptoms. By cutting down the amount of food he was taking, chiefly the starches and sugars, to one-quarter, and stopping his alcohol, all of the symptoms disappeared. —Exchange.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

By Mrs. J. L. Neill.

Societies in small towns haven't the field in which to work that societies in larger cities have, is the wall behind which some people try to make themselves believe they can hide the negligence of their society, but the following report shows that the members of the W. H. M. S. of Collins are not in that class:

"Our society meets once a month in a business meeting, and once a month in a social meeting, at which we carry on the Reading Course and serve refreshments. At the July meeting six new members were added, making a total of twenty-six; one hundred and thirteen visits had been made to the sick and strangers; $1 and two garments given to the needy, and $5 collected for the Orphans' Home. There are five tithers in this society, a baby roll of eight members and seven subscribers to Our Homes."

The Twenty-fifth Avenue, Gulfport, W. H. M. S., is doing some good work. Their correspondent says that their society moves harmoniously. All of our societies should move this way. We are doing the Lord's work, and it is not his will that there should be contention in his work. The following report shows that this society is not only doing local work, but they are doing the connectional work also:

"Number of members on roll, 53; raised last quarter for membership dues, $17.90; Conference expense fund sent Conference treasurer, $10.60; total, $28.50. Local Work—Expended for assistance of needy, $1; for parsonage, $37.20; for furnishing church, $22.77; total, $60.97. Last spring the society had a bazar, selling handiwork and a number of useful articles, realizing $80."

Word comes from the Newton District that another society has been added to our ranks. We give the Philadelphia Auxiliary a hearty welcome, and feel sure that the enthusiasm received from the splendid secretary of that district will give them encouragement whenever needed.

We welcome another society also. This time our pleasure is two-fold, because the society is an organization of young people, a Florine McEachern Brigade, at Lumberton. The secretary writes encouragingly of this brigade.

Various ways have been tried in raising money for organizations, but one which succeeded admirably and must have created much merriment was used by the auxiliary of Main Street, Laurel. Each lady was told to make money any way she could, by sewing, baking, selling vegetables or any other way she wished to try; then tell in rhyme how she made it. The rhymes were brought in with the contributions, and proved to be very interesting.

Very gratifying and encouraging reports come from the Sailors' Rest at Gulfport, under the supervision of Rev. W. T. Griffin. Brother Griffin seems to be the very man for the place. The report for the quarter ending June, 1909, shows some of the work being done by him: Have had 3982 visits to reading rooms; held 29 gospel services, with 743 present;; 18 concerts, with 615 present; distributed 111 packages, magazines and other periodicals to outgoing vessels; over 1000 tracts and booklets; 75 Bibles and Testaments and portions, these in different languages. Have 22 weekly and semi-weekly papers in different languages coming to the reading rooms. Flowers are kept in the rooms and furnished to ships with ladies on board; 229 visits to ships have been made; positions found for 12 sailors on land; helped 13 stranded sailors and 5 sick ones; furnished pay beds for 206, free to 52 stranded sailors seeking employment. Many of these are young men of good parentage and members of some church, and sing in all our services, and many promise to lead Christian lives. This is sowing beside all waters.

NOTES FROM MAIN STREET, HATTIESBURG, AUXILIARY.

By Miss Minnie Buntyn.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Main Street Church, Hattiesburg, has had some good meetings, three of which were of especial interest. The first was a porch party, held at the handsome home of Mrs. S. L. Heidelberg. The porch was beautifully decorated, and as the guests arrived a good deal of amusement was found looking among the chairs for the cards bearing their names. A splendid musical programme was rendered, after which Mrs. A. F. Watkins gave a report of the proceedings of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, closing with The Call of the Twelve, an account of the testimony of the outgoing missionaries, written in verse.

Second—"The Days of June." The poster for this meeting was a large rose painted on a piece of white cardboard. Underneath was written: "What is so rare as a day in June, the time and place of 'meeting.'" This, the regular June meeting, was held at the parsonage. The programme was taken from the "Days of June," and a few chapters were read by different members. The reading was interspersed with music, which made a charming programme.

Third—A Shower to Miss Hallie Buie. The best part of this meeting was that Miss Hallie was with us, and the shower was a complete surprise to her. The hospitable home of Mrs. Morgan Stevans was never more attractive than on this occasion. A reception committee received the guests, who were then conducted to the dining-room, where they were served with delicious refreshments. A number of musical selections were rendered, and "Toksunie," the story of a Korean girl's life, was given by a little girl in Korean costume. Miss Buie made a most interesting talk, at the close of which a little girl entered, saying that some boys had brought a trunk, which they said was for Miss Bule. She was instructed to have it brought in, and two boys from the Juvenile Missionary Society brought in a steamer trunk and placed it before Miss Buie. The key was presented by a little girl, and when the trunk was opened it was found to contain many daintily-wrapped packages, the undoing of which made Miss Bule feel, as she said, "that Santa Claus had come in the middle of June." These gifts are but feeble expressions of the love and interest which we feel for this dear girl, who will so soon go out to represent us in the Land of the Morning Calm.

What a glorious opportunity the women of the Mississippi Conference have to take some part in this wonderful work for Christ in Korea! Through our support of Miss Bule, through our prayers for her and for her work, we may become actual factors in bringing this waiting, eager nation to Christ.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Morning—Eventide.

No phase of our missionary work should interest us more than that which comes under the caption of this article. It comprehends the beginning, the ending of our workers' lives with all that comes between.

God calls choice young women to special service, many to the foreign field. For a time these went out almost untried as to physical strength or adaptability to the work, entailing loss of time and other disadvantages.

The need for preparation was evident and in response to tireless labor of some, princely giving of others with contributions rivaling "the widow's mite" from many, the Scarritt Bible and Training School was given to our Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. This institution in charge of a principal and faculty well worthy of the cause it represented, was soon fulfilling its mission, meeting the long-felt need. Furnishing convincing or conclusive tests of body, mind and spirit while fitting for all branches of Christian work.

In due time scholarships began to be taken by Conferences for the benefit of their daughters. By using a scholarship much expense was saved the young woman preparing for the Master's work. After a time, through increased prices of requisites for living, interest on $2500, the cost of a scholarship, was found insufficient, and the amount was raised to $3000, or an extra $30 must be charged per year to cover actual expenses. Friends, has it ever occurred to you that our girls should have provided for them something above what is barely necessary? They have not asked it, yet by even small tokens in cash they may be helped over trying places.

God's call to go, is a call to get ready to go. We as a W. F. M. S., repeat the call by promised assistance. We are committed to our girls, we are pledged to support the training school as an institution of the church, a feature of our work.

Are all the Conferences keeping that promise? Are we? Let it never be said that the North Mississippi Conference proved recreant to a duty. Two years ago we adopted a resolution designating one day in the year for training school day, directing all collections on that day to that specific object. Have we observed it? If we had, though perhaps not large, the receipts would have been sufficient to meet our extra $30 each year besides furnishing a small balance to be used as a nucleus toward raising our scholarship to $3000.

With the lessons of the past before us, let us learn a better way and act upon it by beginning to pay what we should to the training school fund.

With pleasure and gratitude we watch the busy lives of our Conference daughters who have exchanged school life for the wider sphere beyond the seas. Bouyant with hope, every fiber of their being vibrant with joyous young life they went forth to find untried duties, to face unknown scenes, that they may fulfill the vows made as to God they heartily answered, "Here am I, send me."

The morning and the evening lie so close together in times swift passage, that we scarcely note the fleeting years till we must face a new condition. Must take into consideration a new element of Christian work. A grave here, and there in those far-away lands marks the closing of lives in the midst of loving service. A few, worn and weary, have sought the homeland with a hope of retaining vigor for more extended work abroad. Others have toiled, gladly, 'tis true, mid heat and cold, meeting all the requirements of a strenuous life that the Christ may be manifest to the world. Sometimes nature demands the penalty, and it remains with the Woman's Board to say to these, "come home and rest." With the fire still burning, zeal unabated, how sadly these faithful ones yield their beloved work to younger hands. Years of service have made it a part of their life.

The Board proposes to care for them by creating a retirement fund. Not by a tax upon any, not by public collection, but granting each member adult, young people and juvenile an interest in this fund, requesting the payment by each of five cents a year. This caring for the faithful representatives of ourselves in foreign fields, is a sacred trust and should be met with loving gratitude. Need one ask, "Why have they laid by nothing?" Their eyes behold the crying needs, they realize the heart-hunger all around and their meager purses responding all too freely, have emptied themselves to provide for the body and souls of others. It may be that only the recording angel witnessed, yet in the Book of Life he has written.

Friends, sisters, these are the Master's crown jewels, and to our keeping he gives them till that day when he shall claim his own.

Please mark this request. In making payment to either of these objects be careful to state plainly what each is for, that our conference treasurer may give due credit and may make a proper entry upon her books. Yours for service,

MRS. J. F. EVANS.

TWO YEARS.

"I have two years," said a young woman from the training school to the head of a deaconess institution, "two years of my very own. Then I expect to be married to a young man who is taking his course in a medical university. Could I do anything for your work in these two years.

"Come and see," said the older woman.

She was a young woman of character, consecration, and culture. She went to work in an institutional church that was taking up some new methods. The young woman had had advantages in the direction of physical culture. If it had been domestic science, kindergarten, or any other practical line, it would have been just as well. But this was her gift, and it was consecrated to God.

She advertised for pupils and formed her classes in the big gymnasium. She taught as if Indian clubs and dumb bell exercises were the whole end and aim of existence, and she won the girls to herself by the charm of her sweet, unselfish personality. Then one group of girls after another demanded a "club," and three or four girl's clubs were organized—social clubs, that met for good times and girlish frolic.

For two years she gave herself untiringly to these girls. Her own room was their constant resort, and she became to them big sister, confidante and friend.

But this is not all, nor half, the story. Because she herself was earnestly and truly a disciple of Christ, and because she loved him supremely, and loved these wild and wayward girls "for Jesus' sake," all her work was of necessity his work. It could not have been otherwise. Consciously or unconsciously she was drawing them nearer to him who was the real inspiration of her life.

"Secular?" Nothing that such a woman would do could be secular, because she herself was God's woman. She had been but a short time in the work when a group of girls came to her and said, "Have you got a Sunday School class? Because if your have we want to come into it." She had no class because she was waiting for just this opportunity. She might have had all of her gymnasium classes in Sunday School if she could have taught so many.

She opened her clubs, and even her gymnasium classes with prayer—why not ask the Holy Spirit to help make their bodies strong and beautiful for his indwelling?

It beacme easy and natural to have little heart talks with the girls about right living. They loved her. How could they help being led the way she herself was going?

One year passed, and the medical student became impatient of delay and urged her to become his wife at once and share with him the responsibilities of his last year at college. Therewas a brief hesitation, but her work had grown very dear, and it seemed but just begun. She and her lover would have their whole lives together; they could wait one year; so she finished her allotted time and then went to her own home in the West.

During those two years she had laid her hand upon the character of at least a hunderd girls in the most impressible time of their lives. Many had become Christians; all had received an impulse toward better living.

As for her, did she ever regret the sacrifice, the care, the heartaches, and the burden bearing? This is her own testimony, five years after:

"I have the best husband, the sweetest baby, and the dearest home that any woman could wish for,—but I never can forget those precious two years in my mission work. Whatever I might have been able to do for the work, I gained far more than I gave. I never cease to thank God for putting it into my heart to spend them in service for him, rather than in fancy work, or visiting, or having a good time for myself."

Are there not others who have two, or three, or five years that are "their very own—which might be given for service to humanity for love of Christ?—Isabolle Horton.

CONVERSION BY SUNSTROKE.

We are assured on the testimony of a reliable witness of the substantial accuracy of the following: A professor in a certain prominent university in a northern state was addressing an audience on the Bible. Among other things he said: "We are able now through our better knowledge of psychology to explain many things in the Bible better than formerly. For instance, take the case of the conversion of Paul. Paul was a city-dweller and was not accustomed to exposure to the heat on the open highway. When he was going down to Damascus, the sun beat strongly upon him and he was not able to endure it. The result was that he experienced sunstroke and fell from his horse to the ground and was for a long time unconscious. Occupied as he was with religious matters, and under the influence of religious passion, he interpreted this to be a miraculous event, an arresting of him by divine power, and so that interpretation became current and was put in the form of the story of the great light that broke upon him and the voice out of heaven speaking to him. Of course we now know that it was a perfectly natural event, nothing more than a sunstroke."

A Scotchman who happened to be present said: "Professor, may I ask you a question?"

"Certainly," replied the professor.

"Did I correctly understand you to say that you think the conversion of Paul was simply the result of a sunstroke?"

"That is my belief," the professor answered.

"Then," said the Scotchman, "I would suggest, if there was so much power in a sunstroke as that, to so change the life of Paul from being a bitter persecutor of Christians into a zealous witness of Christianity, to make him one of the greatest religious teachers in the world and one of the greatest forces in the thought and civilization of mankind, giving him an influence that has not diminished but increased after nearly two thousand years, begging your pardon, my dear professor, would it not be a good thing if you and your class in psychology would go out on some very hot day and expose yourselves to the heat of the sun until you all received a sunstroke? There seems to be a wonderful power in a sunstroke acording to your psychology."

Perhaps no more conclusive reply could have been given to the psychological explanation of Paul's conversion proposed by the learned professor. It illustrates the length of absurdity to which those will go who conceive that modern knowledge rules out all miracles. Paul and the men of his time may not have known quite as much about physiological psychology as the scholars of our day, though psychology had been pretty well developed by Aristotle and Plato several centuries before Paul's time. Of one thing we may be reasonably sure: that Paul himself was not a fool, and though a city-dweller, we may believe that he was familiar with the effect of a sunstroke. His own testimony concerning that happening on the highway should be given a great deal of weight. To him it was a supernatural arrest of his mad purpose and a breaking in of a great light of understanding concerning Christ and his gospel. To him it was convincing and conclusive and shut him up to one choice. Long after he gratefully congratulated himself that he was not "disobedient unto the heavenly vision." It was indeed, in a higher sense than the professor conceived, a sunstroke—a stroke of divine power, the effulgent light from the Sun of Righteousness, a sunstroke of the soul which transformed it. It is doubtful whether modern physiological psychology is able to throw much light on this kind of sunstroke.—The Sunday School Journal and Bible Students' Magazine.

KILLED BY ALCOHOL.

A large work on the condition of medicine and hygiene in Prussia from 1883-1908, published last year, contains an article by Dr. R. Abel, councillor and lecturer in the National Educational Department, in which he says that in Prussia alone 1000 men die of alcoholism every year, and to this he adds: "With how many alcoholism hastens death, how much moral damage and economic loss and what destruction of happiness and of bright promises for the future it causes, no statistics can show. It will long be an important part of the physician's task to labor to diminish and relieve the wounds which alcoholism causes to the health and welfare of the people."

"Power for Service."

This is a book of 270 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

NO MESSAGE FOR A LOST WORLD.

We do not understand how a man with the Bible in hand can assume the office and work of a preacher, except upon the supposition that the world lieth in wickedness (literally in the wicked one), and needs to be saved in the way which only the gospel reveals. It seems to us that one could not escape reaching this conclusion, even if he held the story of the fall to be fiction, instead of fact. Otherwise the death of our Lord was not a sacrifice for sin. Rejecting this primary and foundation truth of the divine Word, everything else vital to the gospel goes with it. Religion is made a delusion, and the hope of heaven vain. Preachers of this class have no message for a lost world.

This matter has recently been thrust upon the attention of the church, and emphasized in a way much out of the ordinary—in a way that cannot be disregarded. The defection of Dr. Briggs, of the Presbyterian Church, a dozen years ago, and Dr. Crapsey, of the Episcopal Church, but recently, was but a ripple on the surface, compared to the lashing of the waters into foam by the action of the New York Presbytery in granting license to preach to three candidates, graduates of a theological seminary, who publicly denied every vital fact of the gospel held and preached by evangelical Christendom.

Dr. Briggs and Dr. Crapsey acted as individuals—they represented nobody but themselves, and their churches soon got rid of them. The New York Presbytery represented the great Presbyterian Church (of the North), supposed heretofore to be stalwart in its orthodoxy. In some quarters the acceptance of these young men as preachers is justly regarded as "a startling attempt to prepare the way for the disintegration of the Presbyterian Church by bringing about a repudiation of essentials, not of Presbyterianism, but of Evangelical Biblical Faith." What these young men denied is thus specifically set forth:

1. The infallibility of the Scriptures as the rule of faith and practice.
2. The Essential Deity of the Lord Jesus Christ, and His consequent headship over the church.
3. The Virgin Birth of our Lord and the miraculous conception.
4. The Vicarious, Expiatory and Propitiatory Atonement of our Lord.
5. The resurrection of the Lord from the grave.
6. The efficacy of the all-prevailing Name of our Lord in Prayer—in fact, all phases of his priestly office—the sacrificial, the reconciling and the intercessory.
7. The fall of man.
8. The Bible doctrine of Sin.
9. Salvation by grace through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as an Atoning Savior.
10. Regeneration by the power of the Holy Ghost.
11. Miracles as the direct manifestation and interposition of the supernatural.

The New York Presbytery, in its representative capacity, set the seal of its approval upon the young men authorized by it to go out, not to preach the gospel, but to deny it, and set it at naught. These candidates were, after the first examination, rejected, but there was a reconsideration, and another examination followed by indorsement and affirmative vote, granting them authority, as Presbyterians, to preach. Upon this the Christian Register, a Unitarian paper, remarks: "The doors of orthodox institutions are pried open a little way, then they are shut with a bang, to be opened again and finally to stay open."

Is the action of the New York Presbytery the shadow of coming events? Let us hope not. Rather let us hope and pray that the work will be undone, or the effort to stampede orthodoxy will be frustrated.

What a pity these young men go out under the seal of a great church with no message for a lost world!

THE POSITION OF METHODISM ON THE LIQUOR QUESTION.

The position of Southern Methodism, we take it, is the position of universal Methodism on the liquor traffic. The matter is dealt with in the Book of Discipline under the title of "Temperance." The question is asked: "What shall be done for the extirpation of the great evil of intemperance?" The directions are explicit:

(1) Personal indulgence in spirituous liquors is forbidden. The direction is founded on the General Rule against "drunkenness or drinking spirituous liquors unless in cases of necessity."

(2) Our members are forbidden to engage in or encourage the traffic. The law says: "Let all our preachers and members abstain from the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, from signing petitions for such sale, from becoming bondsmen for any person as a condition for obtaining a license, from acting as a dispenser or voluntarily accepting an appointment or election as such under the laws of any State in which there is a dispensing law authorizing the sale of intoxicating liquors by the State, county or municipality, and from renting property to be used for such sale."

Those who violate these provisions are to be dealt with as provided for in chapter viii., section v., paragraph 300, page 130, Discipline 1906. This paragraph does not apply to any member who acts under instructions or decrees of any court as trustee, receiver, executor of estates, etc.

It will be observed that the law of the Church does not specifically determine on which side of the prohibition question our members shall stand. It does not say in so many words that they shall be prohibitionists. But it does determine the attitude of the Church. That attitude is not only one of uncompromising opposition to the drinking of spirituous liquors, but to the manufacture and sale of such liquors for the purpose of drink. It stands for the "extirpation of intemperance"—an attitude that would be inconsistent and wholly useless, unless at the same time it stood for the prohibition and extirpation of the traffic. Hence the law forbidding our members to engage in the manufacture or sale of liquor, or to encourage the traffic in any way.

Our sister Methodism of the North holds that "the liquor traffic cannot be legalized without sin." Those are not the words of our Discipline, but they express our position exactly. We all hold that the saloon, whether legalized under high license or low license, is a menace to society—an open door to hell—and it must be that the man who gives encouragement to it in any way is guilty of sin. This is true, whether a man casts a secret ballot in its favor, or by private or public speech advocates any measure that proposes the perpetuation of its life.

AS TO POETRY.

The Southern Christian Advocate recently dedicated a whole page to original poetry—the accumulation of several months. Editorial attention was called to it. We determined at once to read every line, and, turning to the page, we quietly laid us down on a lounge, and when we reached the words:

"Oh, can it be
That our palmetto tree
On rum bottles we see
In the dispensary?
Ah, woe is me!"

we fell asleep. But we rallied and got through, and quoted a familiar verse:

"If I couldn't write better poetry
Than some of whom I wot,
I wouldn't try
And as I can't, I don't."

We can furnish the Southern another page—some of it just to hand, and fresh. The muses have been mightily stirred by the hot weather, or something else, and have vied with each other in turning out the "rimes."

Why will grown people do it? We once knew an old man, whose wife was a verse writer, so wrapped up in the thought that she had the divine gift in all its fullness, that he came well-nigh to want, watching her scribble. Hours and days he would sit by and encourage her, when he should have been out trying to earn bread. All such idlers need a lesson something like that which was given by a wise wife to her preacher-husband, who wasted paper and ink, as well as much time, in trying to write poetry. She wrote a couple of verses herself and laid them on his study-table in his absence. They read thus:

"If all the poems I have written
Were piled up in a pile,
And with a candle they were litten,
You could see the blaze a mile.

But all the gold that I have gitten
For all the poems I have wrote
Wouldn't hurt the feeblest kitten
If poured molten down its throat."

Another dose was not necessary. That one cured him effectually.

PERSONAL.

From Hornbeck, La., Rev. A. J. Bonnett, pastor, comes a list of ten subscriptions, and the money, besides the writer's own renewal. He has our thanks.

Rev. M. L. White, Prentiss, Miss., is rejoicing over "great revivals" in his work. Everything with him "is moving on smoothly." We rejoice with him in his success.

We thank Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, of the French Mission, for a good list of new subscriptions, seven in number, and the promise of "fifteen or twenty more later on."

Rev. W. L. Hightower, Philadelphia, Miss., is having a siege of fever in his family. Rev. T. J. O'Neil asks the prayers of the church in their behalf. Let us not forget them.

Brother Shipman says he didn't say "W. A. Bowlin knows how to best the devil out of a sinner," but "how to beat," etc. The missprint was unintentional, but "best," we think, is the better word.

Rev. A. J. Beasley, a Millsaps student, has been busily engaged during vacation. He has held three meetings. At present he is serving the Nettleton circuit, in place of the pastor, who is away taking a rest.

We learn with regret that Miss Bonnie Evans, daughter of Rev. R. M. Evans, Courtland, Miss., has been ill for the past two months, and is still confined to her bed. We trust a kind providence may soon restore her to health.

Rev. M. R. Jones desires us to say that the East Clark charge embraces the old Middleton charge, and that his post office is De Soto, Miss., instead of Middleton. His correspondents are requested to take notice of this change, and oblige him.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, president of Whitworth College, in a private note to this office, says: "We have prospects for the largest attendance in the history of the college. Our session begins Sept. 9, and Rev. J. A. Moon, of Mt. Olive, will preach our opening sermon Sept. 12."

Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Anderson, Mount Pleasant, Texas, invite us to be present at the marriage of their daughter, Annie Louise, to Mr. Joseph McE. Houston, Monday noon, Sept. 6, 1909. They will be at home, Tallulah, La., after Sept. 15. May the new life be to them one of happiness and prosperity.

Our old friend, M. G. Dubard, whose post office for years was Grenada, Miss., but now is Ben Springs, says: "I have been taking the Advocate ever since I have been keeping house, and it came to my father's long before, and we want it to continue to come to our home as long as we have a home in this old world."

Rev. Ben P. Jaco, presiding elder of the Corinth District, reports great revivals throughout the work, "at which have occurred from 20, 30, 100 conversions, with many additions to the church." He also reports that Rev. J. D. Wroten, who temporarily served the New Albany Station, as "convalescing after weeks of contest with slow fever."

Aug. 20, Rev. R. T. Nolen says: "I have just closed a good meeting at Merritt, on the Pinola charge. I did not have any ministerial help. The Lord was with us in great power. The church was greatly revived; four members added on profession of faith and several family altars erected. The church also planned to build a house of worship."

Brother T. H. Harris tells us of the good work at Harrisville, Miss., of the pastor, Rev. R. T. Nolen, who delivered two good sermons, and of Brother "Wiley" Ferguson, who so mightily attracted the people that no church in the community could hold them. The meeting was gracious from the start, and great good was accomplished. Six new members were added to the church.

There will be a Superintendents' Institute at Meridian, Miss., Sept. 22-24, under the direction of the two Conferences in Mississippi. Dr. and Mrs. H. M. Hamill, Sunday school specialists, and other Sunday school workers, will be present to aid in the work. If you are a Sunday school superintendent, and would like to be a better one, then prepare to attend this meeting, and learn how.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, Zachary, La., Aug. 17: "Sunday last was a gladsome day for Zachary Methodism in that the pulpit was filled by the beloved patriarch, Rev. T. J. Upton. He served this charge for four years and has a very warm place in the hearts of the people. He preached a very clear, practical and inspiring gospel sermon and it was a delight to hear him. May God's richest blessing ever rest upon our honored veterans of the Cross. Amen."

The West Alabamian (Carrollton, Ala.) has the following notice of one of our Louisiana preachers, who is now in his native State: "For the past week services have been held daily, morning and evening, in the Methodist Church, at this place, and much interest is being shown in them. The pastor, Rev. S. N. Burns, is being assisted by the Rev. R. O. Wier, who is no stranger to our people, being a native of Pickens County. Mr. Wier is a fine speaker, and is delivering some convincing sermons."

NOTICE.—MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: There are a few members of the Mississippi Conference who have failed to return to me the blanks sent them some time since by which the Historical Society may make up their biographical records. The brethren interested in this matter will please let me have them at once. Any member who has misplaced the blanks sent him may have another on application to the writer accompanied by one cent postage. The brethren need not feel that any more waiting is necessary, as I did the waiting for us all before I began this work. I hope no brother will make this record incomplete by failing to send his sketch in. H. B. WATKINS.

Hazlehurst, Miss.

REV. J. H. BASS AT BLUE MOUNTAIN.

The Methodists of Blue Mountain, Miss., rejoice greatly that Rev. J. H. Bass, the faithful pastor, has succeeded in beginning and completing this year, and furnishing, a beautiful house of worship in that college town. They say in the Southern Sentinel (Ripley, Miss.):

"Laboring under the greatest discouragements, with almost everything against him except divine assistance, he has since last January by his indomitable pluck and perseverance, his Christlike patience, his unflagging energy, pushed the work until we have a beautiful church with furnishings of the best, and all ready to hold a meeting by the first Sunday in July.

"Every loyal Methodist here, capable of gratitude, feels deeply indebted to Brother J. H. Bass, and we want all interested friends and all carping critics to know that we are not incapable of expressing the appreciation due so faithful a servant of the Lord. To prove our appreciation we are ready to gladly stand by him as long as the 'powers that be' allow him to be our pastor. These are the sentiments of every loyal Methodist at Blue Mountain."

LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The Shreveport District League Conference will be held at Mansfield, La., Sept. 1-3. The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. T. J. Warlick. For further information address Miss Sudie Lingle, secretary, Shreveport, La.

A VACATION AMONG OLD FRIENDS.

By Dr. T. B. Holloman.

Reading in the columns of the Advocate's "Personal Mention" that Brethren of all degrees, from High Steeple to Brushy Creek, were taking their Summer Vacations, the contagion struck in, and I could no longer resist the infection. Seeing that a big camp meeting was going to be held at old Hennington Camp Ground, and having been pastor at that point for three years, I set about preparation to attend the same. Just twenty years has passed since that happy pastorate, and while I had calculated upon some changes, they were more marked than anticipated. Few indeed were the "old heads" to be seen, and many have been the changes among the younger ones. Children upon whom I had laid hands in baptism greeted me, presenting their own little ones for introduction, and, notwithstanding the oft repeated salutation, "why, you haven't changed a bit," "you look just as young as when you left us," I was forced to the conclusion that there must be more silver threads among the gold than they were disposed to see. Twenty years! What changes may come within that brief space, and with added appreciation one recalls the lines of Robert Burns on the "Auld Lang Syne," or that other "John Anderson my Jo, John:" "We clamb the hill thegither, And mony a canty day, John, We had wi' ane anither; Now we maun totter down, John, But hand in hand we'll go, And sleep thegither at the foot, John Anderson my Jo."

The little city of Crystal Springs, near by, gives evidence of added growth and substantial prosperity. New homes, new stores, larger packing sheds, longer switches in the railroad yards, all tell of continued success. The old time skeleton tents have given place to well built cottages, the water pipes have relieved of long walks to the spring under the hill and the electric light has banished the old dirt stand with its pine knot torch. The accommodations for the preachers at the hotel on the grounds is a marked improvement, so far as the comfort is concerned, over the long tent with its cots, and where often a score or more of preachers were put to sleep—and, yet, where sleep was as often impossible.

For weeks John Crisler, the indefatigable, had been working for a good attendance and his labors were being rewarded with congregations like unto those of the long ago—five or six hundred at the popular hours. Elder [illegible] was on hand with his wise counsel, and "Little Jimmie Ellis" (that's what we called him in the Yazoo country) was assisting in the work of accommodation, giving a welcome and a smile to all. Others, like the writer, came and went, but the WORK was being done by Dr. Sawyer, of New Orleans; Rev. W. M. Sullivan, of McComb, who alternated in the pulpit [illegible], and by Rev. C. N. Guice as head master over the choir, and delighting the people with his touching, soul stirring melodies. His voice was a little off because of a recent cold, but I said, "what a move upwards there would be if we all could sing like Guice." Arriving on Monday and leaving on Wednesday, my stay was brief but cyclonic in its nature. Swinging the circle from tent to tent, here a happy greeting, there an impromptu watermelon cutting, at this place a recalling of some joyous event, at that some reminder of friends gone on before, our vacation was short, but no giraffe browsing in the mountains can boast of more genuine pleasure or retain longer in memory the associations of his "summer vacation." Hearty welcome, royal entertainment, fine sermons and sweet singing, all turned loose on one at one time, must, though the time be short, make an impression never to be forgot.

Edwards, Miss.

TO OUR AGENTS AND ABOUT CLUBS.

Every preacher in charge of a church in the bounds of the patronizing Conferences is recognized as an agent of the Advocate. We are willing for any one, on his own responsibility, to raise a club and send it in where it does not conflict with the work of the pastor; but the preacher in charge is our authorized agent.

The rate of the regular subscription has been fixed at $1.50, as you have seen in the many notices we have given. The rate of commission on either new subscribers or renewals, will be 10 per cent of the amount collected. For a subscription at the rate of $1.50 the agent who collects is authorized to retain 15 cents.

The club rate will remain from now until the sessions of the Annual Conferences—$1.25 on clubs of ten or more subscribers. The commission on the clubs will remain unchanged at 25 cents until Conference. These clubs do not have to be sent in all at one time, and the number may be added to indefinitely until your Annual Conference meets. We make no distinction between new and old subscribers in the clubs. The only conditions are that you secure enough subscribers to be entitled to the club rate, and that arrearages be paid.

Any preacher who so desires may give his subscribers in the club Go Forward, instead of retaining his commission. To make it more plain, if you send ten or more subscribers and $1.25 with each name we will send Go Forward if you make especial request for it.

When personal checks are sent or cashier's checks, add 10 cents to cover exchange. The banks charge 10 cents for collecting either the personal check or the cashier's check. Almost any bank where you have an account will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. If you will notice the receipts we are now sending out, we give receipt for the amount actually realized on the check in this office. In the case of small checks we will give credit on the subscription only as far as the amount actually realized will pay.

The reason that we have reduced the former commissions paid, and the reason that we are watching so closely even the exchange that we have to pay on checks is that we have reduced the price of the Advocate, and there is no margin for unnecessary expense. Ten cents in one instance does not amount to much, but it may be the whole of the profit to us. When you multiply it by thousands, it becomes a serious matter, and we are cutting off all the margins in order to give all our subscribers the benefit.

TOPIC.

August 29. "Local Charities: Profitable Hospitality." Luke xiv, 12-14.

(Woman's Home Mission Society.)

The Master sat at meat in the house of one of the chief pharisees on the Sabbath. Apparently he was the chief guest, but whether of courtesy, curiosity or enmity, is hard to tell. It is certain that he was closely watched and note made of every word and deed. He healed a sick man, who was in the company, and the lawyers and Pharisees would not give their consent to it, and could not give a sufficient answer to his reasons for the healing. The rivalry among the guests for chief place brought forth a parable to show the wisdom of taking the lower places, unless the host invited one to the seat of honor. The character of the guests brought forth a parable suggesting that true hospitality would invite those who could not return the favor. When men were appalled at such a suggestion he spake another parable to the same effect, making it more emphatic than the first. Of the lessons of that day, we are chiefly concerned in this lesson, with what our subject calls "profitable hospitality."

The hospitalities of the home and the social circle largely minister to those whom we consider our equals, or perhaps our social superiors. Many an invitation has been given as a lever to pry open some social door that had hitherto been barred. The world, and sometimes the church, is jealous of its social privileges. Sometimes the distinctions between men are imaginary and sometimes very real, but the spirit of the world does not level these lines; it intensifies them. The caste distinctions of India that endure from generation to generation, are the logical outcome of the social spirit that naturally rules the world, where it is untempered by the Christ spirit.

When the Christ was here among men he was equally at home with the publican or the Pharisee. He would hear the cry of the blind beggar by the wayside as quickly as the call of a distressed, yet haughty, Roman soldier, or a ruler of the nation, and a leader among the people. He not only came to men; he touched them with his hands. The astonished Samaritan woman talks freely with Christ by Jacob's well. There is something of this in the spiritual contact of Christ with men to-day. He is Lord of lords, and shares in the Father's glory; yet to each human heart he comes in lowly guise, and stands asking for admission to the soul's sanctuaries. He invites, in turn, each one to sit at feast with him. You have an urgent invitation to sit at the marriage feast of the Lamb. He invites you into a present and future fellowship with himself.

The world craves and needs the same hospitable and social spirit that dwells in the heart of the Christ. Men and women may need of your substance, but they also need the touch of your hand in kindly sympathy. There are on every side those who would be benefited by a little hospitality from you, and from whom you might learn some new lessons of the real meaning of life. The Master would hardly be a dispenser of charity in the popular sense. There are some institutions run in the name of charity, which send away every man and woman that goes there with a sense of degradation. So far as any permanent good is concerned, they had better go out of existence. Lowell has graphically stated it, putting these words into the lips of the Master:

"The gift without the giver is bare.
Who gives himself with his gift gives three—Himself, his hungering neighbor, and me."

There are men and women on every side who would be helped more by a touch of your social life than by all the material gifts you might give. It is customary to say much of the strangers in the city, but in city and town and country there are men and women, boys and girls hungering for invitations that you could give with little cost and much gain to them as well as yourself. There are multitudes who, because of the lack of such fellowship among those who could help them, seek their friends in the doors of evil that are always open.

Seek those who cannot recompense you again, and you will find the Son of Man is lingering among your guests and partaking of your hospitality.

It frequently happens that an Epworth League wants to earn some money for special purposes. We commend to them the example of the League at Columbia, Miss. It is raising a club for the Advocate, and retaining the commission for their trouble. We would be glad if many Leagues would do the same.

PINOLA, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I have held four of my meetings on the Pinola charge. I was assisted by Brothers L. L. Roberts, J. W. Ward, B. H. Rawls and W. J. Ferguson. These brethren are strong gospel preachers. Their labors were blessed and appreciated by all. We had the co-operation of our Baptist and Presbyterian brethren at Harrisville, and the Baptist brethren gave us the use of their church, as it will seat about one-third more than ours. The churches were greatly revived, and seventeen were added to our church. To God be all the glory.

R. T. NOLEN, P. C.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

LAKE CAMP MEETING.

Aug. 20 to 26.

Good preaching, good singing, beautiful grounds. Come and have a pleas- and profitable time with us. Sincerely, H. F. TOLLE, P. C.

At Port Gibson Female College, $177 pays board, laundry, tuition, medical, library, Gibsonian, lyceum lecture fees, and all expenses of educational trip to New Orleans.

FROM INDIAN BAYOU, LA.

Mr. Editor: Our protracted meetings on this work have come and gone, but not without great joy and fond remembrances. The first was held at the home church by Rev. S. L. Riggs, of St. Francisville. No man is more gifted for revival work than Brother Riggs. The Holy Ghost came upon us in the beginning of the meeting and remained with us. We had cottage prayer-meetings in the afternoon, and souls were saved there, as under the preached Word. It is not known how many conversions there were. The meeting lasted eight days, and about thirty persons covenanted to take up family prayers, and six united with the church. Upon the whole, it was the best meeting I have ever witnessed for so short a term.

A wave of generosity struck the parsonage and flowed gently in at the front door, until she thought the good wife was tired of cooking. We would prepare our chicken for dinner, and find two cooked.

Our second meeting was held by Rev. A. A. Bernard, of St. Martinville, and the people claim it to be the best held at Hebron for years. Brother Bernard did fine preaching, leaving truths with our people which will remain with them to the end. We had several bright conversions, and eight accessions to the church, and a number of backsliders reclaimed.

The third and last meeting was held by myself and local brethren, save one day and night we had the beloved presiding elder, Rev. J. E. Denson, with us, who preached two excellent sermons, and said some good things about the New Orleans Advocate. All told, Indian Bayou charge is getting on nicely. We have had fifty-five accessions and baptized forty-four infants. We have three churches and five Sunday schools; have had six prayer-meetings on the work this year. To God be all the glory. J. S. RUTLEDGE.

HENNINGTON CAMP MEETING.

Dear Advocate: I returned Friday, the 13th, from Hennington Camp Meeting, near Crystal Springs, Miss., which was a very successful meeting. Brother S. H. Aby, editor of the Meteor, said in his paper: "The camp meeting which closed last evening, after a most successful session, was the largest attended of any in ten years. Its surprising resuscitation after a dormancy of a decade is a matter for praise and congratulation." Good congregations attended every service, and the last two nights the large auditorium was filled with eager listeners. The sermons of our co-laborer, Rev. W. M. Sullivan, were clear-cut, strong and effective, fully sustaining his wide reputation as a front man in pulpit work. The singers were led by Rev. C. N. Guice, who rendered splendid service, and at the organ was Miss Crisler, the accomplished daughter of the pastor. A cornetist and violinist added to the efficiency of the musical part of the services. "The Old-time Religion" was frequently sung with heartiness by the people, and many knelt at the altar, while others came forward and gave their hand for prayer. It was good to be there, and long may the flag of Hennington Camp Ground wave! Brother Crisler will doubtless send a full account to the Advocate of this glorious meeting. J. T. SAWYER.

A MISTAKE CORRECTED.

Dear Brother Boswell: I write to correct a mistake which I made when referring to Brother Geddie's article on "Paul or Matthias." In reading his article, I understood his reference was to St. Luke, 22:30, but I find that it was to St. Matthew 19:28. I am always as willing to correct my own mistakes as I am those of others.

Apologizing for my error, and promising to be more careful in the future, I am, as ever, your friend and brother,

JAMES SELWYN DUKE.

THE TEXAS METHODIST HISTORICAL QUARTERLY.

In the appointments of the Mississippi Conference for 1835 one may read: "Texas Mission—Henry Stevenson." Texas was then an empire, an independent government. One man was the pastor of a nation. There were then in Texas some 10,000 souls. Now Methodism has in the same territory upwards of one thousand pastors, a quarter of a million members, and a constituency of more than a million souls.

Since Henry Stevenson went from Mississippi as the pastor of a nation many historic figures, and incidents have graced Texas Methodism. And there have been struggles long drawn out, heroic waitings and lonely vigils without number.

Texans are justly proud of their great commonwealth, and Texas Methodists are as justly proud of the heroic history of the church in the commonwealth.

To preserve the records of the rise and growth of Methodism in Texas, and the account of the struggles whereby it was accomplished, patriotic Texans and loyal Methodists have organized the Texas Historical Association. "The object of this association is to collect, preserve and publish material connected with the history of Methodism in Texas." The officers consist of a president, one vice president from each of the four Texas Conferences, two editors and a secretary-treasurer. The vice presidents are associate editors.

"Anyone paying the annual dues of $1 per year, in advance, thereby becomes a member, and is entitled to all the privileges of membership, including the publications of the association."

The principal publication of the association is a quarterly magazine of 100 pages. The initial number is very creditable. It is handsomely bound in manilla, printed in readable type on good, strong paper, and carries a rare portrait of Rev. Martin Ruter, A.M., D.D., as its frontispiece There are eleven articles, including an introduction by Dr. Jno. H. McLean, of Waco.

Letters, reports, journals and other matter of interest to Texas Methodism will be welcomed by the editors. Historical matter valued at $25 entitles one to a life membership in the association. Doubtless many within the territory of this Advocate have in their possession old letters or other documents, containing data and references which will be of great value to the future historian of Texas Methodism.

Anyone interested in the history of the growth of Methodism in the great Southwest will find it to their interest to invest a dollar in the Texas Methodist Historical Quarterly. Subscriptions should be sent to Rev. E. L. Shettles, Calvert, Tex., or to Rev. R. G. Mood, Greenville, Tex.

I shall offer to this Advocate within a few days a sketch of Rev. Martin Ruter A.M., D.D., based on an extensive article by Rev. C. C. Cody in the first issue of the "Review."

Effect of Opium and Cocaine.

When improperly used, opium and cocaine are two of the most powerful, life-destroying drugs in the world. But even worse is the slavery these drugs make of those who acquire the habit of using them, first in small and subsequently in gradually increased doses. It is practically impossible for anyone, even with an iron will, to break such bondage. There is a man over in Atlanta, Ga., however—Dr. B. M. Woolley—who for over thirty years has made a business of curing such drug habits. Unlike many specialists, he treats these habits as diseases and claims that in most cases the sufferers are not directly responsible for their conditions. His success in effecting cures is something phenomenal—so remarkable, in fact, as to call forth favorable editorial comment from the newspapers.

It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly---read letter below:

Brookside, Ala., May 4, 1903.

The two physicians here had 3 very obstinate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johnson's Tonic. I removed all the printed matter and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle as a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

THE OXFORD CAMP MEETING.

The thirty-sixth annual camp meeting convened at the Oxford Camp Ground Saturday, July 31. This camping ground is situated three and one-half miles from the classic little city of Oxford, and bears the reputation of being one of the most beautiful sites for a meeting of this kind in the state, while favors have been showered upon her by nature alone, as the tabernacle and tents are plain and unpretentious. I have often thought "this is Eden" as I descended into this little valley, with its splendid shade trees towering here and there above the rich, velvety carpet of verdure, while the cool, balmy breezes would gently arise from the bubbling springs on either side, refreshing the cheek of every pedestrian, silently inviting them to halt and rest; and the little feathered songsters on the boughs hard by would almost burst their tiny throats as they seemed to join in with the great congregation as they sang that grand old anthem so touching to the hearts of all true children of the king: "Praise God from whom all blessings flow, praise him all creatures here below," the passing breeze catching up the strain and reverberating it from hill to hill, making melody and causing even the trees of the forest, as it were, to "clap their hands for joy."

Yes, I have thought surely this must be "the valley of Eden." I have been persuaded, too, that there could not be a more ideal trysting place for saints than here, so close to nature and to God. And we praise his matchless name that hundreds have found their "Bethel" here on this sacred spot.

The camp meeting this year was under the supervision of our beloved pastor here at Oxford, Rev. J. C. Park and Rev. B. P. Fullilove, of Abbeville, who each proved to be excellent camp meeting managers, as everything was conducted in a decent and orderly manner, not a single hitch occurring to mar the sacredness of the occasion. We were very fortunate in having with us throughout the meeting Rev. L. A. McKeown, of Shaw, Miss., who won every heart by his consecrated bearing and earnest, practical preaching. We desire to make special mention of one of his sermons to the Christians, using as a text Galatians 6:17. That sermon was worth its weight in gold to me, and I would to God that every Christian in the wide, wide world could have heard Brother McKeown preach it. If he should never do anything else while he lives but travel up and down through Christendom preaching that one sermon, his life would have been well spent for the Master. God bless him and help him to preach many years yet, is my earnest prayer.

It was pleasant, indeed, to have with us again Rev. G. W. Strickland, of Coffeeville, one of Abbeville's former pastors, who has a host of friends here who are always made happy by his genial presence and sweet, helpful sermons.

Rev. J. R. Robinson, of Toccopola, came to us on Tuesday filled to overflowing with the Holy Spirit. His messages sank deep into the hearts of all his hearers, encouraging them to follow more closely the blessed Lord, who has been his guide and stay these many years, and in whose service he is supremely happy.

We were also treated to several sermons during the week by our own Brother J. C. Park. All who have heard this consecrated preacher know what an inspiration it is to sit under his ministry. No one can hear him without being made better. He is, indeed, a "fisher of men," and is in great favor with the Oxford people.

This was Brother Fullilove's first year at the Oxford Camp Ground, but he soon found his way to all hearts by his kind nature and earnest preaching. We also had the pleasure of having Brother Fullilove's sweet family with us, who were very helpful in the song services and grove meetings.

All were made sad by the absence of our much-loved presiding elder, Rev. J. E. Cunningham, who had been seriously sick and could not be present. We are happy that he is much better.

As a whole, the camp meeting was very successful. The attendance was good and the interest profound. Christians were all strengthened and their hopes made brighter. Sinners were deeply convicted and made to realize the awfulness of their condition. There were fourteen conversions and reclamations. Camps were broken Friday morning, and all returned to their respective homes feeling that their labors had not been in vain in the Lord.

A GREAT SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE.

On Oct. 3, 4 and 5, in the city of New Orleans, the Louisiana Sunday School Association will hold a conference on the Organized Adult Class work. Mr. W. C. Pearce, adult superintendent of the International Sunday School Association, will be the leader of the conference. In the last two years Mr. Pearce has brought marvelous things to pass in reaching men and women for the Sunday schools of North America. He is a world leader in Sunday school work. Mr. W. N. Wiggins, general secretary of the Texas Sunday School Association and President of the Field Workers' Department of the International Association, is also expected to be present and take part in the conference, together with the state superintendent, Rev. W. H. Coleman, of Homer, and other workers.

All railroads in Louisiana have conceded a rate of one and one-third, plus 35 cents. Selling dates from the 1st to the 4th good to return until the [illegible]. These rates are granted on a certificate plan of one hundred.

All Sunday Schools are urged to send delegates to this great meeting.

WOMAN'S HOME COMPANION.

September, 1909.

Twenty-five pages, many of them in color, are devoted exclusively to fashion in this issue. The whole subject is so exhaustively covered that this issue will serve as a basis of fashions for a year to come. The latest word from Paris shows styles that will not appear here in general use for some months—and the latest American gowns styles show that American originality can ever improve on Paris.—Woman's Home Companion, Madison Square, New York.

FULTON AND THE STEAMBOAT.

Notable among the strong features of the September "Century" will be the first chapters of "Fulton's Invention of the Steamboat," written by his great-granddaughter, Alice Crary Sutcliffe. The narrative, dealing in this issue with the trial-boat on the Seine, will be told largely in extracts taken from papers of the inventor never before published, and will be illustrated with plans by Fulton only recently discovered, and with portraits.

Brother JOHN CLARK departed this life July 13, 1909, near Braxton, Miss. He was 78 years old, and had been a member of the M. E. Church, South, sixty years, and the Masonic Order, forty years. He was loyal to his church and to his lodge—faithful and true to God. He leaves a widow and nine children to mourn their loss. I have been told by members of his church and other churches and even by those that are not members of any church, that "Brother Clark was a good man." He expressed himself as ready to go. The funeral service was conducted by the pastor. He was buried with Masonic Honors, and laid to rest in the cemetery at Braxton to await the resurrection morn. Weep not, he is at rest.

R. T. NOLEN, Pastor.

LULA ALICE, daughter of J. H. and Anna Morris Johnson, died at the home of her parents near Cotton Plant, Miss., July 19, 1909, at the tender age of 7 years and 4 months. Little Lula was remarkably bright, and was regarded by all who knew her as a child of much promise. Strictly obedient to her Christian parents, they had planned to direct her feet into paths of usefulness. She was also very affectionate and unselfish, tenderly loving parents, brothers and sister. Though she had enjoyed unmolested health until her last sickness, which was long and very severe, she bore it with a patience seldom seen in those of riper age. The stroke is heavy, indeed. The bereaved family have the sympathy of a large circle of Christian friends. But this is the Lord's doing. He has plucked the tender flower and transplanted it to bloom in a fairer clime.

A. W. LANGLEY.

ROBERT COLBY came to brighten the home of Mr. Colby E. and Mrs. Kate E. Marshall Oct. 5, 1908. His life filled the vacancy in the hearts and home left by the going away of little Chancy in July before. For four weeks and more the brave little fellow battled with malaria, but, despite his fortitude, the best of medical skill and the tenderness of the loved ones' nursing, the sweet spirit winged its way into the presence of the Father on Saturday night, July 10, 1909. It was a touching scene, when, on Sunday evening, at 5 o'clock, we laid away the little body in the cemetery at old Bethesda Church, near Crystal Springs. The bright, sunshiny sweetness of the life had made every heart who knew him tender, and the soft tenderness of a sweet life seemed to make the evening sun more mellow. Each one went away feeling that the life of Robert Colby, though short, too short, had not been lived in vain. As indeed, no life is, that leaves its mark for good in the hearts and lives of others. May the grace of the good Father be sufficient to comfort the hearts of the father, mother and other loved ones left behind!

MRS. VIOLA L. BATTE CARRE, wife of Mr. Henry Carre, was born in Brownsville, Tenn., March 6, 1838, and departed this life from her home in Logtown, Miss., June 24, 1909. A very important life in the church on earth has closed, but its influence for good will abide for years to come. For thirty-five years she has been an exemplary disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ, who was to her a living, ever-present Savior. When afflicted by the death of her devoted husband and idolized grandson, and during her long illness, she patiently bore up under it all as a good soldier of the cross, and murmured not, though her spirit was crushed and her heart was broken. Mrs. Carre was a great woman, and had a strong, intelligent mind and a large heart. She was a Methodist from deep conviction and loved the doctrines and polity of her church: yet she loved all churches, especially their ministers, whom she esteemed "very highly in love for their work's sake." She had a true sympathy for any good thing that would advance the Lord's kingdom in the earth. Her pastors and their families found her a sincere friend, always anxious about their welfare. She was a model housewife, looking "well to the ways of her household," and did not eat the bread of idleness. Her children rise up and call her blessed. She leaves one daughter, Mrs. J. S. Otis, and five grandchildren, to whom she was all that could be desired of a most affectionate, devoted mother. When she received the summons to appear before the Great Judge she was not dismayed, for she had a well-grounded hope of immortal life and the "testimony that she pleased God."

L. A. DARSEY.

Mrs PAMELIA CHARITY PORTER (nee Brown) was born in Natchitoches Parish, La., July 11, A. D., 1840, and died Jan. 26, 1909. When eleven years old her father moved to Houma, La., where she grew to womanhood. She was married to Henry F. O'Beirne, Jan. 2, 1868. They acquired Athlone plantation where she spent the remainder of her life, except eight years in Jackson, La., educating her children. Her husband died Sept. 22, 1873, and she married J. M. Porter Jan. 23, 1877, who died Oct. 26, 1896. Eight children were the fruit of her marriages: three by her first husband who preceded her across the river, leaving Mr. Jas. O'Beirne with the four children born to her by J. M. Porter to cherish her memory. Sister Porter attended school at Mansfield Female College. She was a member of the M. E. Church, South, and to know her was to be impressed with her God-like life. Her home was a spiritual bethel to the ministers of God. As a mother, she was all that a mother could be in every way, so loving, gentle, tender, and kind that she succeeded in meeting the great command of her Lord and Master towards her children in bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and while she is gone from us, she still lives in their lives. As a neighbor, she was an example to all she met, impressing them with the great requirement of her Lord to "love your neighbor as yourself." Sister Porter's death is a loss deplored by all who knew her, but we realize our loss is her gain. "To be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord." May God comfort and sustain her loved ones!

C. F. STAPLES.

JAMES SEATON HAMM, son of Judge James Seaton Hamm and Mrs. A. K. Hamm, was born at Meridian, Miss., Dec. 12, 1886. On July 15, 1909, useful and hopeful, in the strength of his young manhood, he was taken from us, having "fallen on sleep." James had a goodly heritage of ancestry, being the son of pious parents and the grandson of Rev. T. J. Koger, formerly a member of the Alabama Conference, and he proved himself worthy of it. Trained from infancy to reverence and obey God, he united with Central M. E. Church, South, Meridian in early boyhood, and a little later was consciously converted. He was a consistent, faithful Christian youth, clean in life and speech, noble in aspiration. He knew his Savior, loved him, honored him, and delighted to serve him. Notwithstanding his youth, he was made a steward of the church, an office which he filled faithfully and conscientiously, winning and holding, as a professed Christian, and as church official, the respect and confidence of the public. A thoughtful and helpful son and brother, a true friend, a competent and reliable business man, James Hamm filled for a young man, a large place in the life of his city, and was universally beloved. During his illness, with typhoid fever, he was patient and trustful, wishing to stay with his loved ones, but willing and ready to go if God so willed. When the end was near he prayed with the family, assuring them of his hope in Christ, gave words of counsel and encouragement to his young brother and sisters and, in a few hours went quietly and peacefully home. A young man, strong in the Lord, and true to the right, we miss him greatly, but "precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

WM. H. LAPRADE.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

We, the committee appointed by the pastor of the M. E. Church, South, at Crawford, Miss., to draft resolutions to the memory of Mrs. Alice Smith, who departed this life on July 28, 1909, report as follows:

Whereas God, the all-wise ruler of heaven and earth, saw fit to take from our midst Mrs. Alice Smith, we submit to the will of our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well. Therefore, be it Resolved

First—That in the death of Mrs. Smith, our Sunday school, and especially our Bible class, have lost a true and faithful member, and that in her true Christian life we have had a noble example, the influence of which eternity alone can reveal. She was a kind, affectionate, indulgent mother, and tried to be true in the performance of her every duty.

Second—That we extend to her bereaved family our heart-felt sympathy.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be published in The Columbus Dispatch and the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and that a copy be spread on the minutes of our Sunday school.

A "SQUARE DEAL"

It is often argued that women do not have an equal chance with men, for enjoyment and usefulness, because women suffer so much from pain and weakness. In a general sense, it is true that women bear more physical pain than men. However, the belief that women must suffer regularly, on account of ailments and weakness peculiar to their sex, has been successfully contradicted by the relief so many women have obtained by the use of Cardui, that great remedy for suffering women.

During the past fifty years, many thousands of women have written us, telling of the immediate relief and permanent benefit they have received from Cardui. These letters cover a great many forms of womanly illness. Mrs. M. E. Allred of Hartford, Wash., writes: "Ever since I was 16 years old, I have suffered from female troubles. I had headache, backache and other troubles, every month. Some two years ago, I began to use Cardui, and since then I have had no backache; my other troubles have stopped; I don't need any medicine, and I am well."

What Cardui has done for Mrs. Allred and other women, it surely can do for you. Try it at once. Give yourself a "square deal." You will never regret it. Sold everywhere.

LESSON FOR AUG. 29, 1909.

PAUL ON CHRISTIAN LOVE.

(I Corinthians xiii, 1-13.)

Golden Text: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."—I Cor., xiii, 13.

It is a great mystery that there are times and seasons when a writer or a speaker surpasses himself, and he becomes known through his masterpiece, rather than through his general character as a writer or speaker. In other than sacred writings this may result from the mental condition of the writer, but in the Scripture it is the more or less emphasis of the writer as he is "moved by the Holy Ghost." While this is true, God has permitted the Holy Scriptures to be shaded, to a certain extent, by the individualism of the writer. So, then, we may conclude that the twelfth chapter of Romans was Paul's idea of a needful exhortation to a people dwelling in a land where there was a vital conflict between order and chaos; and the thirteenth chapter of I Corinthians was a call to a people to emerge from the cold formality that had resulted from commercialism. So, in our study, let us see a deeper truth than first appears from a glance at the Scripture before us. With this in view, we will go back three or four verses into the preceding chapter for an introduction to that which follows. There we read of the different gifts, or endowments, of the members that God hath set in the church, "which is his body." Following this, we are told to "covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet I shew you a more excellent way."

"The more excellent way" is now our theme. What is this way that is more excellent than all the enumerated gifts of the members of the body of Christ? It is love. What is love? God is love. Then the more excellent way must be God dwelling in the heart. Paul calls this "more excellent way" charity; it is good that the generally accepted interpretation is love. It is love—love toward God and faith in Christ—that is more excellent than speaking with the tongues of men and angels. This power within the soul that draws us nearer to God in our thoughts and in our lives is not love as we understand the word, but love is the best name for it.

What the fatherhood of God and salvation in Christ is to the redeemed soul cannot be told in words. Jesus said it was "that better part that cannot be taken away" that Mary had chosen, and that Martha learned on seeing Jesus' power of the resurrection. This love—this attitude of the soul—is wonderful; it excels the gift of prophecy, and the understanding of mysteries; it even surpasses a faith that would remove mountains, for, having all these qualities, but lacking love, we are nothing. Let all the goods be bestowed to feed the poor, and unless it be done as unto the least of his brethren, it profiteth nothing.

Paul tells us what it is by explaining the effect it has on the heart. He has it who is long-suffering and kind, that has no envy or pride. It pervades every act in daily life, producing an upright and proper line of conduct. Selfishness has no place in the heart where this love resides, for even the mind thinketh no evil. In fact it is the power that produces a Christ-like life.

When the love of Christ dwells in the heart, no law is needed to command obedience; love is the fulfilling of the law. The law brings us to Christ and there leaves us, for "the love of Christ constraineth us," and obedience follows naturally. Paul's life and works show the power of love on the human heart; he knew it in its fullness, but he had it to learn. Says he: "I have learned," and, after telling of the things he had learned, he says, as the result of having learned, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," because he loved Christ. His great desire was that others should know of this great, absorbing love. He says to the Ephesians: "For this cause I bow my knee unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height, and to know the love of Christ."

Love was first brought to the world by the babe of Bethlehem, and, as a child, we learn first of this love of man to God as the child learns of love to his earthly Father. It is in spiritual manhood that we learn of God's love to man, and even then we only know in part; we look at such love, as it were, through a glass darkly. It was God's love to man that caused him to send down his only Son to tell the world that through him was salvation given.

John, the apostle of love, wondered at the divine love that now makes us sons of God, and what we shall be more doth not yet appear. This divine love that brought forth such a sacrifice for man, angels desired to look into, and if they could not understand, neither can man until he knows even as he is known. No experience, or mode of earthly learning, can enable us to know of this great love toward man, for it is "shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost." In one sense, faith, hope and love, all three, abide; yet faith ceases when we see face to face; hope is fulfilled in receiving eternal reward, but love abideth forever, for "God is love."

"Then shall I know, even as I am known;" if I am known as an humble servant of Christ, then shall I know him whom all my life I have endeavored to serve.

AN URGENT REQUEST.

To the Pastors of the Mississippi Conferences.

Dear Brethren: Our Training School at Montrose, Miss., is the only one in the state under the care of the Methodist Church, except the preparatory department of Millsaps College. We have some urgent needs set forth in our appeal in the New Orleans Christian Advocate of Aug. 5, page 1. Please, brethren, at an early date read it before each of your congregations, and take a collection for our furnishing and loan funds, and appoint committees to secure books for our library. Won't you also send us some students? Session opens the 1st day of September. Yours in Christ,

W. A. BETTS, Pres't.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for a list of testimonials.

Glances at the World.

Walter Wellman, who has for several years been ambitious to reach the North Pole, and who last week made his [illegible] attempt in a balloon, again came to grief. He had waited a good while in the frozen [illegible] weather, and when, on Aug. 15, [illegible] everything was favorable, he started. The air-ship acted beautifully for thirty-two miles, when suddenly, the guide-rope to which was attached about a thousand pounds of provisions and stores broke, causing the balloon to shoot upward to a great height. He turned it about and started back gradually lowering it to the earth. The expedition was at an end, for the balloon was wrecked in the effort to get it back to the starting place. Mr. Wellman will try again next year. Perhaps by that time the Wright Brothers, or some other maker of flying machines, will have a machine so far perfect as to assure a round trip in safety. When the air-ship is perfected, and the North Pole reached, then we may expect some one to solve the problem of perpetual motion.

The work of death in automobile races goes on—at an increased rate. On the Indianapolis speedway during a series of contests lasting three days, seven men were killed—three at one time. Verily, it was a "saturnalia of speed" as a press correspondent characterized it. A three-hundred mile race was on. Notwithstanding four men had been killed—literally sacrificed for the sake of [illegible] record, it was not until the seventh life was lost that the authorities concluded the work of death had proceeded far enough. Then they called off the races, with five machines on the track still trying to make records. One man had made 100 miles in a fraction less than one hour and thirty-two minutes. That was a little over sixty miles an hour. Others were going at very near the same break-neck speed. Is it at all strange that such frightful accidents occur? At the end of the three days, out of nineteen cars that started, all except five, for one cause or another quit the track. Sportsmen are paying dearly for their fun. When the mania for speed passes, the automobile will take its proper place—it will become a popular vehicle—not for pleasure alone, but for business.

According to estimates made by the government Agricultural Department, and others directly interested, the grain crop is the largest in the history of the country. This almost necessarily insures the usual supply of beef and hog products. The corn crop alone will give to every man, woman and child in the United States, counting the population at 90,000,000, something more than thirty bushels, an amount amply sufficient to sustain life if there was not a grain of wheat or barley or rice. Yet our wise ones tell us that the people need not expect any reduction in the cost of living. The Chicago Inter-Ocean puts the matter thus: "Neither the bountiful crops nor tariff changes will reduce the cost of living to people who are not growing their own food. The cause is partly that money (gold) has lost some of its former purchasing power, but chiefly that our farms have not gained in productivity proportionately to the demand for foodstuffs and their price. In a word, the demand for foodstuffs is outrunning the supply." If that is true, would it not be well for our farmers to wake up and take notice, and not only try to keep their boys on the farm, but enlarge their facilities for farming and apply better and more efficient methods in their work. After all, the farm is not only the basis of prosperity, but the very life of the nation.

The amount of water necessary to supply the city of New York is prodigious, and the engineering skill and work necessary to conduct the water to the city and to the homes of the people is nothing short of marvelous, and costs enormously. The September Century will have an article on the subject, and among other things, will say: "The Catskill Municipal water system for New York, now under way, ranks as the greatest municipal water supply enterprise ever undertaken, and as an engineering work it is probably second only to the Panama Canal. An account of "The World's Greatest Aqeduct" has been written for the September Century by Alfred Douglas Flinn, Engineer, Headquarters Department of the Board of Water Supply of the City of New York. He shows how, ranking with the inter-oceanic canals at Suez and Panama, the Assuan irrigation works in Egypt, and projects which are converting Western America's arid wastes into fruitful fields, the Catskill aqueduct, with its tributray reservoir, probably surpasses any one of them in the variety of problems to be solved. Rome's longest aqueduct was fifty-seven miles in length; the Catskill aqueduct will be ninety-two miles long. The Croton supply can safely furnish about 336,000,000 gallons daily. Five hundred million gallons daily is promised from the Catskill source, at an initial cost of $162,000,000. On the basis of 500,000,000 gallons going into New York daily, a creek something over one hundred miles long, ten feet wide, and three feet deep would be drained every day.

We are not sufficiently informed to tell our readers all that is meant by the commission form of city government. But The Times-Democrat knows, and in an editorial Aug. 22, bears witness to its great value. The editor says: "The commission form of municipal government, which had its beginning in Texas, is rapidly being adopted by the cities of the Middle West, and in every case where it has been tried it has resulted satisfactorily. It not only does away with the objectionable form of ward politics and government by wards, but eliminates, so far as may be, politics from the transaction of municipal business. A notable instance of the success of the plan is Leavenworth, Kan. Previous to the adoption of the commission plan Leavenworth could only maintain its government by the licensing of saloons, directly contrary to the laws of the State. From these saloons, run openly in scandalous defiance of the law, the city illegally collected a revenue of $120,000 annually. Two years ago Leavenworth, despite the direful prophecies of the politicians turned out the placemen and adopted a commission form of city government, and since that time, with the saloons closed and the whisky tax cut off, has not only met its running expenses, but has retired one bond issue of $150,000 and has called in another issue this fall. Moreover, the city is growing in population and wealth under the new regime, its good government not only attracting population but industries as well." If what the Times-Democrat says is true, it would be well for New Orleans to get rid of its "bosses," and its saloons, and go under a commission. As matters now stand, we are told that the revenue from the saloon is necessary, even to the proper maintenance of the public schools!

THE PASSING OF THE GREAT.

By Rev. E. B. Partin, M. D.

When C. H. Spurgeon, the world's greatest modern preacher, ceased his labors and went to his reward, and when the news came that the great London preacher was dead, tears came into my eyes and I said: "How can the world get along without him? So faithful, so true to the gospel, so sound and so evangelical in doctrine, so far-reaching in his influence for good." And then, not many years after the passing away of Spurgeon, the news came flashing over the wires that D. L. Moody, the great lay-preacher and evangelist had passed from earth to heaven and when those beautiful last words of his, "Earth recedes, heaven opens, God is calling me," were read, I felt that the world had lost a great light and evangelical Christianity a faithful exponent. So strong in his faith in the simplicity and power of the gospel of Christ, so world-wide in his work, that it seemed we could not spare him. But God who doeth all things well, [illegible]. God knew best when he took from us our own beloved Sam P. Jones, the great Georgia evangelist, who went immediately from his labors and sufferings to his great reward. So also with our own beloved Bishop Charles Betts Galloway, so recently taken from us to rest from his labors and to enter into his eternal reward. It seems that he left us at a time when he is most needed in the Church, State and nation. We cannot see through our tears how we can do without him. But God knows best and makes no mistakes. He buries his workmen and carries on his work. We must say with Job, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

THE SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

This summer there was held at the Seashore Camp Ground, a preacher's institute, representing the Mississippi, North Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana Conferences. We wish to most heartily commend the work done, as well as the action taken to perpetuate this summer school. At the close of the institute a constitution was framed, and the name was adopted of "The Seashore Divinity School." As we understand it, this divinity school is the creature of a joint commission of the four Conferences named above, and must be referred back to the several Conferences for approval. We believe that we are dealing with larger forces, than most of us realize at the moment, and that there should be a very large future for this summer divinity school. For this reason we want to call attention to thoughtful men in the four Conferences to one of the articles of the constitution, and suggest a change in it. We give this article 4, below:

"Art. 4. The school shall be under the control of the Board of Directors. This Board of Directors shall consist of twelve ministers—three each from the Alabama, the Louisiana, the Mississippi and the North Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as follows: Robt. Selby, H. M. Ellis, and C. W. Crisler, of the Mississippi Conference; J. A. Rice, R. H. Wynn and W. W. Holmes, of the Louisiana Conference; Robert R. Ellison, J. M. Dannelly and H. H. McNeill, of the Alabama Conference; W. B. Murrah, L. M. [illegible], and J. C. Park, of the North Mississippi Conference. All vacancies occurring from resignation, death or otherwise, shall be filled by nominations by the Board of Directors, subject to ratification by the Conference in which the vacancy shall occur."

We call attention to the fact that this Board is practically self perpetuating. The members of it apparently have life tenure on their [illegible] office; there are no terms set for directors; and the Conference has no power to fill vacancies, and the doubtful privilege of rejecting an unsatisfactory nominee.

It might be well to let matters stand as they are, if the safe, sane, and cultured members of the Board as given above could live forever, but we know not what forces might get into control of this potent educational agency, and into what vagaries young men might be led.

The time has passed when we can consent to an independent, uncontrollable, irresponsible Board—to handle any church institution, even if that Board is made up of the most responsible men. If these directors are to hold tenure for life, they should be subject to one of the provisions of modern government that is growing in favor, the power of recall. If any one Conference becomes dissatisfied with its representative, it should have authority to displace him. In any case, each Annual Conference should have the right of nomination, either direct or through its Board of Education. Would it not be wise for members of this present commission to slightly amend this article before it starts on the round of the Annual Conferences.

H. W.

OUR EDUCATIONAL SITUATION.

By Dr. J. A. Rice.

III.

But suppose we consider the process of education to be the training of the capacities and powers of the soul by adequate self-activity into complete self-command. Education, therefore, means the development of an ever-widening range of attention, of tireless concentration of the whole soul on a given point, of resourceful memory, of clear and quick insight into facts, forces, situations, problems, one's own opinions, into things visible and invisible. It seeks to produce a sense of perspective; it develops discrimination, accurate, dispassionate judgment, logical thinking, which goes right to the point, disentangles a skein of thought detecting what is sophistical and discarding what is irrelevant; it liberates a free constructive imagination; it begets an appreciative aesthetic feeling, an elastic range of delicate as well as deep emotions; it enthrones a will that counts the doing of the impossible the glory of living; it trains a faith that rests only in ultimate, final and eternal things; it generates a hope based on that faith with an endless outlook, a love that finds its source and satisfaction only in the infinite; it equips one to carry his whole message with eloquence and force by pen, or tongue, or hand, or brush, to that part of the world to which he is divinely sent. Such an one, superior to changing conditions, has in himself limitless resources for repose and peace and happiness. In society he is chaste and elegant, graceful and easy, at home anywhere, quickly responsive to any situation, able to enter others' lives and take them into his, possessed of an undying passion and an unconscious tact for getting all they have and giving in turn all he has. In a word, he has an active, versatile instinct for both reality and opportunity.

Such a soul, a unit in itself, is trained to deal with the whole range of things. Every capacity and power, whether attention, insight, discrimination, judgment, thought, imagination, aesthetic sense, emotions, faith, hope, love, expression, social adjustment, or what not, is raised to its highest power and inspired to move on the highest levels, which we have seen to be the spiritual, for God is all and in all. Two men go out to fell the forest. Passing a grinding stone, one stops to sharpen his ax, the other hasn't time. To the first cutting becomes a joy, to the other drudgery. Such is the difference in preparation for life. But who can estimate the loss to him who, in sharpening his soul for earthly things, dulls it to heavenly? And a training that leaves God out fails short of the highest. The supreme emphasis in the development of a soul must, therefore, be upon those capacities and powers which have to do with things unseen, eternal, which alone introduce us into the eternal life, which alone prepare us for citizenship not only in the State, but also in the everlasting kingdom of God. For, whatever else we are, we refuse to be called children of a day. A thousand foretokens of immortality inspire the confidence that we are pilgrims all, all who are right with God, to a promised land, to a home not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. That home as well as this should therefore be in view in all our soul processes. Faith, hope, love, must then come first in any theory of education; for by faith, which on the side of intellect is conviction, on the side of will obedience, on the side of feeling trust, we connect ourselves with God, with the inexhaustible resources of his kingdom.

Some months ago I went through the electric power house at Tallassee which supplies light and power for Montgomery. I stood before a series of dials whose hands were restlessly indicating the amount of power drawn off. I could read the record of every old street car that pulled up a tedious hill or carried a heavy load. There was no perceptible limit to the amount of available power. Wondering what regulated the inflow of water here yielding such results, I was shown a series of great pipes with automatic valves connected with [illegible] of water above, these valves letting in [illegible] the quantity immediately demanded, so that the instant [illegible] of the floods above to the call of the old street car 30 miles away was, "As thy days may demand shall thy strength ever be." I said to myself this is a parable of life. Back of and above every heart whose deep subconscious self is vitally connected with God are the measureless floods of his infinite sea, whose perpetual inflow, regulated by faith, supplements our weakness with the power of omnipotence. And when life's burdens grow heavy, its labors hard, its rough way, its long steep hills too much for weary feet, quick as thought comes the inspiring assurance:

"Fear not, I am with thee; oh, be not dismayed,
I, I am thy God, and will still give thee aid.
I'll strengthen thee, help thee, and cause thee to stand,
Upheld by my righteous, omnipotent hand."

This is the only sufficiency for the hope which grows with the advancing years and ultimately ripens in glad fruition. This is also the initial stage of that love whose hungers cannot be fed with any earthly food, whose resources cannot be exhausted upon any earthly creature, which cannot come to itself in any earthly atmosphere, but whose source and center can be only in the ever-present Father's changeless passion for his children. Hegel has beautifully said, "Religion is for our consciousness that region in which all the enigmas of the world are solved, all the contradictions of deep-reaching thought have their meaning unveiled, and where the voice of the heart's pain is silenced—the region of eternal truth, of eternal rest, of eternal peace." Therefore, only that system of discipline which brings us this boon, which provides power for the storm and stress of life, which opens up an atmosphere and an outlook for the deepest in us to come to its own, which finds us in our finding God, is in the long reach of the eternal years, worthwhile.

But there is yet another view of education—that it is the increasing of the quantity and the improving of the quality of life, or the introducing of the soul into the abundant life. Aristotle was not wide of the mark when asked how much educated men were superior to uneducated, he replied, "As much as the living are to the dead!" For I am dead to all I do not know, dead to all I cannot think, dead to all I cannot do, dead to all I cannot feel. What, for example, would redemption's choral song mean to the birds of the air, the beasts of the field, or the dog that crouches at your feet? What, after all, is life? Whatever it may be in essence, the test of its presence is responsiveness. The wood, the stone respond to nothing; the plant to one kind of influences; the animals to a different kind and a greater number; men to yet other kinds and still greater numbers. The man that lives on the mere physical plane responds chiefly to physical stimuli; the one who lives chiefly on the intellectual plane, to intellectual stimuli; the one who lives mainly on the spiritual plane, to spiritual stimuli. The quality of our lives is determined by the kind to which we respond; the quantity, by the number and completeness of our responses; the ideal is responsiveness to the whole range of stimuli, and to each class in its proper proportion.

Education, which is itself an essential part of the life process, multiplies the number of our responses, increases their speed, accuracy, and efficiency, and gives to each its proper power over us. When Jesus called himself the "Bread of Life," he was saying that he would so feed the spiritual hungers of men as to develop and regulate their responses to the infinite stimuli of universal truth, and he has thus set the type for all true education. Every teacher should be the "Bread of Life" to his pupils. To create responsiveness to a narrow range is to make a narrow life; to a disproportionate range, is to make a distorted life; therefore, to respond to nature in all its variations, to men in all their interdependencies in all ages, and leave God out in the making of a soul, is to make a soul dead to the highest things here and hereafter, now and forever. For the modern psychologists tell us that the soul is a process, an endless becoming, and when stunned or poisoned or perturbed in its early beginnings, who can say how or when the onward stream shall cease to carry the effects? And life not only corresponds with its environment, which would mean such conservatism as stagnates, but it also so controls and modifies that environment as to secure constant progress. But if that modification does not recognize and provide for religion, it is only movement toward ultimate death.

We have gone far enough, it would seem, to be able to assert with confidence the primacy of religion, which is conscious dependence upon and communion with God, in any true theory of education. For to develop, regulate and satisfy every desire but the deepest and most universal, is to turn out a distorted soul; to establish conscious immediate contact with all reality but that which is behind all else, causing all else, the medium of all else, is to produce a truncated soul; to expand the limitations on all sides but that from which all else, including our sweetest inspirations and fellowships, comes, is to make a contracted soul; to introduce one into every other element of his inheritance but the spiritual is to bring forth an aborted soul; to develop all the capacities and powers to the highest efficiency on every other plane but the religious, to hold down those which look heavenward, to the earthly, and [illegible] of the source of power, can yield only a perverted soul; to generate responses to every other class [illegible] but the highest is to create a dead soul. Who can contemplate, without horror, such terrific results. They enter an irresistible protest against every form of education that pushes religion into the background; they make an imperative call upon every faculty and every school in every land to seek first of all, in theory and practice alike, by every available means, to bring God to every student, and every student to God.

WERE THE PROPHETS INSPIRED?

During the Preachers' Institute at the Seashore Camp Ground, Dr. Jno. M. Moore was one of the chief speakers. In his lecture on the Prophets he said the prophets did not need divine inspiration to foretell the future of Israel; they only needed to look at existing conditions, and they could easily tell what the future would be. He illustrated it by saying if one sees a man take a drink at 6 a. m., another at 7, and every hour until 12 o'clock, he could easily foretell that that man would be a drunkard.

This to me seems to take the divine entirely out of the prophecies; and when the prophet said the Lord spake unto me, he only meant to say, "I guess this is what the Lord would say if he should speak." After I came home I got to thinking about this matter, and I decided that I must have misunderstood Dr. Moore, and so I wrote him and told him how I had understood and asked him if I was mistaken. He has not answered me, so I presume I was not mistaken in his meaning.

Dr. Moore is one of the editors of our chief organ; we expect him to keep us in line with the truth through the paper. He was put up at the preacher's institute as one of our instructors and we had the right to expect that he would give us the truth and only the truth. Is he correct? Will Dr. Moore or some one else tell us? G. A. GUICE.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

By Rev. I. T. Reames.

At the foot of this paragraph appears a cut of a sign board in the Yellowstone National Park, situated on Nez Perce (Nay-per-say) Creek, about two miles northwest of the Fountain Hotel. Thinking your readers would like to know of some real adventure, it occurred to me that a bit of Mr. Cowan's experience would be interesting to them.

During the summer of 1877, a party of tourists from a small town in Montana, viz.: Radersburg, made a tour of the Park. At that time our government officials were having considerable trouble with the Nez Perce tribe of Indians, who frequently passed through this particular section. There were in this party six persons, Mr. Cowan being at the head. After the circuit of the Park had been completed, early one morning two men of the party arose to build fires and make preparations for breakfast and an early departure for home, when greatly to their surprise, the presence of Indians became known. Mr. Cowan assumed the part of spokesman for the tourists, while an Indian named Charley, who could speak English reasonably well, spoke for them, though Poker Joe was the rightful claimant to this office. After some parleying and a council meeting, it was agreed that the tourists be allowed to return home, using the broken down horses of the Indians, all their own horses having been captured and put into immediate use by the Indians. Chief Joseph and his party then passed on, while the tourists completed their preparations to return home. Great was their snrprise when about seventy-five mounted warriors came galloping back, evidently bent on mischief. In a short time firing began, Mr. Cowan received a shot through the thigh and at once fell from his horse. Being on the side of a steep hill, he rolled down and lodged against a log. His wife was immediately at his side trying to shield him and begging them to kill her instead. Charley, upon investigation, found that Mr. Cowan's wound was not necessarily fatal. He drew Mrs. Cowan back, while another Indian fired a shot into his forehead.

The firearms of those days were not as deadly as those of to-day; and the bullet flattened without penetrating the skull, but left Mr. Cowan in an unconscious condition, stones were then thrown upon his head and he was left for dead. His wife and her sister were captured and the party of Indians then proceeded on their way. After about two hours Mr. Cowan became conscious and was in the act of drawing himself up by the branches of a tree, when lo! forty yards off there stood a mounted warrior who presented his rifle and fired, and Mr. Cowan fell again. He thought the Indian would come and dispatch him at once, but he did not. After waiting awhile and looking around to see if there were others near, he began a journey on his hands and knees, which perhaps has no parallel in history. He crawled back six miles (while in his home last September he told me it was nearer ten) to the old deserted camp where where he found scattered upon the ground some matches and a few grains of coffee, and after much difficulty, with the aid of a tin can, succeeded in making himself some coffee, the only nourishment he had taken in five days.

Gen. Howard came along Aug. 30, 1877, and rescued Mr. Cowan, turning him over to Capt. Spurgin, who in turn took him to Botler's ranch, about twenty-five miles north of the Park, where he remained until taken to Bozeman by his wife, who had been released and had returned home several days in advance. Mrs. Cowan secured a conveyance in Bozeman, placed a bed in it and traveled a distance of near seventy-five miles to get her husband.

On the return trip, in descending one of the long hills on Trail Creek, the horses became frightened, ran away, overturning the wagon and throwing the wounded man upon the ground. A man happened along riding horseback who went to Fort Ellis and secured an ambulance, and without additional injuries they were again on the way to Bozeman. He was taken to a hotel in Bozeman, and, surrounded by congratulating friends, who sat upon his bed in such numbers as to break it down. By this time the hotel keeper was ready to "banish such a Jonah from his house." This he jokingly said.

Among the callers upon Mr. Cowan at this time was an importunate minister who displayed some of the tactless zeal which occasionally characterizes members of the clerical profession. He asked many qnestions, which Mr. Cowan, in his exhausted condition became very tired of. Finally he said, with impressive gravity, "Mr. Cowan, during all this time that you were crawling along, not knowing that you would ever see your friends again, did you not frequently think of your God?" Mr. Cowan's patience was gone, and he replied in a way that he has ever since been a little sorry for: 'Not by a long sight. I had too many other things to think of.'" Mr. and Mrs. Cowan are still living, and enjoying good health in the beautiful little city of Boulder, Montana, about mid-way between Butte and Helena. I was in their home last September, and we talked over their thrilling experiences of 1877. They assured me that these statements were correct, and then showed me the bullet taken by the army surgeon from his head. He has been for a number of years practicing law in Boulder, which enjoys the distinction of being the birth-place of our great Church Extension enterprise, and if I am correctly informed our little church there was the first to receive aid from the Board. The Cowan home is not far from our church. He and she seem well preserved, and are enjoying a happy, quiet life, after the stormy days of 1877.

THE CAUSE AND THE REMEDY.

By Rev. Jno. W. Ramsey.

In a recent issue of the Advocate there appeared an article from my pen entitled, "The Spiritual State of the Church," from which, after carefully weighing the evidence upon both siddes of the question, I arrived at the general conclusion that the church, the bride of Christ, is yet very far from even an approximation of that ultimate ideal of which St. Paul wrote when he said: "Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."

So far as I can see, the "spot" conditions prevail. In fact, the spirituality of the church is very much like the present year's crop—good only in spots. It is an admitted fact that the spirituality of the church is exceedingly low, and if the readers of the Advocate could read the letters—some from other States—that have come to my table commending my position on this subject they would see that other minds are thinking themselves into the same attitude, and that hearts other than mine are being burdened for the sad state of the church. I have said the sad state of the church, for it is sad; and the only hopeful sign I can see is the fact that a few, here and there, are awaking to a realization of the deplorable situation and are beginning to speak with the voice of warning and to wave the danger signals. I thank God that there are still some watchmen standing upon the walls of our Zion.

But what is to be done? Before answering that question we must seek for the cause, or causes which have produced the present conditions, just as the wise and skillful physician would first seek to know the cause of the disease before administering the remedy. Sometimes the physician has to probe the wound and unless he administer the anesthetic the patient will squirm. Thrusting the probe into the conditions existing in the church may cause pain, but if the patient will endure it for awhile, I will try to locate the trouble and then, as wisely as I can, will attempt to point out the remedy.

As I see it, underlying all other causes of the lack of spirituality in the church, is the fact that her membership consists largely of men who have no experimental knowledge of God—who have never been converted. From the beginning of her history Methodism has emphasized the importance of a personal experience, but I fear that the ministry is not now insisting as it once did upon the necessity of conscious salvation. The ministry to-day is too prone to exploit its knowledge of science and literature, instead of preaching the simple old gospel of salvation from sin through repentance toward God and faith in Jesus Christ. The result is men are coming into the church who do not know God. Too many of us are not preaching the old gospel as our fathers preached it. We are such seekers after popularity and so anxious for the praise of men that we are softening the stern truths of the law, calling sin by euphonious terms, and making the way through life toward heaven such an easy way to travel that unconverted men are filling our churches. Our schools are sending out young preachers who boast that they are no longer orthodox, and who are calling in question the very foundations of our holy faith.

Being appointed to preach at a District Conference, I chose for my theme "The Resurrection," and at the close of the service a young theologue who was present passed out of the church saying, "I don't believe a word of it." That young preacher came out of one of our Methodist schools of theology. What can we expect but that the spirituality of the church will continue to decline when our schools are sending out young men who preach a hybrid gospel consisting of unitarian-universalism, who deny the virgin birth, the substitutional theory of the atonement, and who tell us that the Genesis history of creation is an allegory—a mere tale?

Another cause of the lack of spirituality in the church is a failure to enforce the law of the church. The time was when the ministry and laity were held to a strict enforcement of the law, and discipline was impartially exercised; but to-day preachers no-longer held in their hands any authority in the enforcement of law. The fact is our church law, especially that part intended to regulate personal conduct, is a dead letter.

These are a few of the things that have caused a decline in the spirituality of the church. What, now, is the remedy? First: Let all our preachers refuse to receive any into the church unless fully satisfied, by unquestionable evidence that the applicants have a genuine experience—a conscious salvation from sin. In our anxiety to count numbers we have been too hasty in the reception of members; let us be more careful.

Secondly, young men coming from our schools impregnated with the "new theology" ought to be refused admittance into our Conference even though it diminish the ministerial supply; and if they should somehow get in, a few trials for heresy it might be wholesome. Our preachers must preach as never before the old truths, and re affirm the fundamentals of our faith—the doctrines of Regeneration, Justification by Faith, Substitutional Atonement, Eternal Punishment, a topless heaven and a bottomless hell. Let us stand on Sinai, and with the lightnings flashing around us, thunder forth the laws of denunciation against sin, and through the Gospel of love point men to him who is able to save from the wrath of an avenging God, and from the awful doom of the finally impenitent.

Lastly, let us have a return to the enforcement of discipline. The Church is encumbered with the dead weight of godless members who care nothing for their vows of church membership, who disregard the rules of the church, who have no respect for the authority of their pastors, and by their inconsistent living have brought reproach upon the cause of Christ everywhere till to-day the Church stands for nothing in the world. Discipline is needed to teach them respect for the authority of church law. The exercise of discipline, however, is not synonymous with harshness as some seem to think, but properly administered will be tempered with love. Its purpose is to awaken and save, not to expel—that is to be the last resort.

But one pastor singly and alone cannot exercise discipline except at his own peril. If he attempts it he will be removed and entail suffering on his innocent children and wife. I could point you to several pastors who conscientiously tried to do their duty in the enforcement of law and were not only removed, but also degraded in their appointments. I have before me now a letter from an ex-presiding elder who says that for attempting the removal of some official members who were rich but wicked and disreputable he was "ousted" from the presiding eldership at a mere suggestion.

One reason that the law of the Church cannot be enforced is to be found in the diversity of opinion among our preachers. One day a presiding elder said to me, "What do you do with the ungodly membership of your church?" I replied, "I do as all the rest of you do—let them alone," and he said, "Well, the Church has changed her mind in reference to the exercise of discipline." How he knew the mind of the Church I do not know, but we have misinterpreted the parable of "The wheat and the tares," till many of us seem to believe that a mixed condition of the good and evil in the church is a necessity.

I repeat, one pastor alone cannot accomplish this much-needed exercise of discipline. What then? I answer, there must be a unanimity of action upon the part of all our pastors. But how is this unanimity to be secured? Let me suggest that we might begin with the district as the unit. The presiding elder could call all the pastors in the district together, or write each one a circular letter pointing out the necessity of the enforcement of law, informing each that he would be held responsible for the exercise of discipline in his charge, and that if he failed in his duty in this particular his character could not pass at Conference. "Stir things" did you say? Of course, it would, but who ever heard of a reformation that did not "stir things?" Did not the apostles "turn the world upside down" wherever they went? The waters have become stagnant and need stirring for their own purification. Let the "stir" begin—the quicker the better for the Church. "But the suggestion is radical." True, but did you ever see a forward movement in the ecclesiastical world that was not radical? Radicalism means progress, conservatism means stagnation. "But such an action would reduce the membership of the Church." Then let the reduction come. "They would go to other churches." Let them go, for without them our Methodism would regain her old-time power with which she sang and shouted herself around the globe till she has planted herself upon every shore and unfurled her banner on the isles of the sea. Once again, as in the old days, her heart would thrill in response to the call of her divine Lord, and there would burst forth from her lips a glad song of victory.

THE SEASHORE ASSEMBLY FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

The tenth session of the above mentioned assembly is now a matter of history. Without doubt this was one of the most helpful and spiritual sessions ever held at the Seashore. But we always say and think that. This year the lecturers and teachers were easily equal to any who have taught heretofore; the accommodations were ample and all that could be desired; the workers were earnest and the weather was fine (no rain like last year). The attendance was about up to the average and the interest was equal to any we have seen. One encouraging sign was the large number of new members who have not come before. Several familiar faces were missed, among them were C. D. Atkinson, S. L. Riggs, Frank Seay and others. If I were called upon to name the most popular and stimulating course of lectures in the assembly I should hesitate to say, for every one seemed to be most inspiring and helpful.

The course of studies in "The Psalms," by Dr. John A. Rice, of New Orleans, was one that stirred the hearts of all. It is needless to repeat here that Dr. Rice is one of the most eminent Hebrew scholars in the country. Like Saul of Tarsus, Dr. Rice has been particularly fortunate in sitting at the feet of that Gamaliel of Hebrew and Old Testament scholars, the late William Raney Harper, of the University of Chicago. Dr. Rice has a method and style unique and all his own. He is crammed full of mature ideas and dares to express the truth as he sees it, no matter what others may think or say. By this I do not mean to say that he is fond of polemics or controversy. No man could be further from that, but he goes deeper into the historical interpretation of the book than the every day thinker or theologian.

In studying the Psalms he suggested that we first get the imagery, then find the poetic forms, next get the political, economic and social background, then think through the course of thought, find what the psalm meant to the writer, and lastly, get what it means to you. Dr. Rice showed that the Book of Psalms means more to us if we consider that they were written by different men at various periods in the national history in Israel. The Psalter represents a growth of about five hundred years of Israel's most superb national life.

The course in the New Testament was taught by Prof. Thomas Carter, of Vanderbilt University. His subject was "The Social Significance of the Public Ministry of Jesus." Prof. Carter is rich and racy, wise and witty. He is sui generis. In this course he showed that Jesus has a message alike for all classes of people. In choosing the original twelve Jesus seemed to get representatives of every class in society—Matthew (the Publican), Peter (the fisherman), Simon (the zealot, or socialist). Prof. Carter showed that Jesus, instead of ignoring the social conditions of his day, was deeply conscious of His mission to all of these classes. That we should have a chronological arrangement of the books of the New Testament is very evident for many reasons. It would help to a better and clearer understanding of many of the vexing problems. Prof. Carter is a trained pedagogue, and one of the most original thinkers and students in our entire church. He seems to have a fondness for early church history, and perhaps some day will give to the church a sane and scholarly history on this much misunderstood question.

The class in Foreign Missions was taught by that ardent mission worker, Miss Daisy Davies, of Atlanta, Ga. She gave us a fine glimpse of the land of "The Southern Cross" and its large mass of unevangelized millions waiting for our gospel. She showed that 37 million people in South America spoke one language, and that the land abounded in rich resources. Her enthusiasm is contagious and no one left her class without feeling that we are debtors to our near neighbors across the isthmus.

Miss Mabel Head, of Nashville, led the class in Home Missions. The many friends of hers who sat under her teaching last year were eager to hear her again this year and none of them were disappointed. Her theme was "The Western Part of America." Miss Head has traveled throughout all this charming country about which she taught, hence she speaks with authority on this thrilling theme.

Miss Estelle Haskin, of the Training School, Nashville, taught one of the most interesting classes in the Assembly, in Miss Helm's new book, "From Darkness to Dawn"—the negro problem. This is one of the burning questions of the hour, and it is needless to say that there was not always an agreement of opinion on the phases of this issue.

Mr. Strout led in the class of Epworth League Methods, and Mrs. Strout led in the Junior League Methods. Both are trained and trusted leaders. The evening addresses were modern and moving. Prof. Thos. Carter, Dr. Fitzgerald S. Parker, Rev. N. E. Joyner, Dr. F. N. Parker, Dr. E. F. Cook and Dr. Patton, all spoke with might and main, to the delight of all who heard. To mention each lecture separately would occupy too much space here.

The singing was stirring and superb, led by that master of song, Prof. T. O. Adams, of New Orleans. The Leaguers were not only taught how to sing correctly and to appreciate good church music, but also given a glimpse of the rich treasure of music and song contained in our new Methodist Hymnal. What a pity it is that every church could not have Prof. Adams, or one just like him, to lead its music! Then we would have no "jigs" and "reels" and such things that we are punished by listening to; but real, genuine, soulful music.

A new constitution was adopted and a new set of officers was elected: Mr. Bruce Airy, of Alabama, president; Rev. C. D. Atkinson, of New Orleans, vice president; Miss Laura Rankin, of Gulfport, secretary; Miss Ellen Jackson, of Alabama, treasurer.

Dr. F. S. Parker refused to allow his friends to nominate him for re-election, as his duties at Nashville are too pressing on his time. One counsellor was elected from each of the states of Mississippi, Alabama and Louisiana. These, with the officers, will compose the executive body, which will govern and control the destinies of the Assembly.

Let every pastor and Leaguer begin to plan now to go and to take some one else with him next year. This is one of the very finest training schools in the entire South, and all our people should know it and take advantage of it.

A CHURCH DEDICATION AND ELSE.

By Rev. C. W. Carter, D.D.

On the 20th of July I left home to fill an appointment which had been made, a la Lorenzo Dow, eighteen months before. I am not much given to boasting nor do I often meddle with the dangerous language of exaggeration, but after a month's reflection on the incidents of that trip I will say that there came to me experiences which do not come to one man in a thousand, and I am still musing and wondering over those experiences.

At the Conference in Ruston, Col. I. D. Wall, of Clinton, La., told me that the Methodists of that little city were building a new church and when it was finished they wanted me to come and dedicate it. One reason for this rerquest was that I was a native of that Parish and had attended Sunday School in the old church in my boyhood. I was glad to make the promise to go. It took me a day and night to make the trip—stopping over night in a little "way-side-inn," kept by a thrifty German, enjoying the good fare, the clean bed and the absence of mosquitoes. (Having been engaged in a life-long struggle with mosquitoes, a truce in the fight is enjoyed about as much as any thing that comes to me. But on my part it is always "an armed truce.")

When I arrived at Clinton, to my astonishment, I found that the preacher-in-charrge, disregarding all precedents and ignoring all examples and "without regard for race, color, or previous conditions of servitude," had arranged a most strenuous programme for the old superannuate. He had publicly announced that I would preach every night during the week and twice on Sunday! I was in a strait betwixt two; Dextrum Scylla latus; laevum implecatu Charyhdis. Was I up against that programme or was that programme up against me? When I remembered that about forty-five years before I had answered affirmatively this question: "Will you reverently obey your chief ministers unto whom is committed the charge and government over you?" Was not the preacher-in-charge the chief minister there? The presiding elder was off in another part of the district, and of course, the preacher-in-charge was chief. I could not go back on my vow. I was aroused. I attacked that programme with religious vehemence—with a determined fierceness and fought my way through it in a sort of pious whirlwind and when Sunday night came it was not only not "a thing of shreds and patches," but there was not a shred nor a patch left. It had been literally obliterated, and there was left only the memory of a preacher beating his way through a tangled wilderness of "brush." But I really enjoyed that preaching as I have not enjoyed preaching for many a day. As the old preachers used to say: "I had good liberty." The thoughts came freely and the words in which to clothe them came just as freely. The local paper had this to say about that preaching: "During his stay in Clinton, Dr. Carter preached every night, strong, anaytical, practical, spiritual sermons, beautiful for their literary fiinish and lovely for deep spirituality." Now I see the readers countenance taking on the expression of deep disgust at my quotation of that sentence and mentally saying, "Just listen at that old egotist!" Bless your soul, reader, I don't believe the editor of that paper was ever within a half mile of that preaching. The fact that he said such things is proof positive that he was not there. That is what makes it so funny to me. If the reader cannot now see the funniness of it, then let his dull vision abide in darkness.

Sunday was THE day of the meeting. The beautiful church was full. The regular order of service was opened by a duet, "Savior, source of every blessing," sung by Mrs. I. D. Wall and Miss Breitung. After the prayer, Col. and Mrs. I. D. Wall sung as a duet, "In the cross of Christ I glory." Then came the sermon of forty-five minutes length from John 1:14. Then the solemn rite of consecration and the doxology closed the service. The best thing was, there was no collection, the indebtedness having already been cleared away. The church is a beauty—a real gem. I have seen none prettier. The Methodists of Clinton are to be congratulated, and now they have only to go ahead and do the Lord's work and build up a large body of genuine Christians in their town. How glad I was to have the honor of dedicating that beautiful house to God on the spot where I attended Sunday School sixty-five years ago. Very many happy memories came to me that day!

When I was a boy, there was three miles south of Clinton, a church called "Union Church" and near it my father was buried. Expressing a desire to visit the place, Brother Geo. Reily took Col. Wall and myself in his auto to hunt for the site. The old church has long since crumbled to dust and large forest trees occupy the old church yard, but we had not much difficulty in finding the graves—the headstones being intact and easily legible. My father was buried there May 5, 1835. All I know of him is written in the family Bible by my grandfather, Geo. Dougharty. It reads as follows: "Thomas Carter departed this life May 4, 1835. He was the owner of this Bible—believed its doctrines—lived by its precepts and died triumphing in hope of the eternal rewards of its glorious promises." Few men ever have the experience of standing by the grave of a father whose body has been sleeping in the ground for more than seventy-four years and whose soul has been enjoying the fruition of gospel promises for a like period. I cannot write down the thoughts that came into my mind while standing by the grave. Seventy-four years in heaven! Who can compute the growth of mind—the expansion of soul under celestial influences during that length of time?

Having visited my father's grave, the next desire was to see the old homestead. This desire was gratified when Brother Bowman Wall took me out to spend the day with his charming family. They live at my old home. I found very little to remind me of boyhood days. The old mill on the creek had nothing left but a few mud-sills. The creek itself—where I so often caught the pretty perch and in whose clear waters I was wont to "go in a swimming"—has been very nearly filled up by washings from the hill-sides. The only thing left was the house in which I was born and that had been turned around and converted into a dining room and kitchen. And so I had the privilege of eating dinner in the house in which I was born. Is there one man in a thousand who has the opportunity after he has passed his seventy-fifth year of doing such a thing as that?

Now there is one thing which our religion has created, I love to think about, and I speak of it here because I meet with it wherever I go. The New Testament shows that the religion of Jesus created a new kind of hospitality, such hospitality as Greece and Rome—never dreamed of. Paul saw it germinate and grow, and it was one of the very few things which brought solace to his troubled soul when weighed down by heavy responsibilities and beset by outrageous persecutions. As I go around in these 20th century days I find this same beautiful hospitality wherever I go. It is as unassuming as it is sincere. It is as openhanded as it is fervent. It opens all doors and says, "Come in and be at home." Such hospitality, in all its tender grace and beautiful simplicity, charmed me, while ministering to my wants, in the home of Col. and Mrs. I. D. Wall.

A PROPOSED MERGER.

I have the most profound respect and reverence for the Methodist Book of Discipline. I love its formulas, doctrines, and rules. It has been my light and my guide. I would not add to or take from it anything that would mar its beauty or obscure its meaning. But, like a fond mother who sees and tries to remove the defects of her child, I would eliminate or change in the Discipline that which is obsolete or impractical. I do not want a book of memories, but of utilities. I want no museum or mausoleum, but a book of moving machinery. If an old lady stuffs her attic with worthless trumpery, why should we follow her example by making our Book of Discipline a lumber garret? I hope the next General Conference will gird up its loins and have a regular old-time spring cleaning. Of course the biped fossils will be shocked, as is their habit when any forward movement is proposed.

I have in my mind a number of revisions, but in this communication will propose only one—i. e., a merger of the Church and Quarterly Conferences.

Ninety-nine per cent. of our pastors are anxious to perform the burial service over the defunct Church Conference. Its vitality—if it ever had any—has been absorbed by the District Conference on one side and the Quarterly Conference on four sides. I would take from the Church Conference and transfer to the Quarterly Conference all that is worth preserving. In the contemplated merger I propose that every member of the church in good standing shall be a member of the Quarterly Conference and vote in the election of officers and on all questions that come before the body. I would make the secretary of the Church Conference a secretary of the Church Register, and require of him to make a report to the Conference quarterly, countersigned by the pastor. I would permit a pastor, in addition to the right of nominating officials, the right to call for a committee on nominations if he so desires.

I would magnify the presiding elder's office by bringing him in close official relation with every member of the church.

I would permit the roll call of officials to remain as it is, except that once a year there should be a roll call of all the members at an adjourned session, if so desired.

That which I most earnestly long for is that a Christian oligarchy may be revolutionized into a Christian democracy.

These suggestions, if they meet with favor, will be put into the form of a memorial to the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.—Dr. W. M. Green, in Christian Advocate, Nashville.

Fourteen Good Reasons for Patronizing Grenada College

First—The unexcelled Home Comforts, unequaled anywhere else in the State.

Second—The Health Conditions; we rarely require the service of a physician.

Third—Our unusually skilled corps of teachers, whom we were able to secure only by paying a salary much above that paid by other girls' schools of the State.

Fourth—The Fine Arts Department, unequaled in the State and unexcelled in the South. Our teacher of Art studied in Germany and France, and our teachers of Music are graduated from the best Conservatories of America.

Fifth—See Descriptive Course of Study, which is conscientiously carried out as indicated.

Sixth—The Lyceum Course, which is superior even to that sustained in the University of Mississippi.

Seventh—The Library, which is fuller and better adapted than that of most girls' schools of the South.

Eighth—Strong Christian influence dominating all instruction.

Ninth—Personal attention to the individual pupil, with a view to develop the best even out of peculiarities of character.

Tenth—A superior Student Body as Associates, since most of the indifferent have been eliminated.

Eleventh—The Rates are lower than those of any other school doing the same grade of work owing to the Conference Assessment, which gives us an income not possessed by other schools; further, we have no stockholders to whom we are forced to pay dividends, as are some private schools. Our patrons receive back in excellence of service more than they pay in.

Twelfth—We place but two girls in a room, while most schools put from two to six.

Thirteenth—We require our teachers to continue study. Two are in Europe, two in Chicago, others at other schools in the North and East.

Fourteenth—All these superior features enable us to turn out a larger percentage of graduates, who take high stand in the educational world, than any other school in the State. It means something to hold a diploma of the Grenada College.

A BRAVE YOUNG WESTERN HUNTER

A True Story, by Robert F. Gilder in September St. Nicholas.

When John Wesley Wolfe was scarcely ten years of age he was a good shot with his father's Winchester, although it was too big for him to put up to his shoulder in the proper manner. He learned to shoot after a fashion of his own, and could knock the head from a deadly rattlesnake at fifteen to twenty paces five times out of six and he easily acquired skill in roping and cow punching.

He had grown up in the eastern Wyoming plains in sight of the [illegible] mountains. He [illegible] no [illegible] children with whom to play, and it is not surprising that at a very early age he accompanied his father on some of his trips over the range.

Although rattlesnakes and coyotes, gray wolves and wild cats are pretty good game for a boy of 12 or 13 years, this one had never been allowed to accompany the hunters of the ranch on their quest for the annual supply of winter meat into the haunts of big black-tailed deer. However, when John had reached the age of 13 years the opportunity came.

The storms of an unusually early winter had sent the range cattle belonging to his father 50 miles southeast of the ranch, drifting along in front of the cutting northwest wind, and this before the before the winter's supply of beef had been safely housed in the log icehouse. When this predicament faced the family, some of the cowboy hunters decided to inaugurate a hunt and obtain a full quota of the usual supply from the foothills, where a large herd of black-tailed deer had been seen a few days before. This was agreed to, and John was allowed by his parents to accompany the hunters.

It is pretty well established that the boy didn't sleep much the night before the hunt. Before daybreak the hunters were in the saddle, the boy being the first one to get ready. His rifle was slung in a holster at the pony's side, and his belt, loaded with shells, was buckled about his waist. Day had not broken when they left the ranch, and they had been out but a few hours when a fearful blizzard set in. During the storm the hunters were separated, and the boy soon found that he was entirely alone. He was not troubled on that account, however, and he resolved to go to a place where he had often seen deer grazing. The snow had drifted badly all day, and his parents on the ranch were not a little uneasy lest, in the fearful storm, John might become separated from the others and lose himself in the great plains where every hill looks just like its neighbors and where trails are unknown.

The sun finally burst through the clouds, but the boy did not return. Of the four cowboys who had started out, all returned by twilight and reported they had not seen the lad for hours. Although cold and benumbed by their battle with the storm the hunters did not remove their saddles, intending to start out to look for John. Finally, just as a searching party was starting, a telephone message from a neighboring ranch announced that a boy had just passed there on foot leading his pony, upon which were roped the carcasses of two deer.

There was joy at Nice-Bar when the message was made known, and when the lad came into view [illegible] his parents and cowboys [illegible] give. Sure enough, there were two deer roped to the saddle of the little fellow's pony, and they all crowded around as he related the story of the day's adventures.

John said he had [illegible] a canyon [illegible] realized that he was lost [illegible] from [illegible] broke, where he remained under a projecting ledge of rocks awaiting clearer skies. Then he found and followed deer tracks in the snow and had finally come upon a herd of a score of full-grown black-tailed deer. He had succeeded in getting within a hundred and fifty yards of the herd without being seen. Just as he was about to fire the leader of the herd saw him and the deer were off with [illegible]. As quickly as possible he aimed and fired and succeeded in securing two.

The boy said he found that the deer were too heavy for him to lift to his pony's back, and he was at a loss for a moment as to what he should do. If he left them and went to the ranch for help it would give the big gray wolves a feast. Finally he said he thought of a hunter's trick. He took his rope from the horn of his saddle and fastening one end to the saddle horn, he fastened the other to one of the deer and dragged it over the snow to a pine tree nearby. He then threw one end of the rope over a limb and started the pony so that the rope [illegible] about the tree and the deer was lifted higher than the back of the horse. He then [illegible] to the pony's back and fastened it securely. The same method was followed with the second animal.

When [illegible] under just such conditions [illegible] him.

So, leading his pony, he began the long march home. A score of times [illegible] snow drifts, through which he managed to flounder, finally reaching home [illegible] royal welcome.

The hardship of the [illegible] conditions with which the lad was [illegible] ter, with the mercury in the thermometer hovering about the zero mark, would have caused grown men to hesitate before they made the attempt. But John Wesley Wolfe made nothing of his trip, and it was with difficulty the author could get him to relate it.

The summer of 1907 found John Wesley Wolfe a member of the Harlan J. Smith archeological reconnoitering party in the neighborhood of the Rawhide mountains. Mr. Smith is a well known scientist connected with the American Museum of Natural History, New York City. In the course of this trip the boy, then fourteen years of age, made some important discoveries, and his name figures in the official report of the expedition.

DR. GREEN'S PROPOSED MERGER.

Our readers will find on page 5 of this issue of the ADVOCATE an article by Dr. W. M. Green, of the Tennessee Conference, copied from the Christian Advocate (Nashville), in which he proposes the merging of the Church Conference and the Quarterly Conference into one body. We let all the Doctor says about the Discipline as a "mausoleum," "lumber garret," etc., pass for nothing, as likewise we do his characterization of those who oppose radical changes in our church economy as "biped fossils." Such terms have no place in argument—are worse than worthless in efforts to convince a conservative, and serve only to make the "bourbons" more stubborn in their opposition to "new things."

We would be glad if Dr. Green would argue his proposition on its merits. There appears to be something in it worthy of consideration. The measure will certainly appeal to those who are clamoring to give the local churches more to say in the control of their affairs. We have not sympathized very much with this clamor, believing that, if our people would avail themselves of the advantages of the Church Conference they would have all the democracy necessary to good government. At the same time, we have recognized the disinclination of both preachers and people to engage in a Church Conference. So far as the people are concerned, we cannot well blame them, for after more than forty years of trial, we, as preachers, have not learned how to make a Church Conference successful. More than thirty-five years ago we heard one of our leading pastors say, after listening to a preacher tell in a District Conference his manner of holding a Church Conference, "that method would kill any church in existence." What advance has been made in holding Church Conferences we are not prepared to say. Not much we fear, else 90 per cent of our pastors would not be anxious to bury, and get the Church Conference out of the way.

Will Dr. Green's plan entirely solve the difficulty? It will in stations composed of a single church. It would do fairly well in a charge composed of two churches not very far apart. How it would work in a circuit made up of four, or six, or eight churches, widely separated, is not so clear. Manifestly, in an eight-point circuit, the church favored with the Quarterly Conference would have a preponderating influence, and friction would be created. If Dr. Green will show the way out of this difficulty, he will probable secure a following and go to the General Conference with a strong memorial.

THE HOUSE NOT MADE WITH HANDS.

"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." No text is more frequently quoted than this to give believers assurance of a home in heaven. That it is an assurance we do not doubt, but like many other passages it is as often misinterpreted as otherwise. Men use it as if St. Paul had in mind the same thing our Lord had when he said: "In my Father's house are many mansions." Such is not the fact. Jesus was comforting his disciples by telling them of heaven and its accommodations, promising them that he would prepare a place for them and come again to receive them unto himself. St. Paul was telling about the tabernacle or body the soul would inhabit in heaven—the Father's house.

St. Paul uses the tabernacle of Moses as an illustration or symbol of the human body. That tabernacle was so designed that it could be erected and used, then taken down or dissolved, transported to another locality and re-edified, or built up again. It was dissolved and carried across the Jordan, and used by Israel for generations. So the human body, the earthly tabernacle of the soul, is likewise designed. It will be dissolved and built up again. That is to say, the body will die, but will be raised from the dead and fitted for inheritance in heaven. It will not be another body, but the same body rebuilt without hands.

In this earthly tabernacle we groan, being burdened with flesh and blood, and the things of this life which intervene between the soul and God, and mar our spiritual intercourse. We rejoice in the prospect of release, "not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." In his epistle to the Romans, viii, 23, the apostle calls this "the redemption of our body."

Does St. Paul teach that the soul on entering heaven shall be given "a body not made with hands," separate and distinct from that which it occupied on earth? We think not. Such teaching would be inconsistent with the doctrine of the resurrection and his own teachings clearly set forth elsewhere. Our Lord declared the resurrection of all men, great and small. So did St. Paul, affirming it along with the fact of the death of Christ as a vital and basic doctrine of the gospel. Those who deny a resurrection, or affirm that which is next to a denial, the existence of a bodily germ out of which God will form a resurrection body, have not as yet succeeded in showing the impossibility of the one, or of demonstrating the other. Until they do we prefer the faith of St. Paul, and to say boldly to gainsayers, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead."

Of course, the analogy between the tabernacle and the human body does not hold in every particular. The tabernacle was not only of the same material every time it was taken down and rebuilt, but it presented always the same appearance. Not so with the body. Though raised from the dead, it will be changed: "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." Whatever that change may be, it is certain that a change is necessary to enable human beings to endure the realities of eternity. This they could not do in their present condition. Paul's statement, "an exceeding great and eternal weight of glory," is significant of this. The human eye could no more stand the sight of the glorified form of the Son of God than could Peter, James and John on the mount of transfiguration, or Saul of Tarsus when the Lord met him on the way to Damascus. Human nature must be made like unto the glorified humanity of Jesus. And this is the final purpose of the grace of God.

St. John said: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." It is for God to say just how we are to be made like his Son, but the work itself is no more unreasonable than the work of a chemist, who in his laboratory can so transmute gold as apparently to destroy every semblance of the metal, and then restore it to its original state and purity, or who may so eliminate the foreign particles and dross from the quartz as to present nothing but the unalloyed gold. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." To make the body fit for the kingdom of heaven every particle of gross humanity is to be eliminated. Only by that process can man's nature be made like unto the glorious body of our ascended Lord. The glorified body is a spiritualized body, built after the model of the glorified Son of God. This is the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

PERSONAL.

Rev. R. S. Isbell asks us to change his address from Grayson, La., to Monticello, Ark., where he will reside in the future.

Rev. J. A. McKee, last year at Denver, has been appointed to Hoehne Colorado, and accordingly his Advocate will be sent to that place. His correspondents are asked to take notice.

Dr. J. A. Parker, who has spent several weeks at Gulfport, will return to his home, Benton, La., much improved in general health. His eyes, he says, "have not shared in this improvement."

In the report of Rev. J. S. Rutledge last week the types made him say "six persons united with the church." The figures should have been "forty-six." We make this correction in justice to Brother Rutledge.

Thanks to Rev. W. L. Hightower, Philadelphia, Miss., for the renewal of fourteen subscriptions, with the money. That is good work for the midsummer, the mercury ranging in the nineties nearly all the time.

Rev. H. M. Honeycutt, Downsville, La., has just closed a fine meeting at Ebenezer, one of his churches. He received fifteen persons into membership, and will soon organize a Sunday school and Epworth League.

Rev. A. I. Townsley, pastor of Second Church, New Orleans, has returned from a pleasant visit to his parents in Kentucky. The visit was not much of a vacation, as he kept all the time in hotter weather than he ever felt in Louisiana.

Mr. R. N. Jeffrey, favorably known among our churches in Louisiana, has associated himself with

Rev. W. H. Layton, of Kansas, as leader of song, and, with him, will hold meetings wherever invited. Brother Jeffreys is a fine leader.

We are under obligation to Rev. W. L. Linfield, Vicksburg, Miss., for much good work in behalf of this Advocate—ten subscriptions, with promise of more to follow soon.

Rev. J. B. Williams gives notice of the death of Robert Hartwell Greer, son of Brother and Sister Hillard Greer, of Lisbon, La. The sorrowing parents have the sympathy and prayers of many friends. This is the first great sorrow of their lives.

As advised by a committee of the Oxford District Conference to inquire into and arrange for a district parsonage, Rev. J. D. Cunningham will move from Oxford to Holly Springs, and occupy the parsonage at that place, which was purchased years ago.

The colporter, Rev. G. W. Bachman, notwithstanding the "excessive heat," keeps in health and spirits, and he informs us that "business is good for the season." He sells good books, and takes subscriptions for our church literature. Winona, Miss.

Dr. John A. Rice, of Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans, instead of going North to the lakes and mountains for rest, preferred the breezes of the South, and sends us "greetings from over the gulf." His note is post-marked Habana, Republica de Cuba, Aug. 25, 1909.

Rev. L. D. Worsham, Mathiston, Miss., is rejoicing over the great work being done on his charge. His entire charge is blessed with good revivals, he doing all the preaching himself. Since the season opened he has preached forty-eight times. Brother Worsham proposes to carry a fine report to Conference.

Dr. Sawyer returned Monday from a week's meeting at Blackwater, on Rev. E. N. Sweeney's charge. He reports a good meeting with large and interested congregations in attendance. Brother Sweeney is recovering rapidly from his recent sickness and his prospects for a splendid year's work are good. He is greatly loved by his people.

Rev. E. C. Wilson sends us the following sad note: "Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Lenoir, of Amite, La., are greatly bereaved in the death of their bright and promising little daughter, Carrie Lawrence. The sad event occurred Sunday morning, Aug. 15, and the entire community is in deep sympathy with the stricken parents."

Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan sends us an appreciation of one of his dear friends, who was a friend of this editor as well. We had not, until the notice came, known that Captain Edwin S. Walton, of Sardis, Miss., had passed away. Dr. Sullivan tells us that he "mends very slowly." The body may be weak, but the strength of his mind shows no abatement.

Rev. R. P. Neblett has returned to Shelby, Miss., after a pleasant outing at Monteagle, Tenn., and Iuka, Miss., his old home. In a note to this office he says: "I spent the fourth Sunday in August with Rev. J. A. Bowen, at Holmes Street, Huntsville. He has a fine people. They are accomplishing great things. A beautiful church will soon be erected. We held an institute with his Sunday school workers and preached for him at 11 a.m. He sends loving greetings to his brethren and friends in Mississippi."

We present on our first page a well-executed likeness of a Methodist patriarch, James Ray, of Waldo, Miss. He is 84 years of age. He has been a Methodist seventy-two years, having united with the church seven years before the division in 1844. He has served sixty years as a steward, and has been a regular subscriber to the New Orleans Christian Advocate since its first issue. He has been faithful to God and his church all these years, and has never doubted his conversion. May it be light with him in the eventide!

Rev. W. L. Broom, Waterford, Miss., has just closed a fine meeting at old Pleasant Grove. The membership was greatly revived and nine persons added to the church. One of the greatest revivals in which this editor ever assisted was at Pleasant Grove. Rev. T. J. Gooch was the senior preacher and conducted the meeting. Some of the old members of the church there, we dare say, were converted at that meeting. Dr. W. C. Johnson, of precious memory, preached a series of fine sermons that produced lasting good.

Dr. Felix R. Hill was called to Shreveport Aug. 20 to conduct the funeral services of Mrs. Amelia Ford McCutchen, the beloved wife of Mr. S. B. McCutchen. Dr. Hill says: "She entered into rest Friday afternoon, Aug. [illegible], after a long and prostrating illness. Mrs. McCutchen was a life-long Methodist, and one of the oldest and most devoted members of our First Church, Shreveport. She was a lady of rare intellectual gifts, and of the highest Christian character. To no two people in north Louisiana does the cause of Methodism owe more than to this excellent woman and her noble husband, who survives her. For him and for their sons and daughters there are loving sympathies and earnest prayers in this time of their unspeakable bereavement."

DEATH OF MRS. T. S. SLIGH.

Dear Dr. Boswell: This morning at 10:15 o'clock (Aug. 30), Mrs. T. S. Sligh, wife of Prof. T. S. Sligh, died, after a brief illness, of malarial fever, in Baton Rouge. She was attended by local physicians, also her brother, Dr. Calhoun. At 5 o'clock, after a short funeral service conducted by Rev. J. M. Henry, of the First Church, the remains were taken to Mansfield, La., for interment. Brother Sligh has our profound sympathy. Quite a large family of children are left to mourn; fortunately, however, most of them are grown. Sister Sligh was a great woman and has left her impress on every community where she has lived. A large circle of friends here in Baton Rouge are shocked at her untimely end. Fraternally yours in Christ, H. S. JOHNS.

AS TO WHAT BROTHER SHIPMAN SAID.

Mr. Editor: I see your correction in the current number of your paper of what Brother Shipman said regarding W. A. Bowlin's art of beating the devil, etc. The truth of the matter is this, your printer did not make it "beat," or "best," but "bust." Thus: "Bowlin has an art of busting the devil out of a soul." At least that is the way my copy has it. So, I inferred that Brother Shipman had fallen into the strong figure of speech of "the quarters," where we hear daily the irate threat: "You, John Henry, ef yo' don't have yo'self, I'se gwinter bust the devil outin you." Both your correction and Brother Shipman's explanation seem tame when compared to the first print, and I move that the first picturesque language stand. W. P. BARTON.

We accept Dr. Barton's motion. Brother Shipman will, we feel sure.—Editor.

"WORK DAY" FOR THE LOUISIANA METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

In accordance with the custom of the past two years, Saturday before the fourth Sunday in September is "Work Day" for the Orphanage. It is sincerely hoped that every Methodist Sunday School in the State will observe the day. Two years ago but a small number of the Sunday Schools kept "Work Day," and only a small sum was realized. Last year about one-third of the Sunday Schools rallied to this call and the Orphanage realized about $[illegible]. If every Sunday School in the Conference would respond to this appeal it would doubtless mean $5000 for the Orphanage. With this help I am almost confident that we could lift the debt from our Orphanage before Conference. What a God-send this would be to our great work, and the untold good that we could accomplish, is beyond our imagination.

Brother pastor, in the name of the most pitiable aspect of suffering humanity, I appeal to you to urge every Sunday School under your care to observe "Work Day." It cannot but help you and your school. It will certainly stir your younger people to greater activity. It will create in them a kindlier disposition toward the suffering. It will deepen their consecration to God and the Church. It will help the only institution of the kind we have in the Conference. Urge every child, every member of the Sunday School and of the Church to join with the children and make this the greatest feature-day of the Conference year. You will not lose your reward."

It is a peculiar fact that those that have responded hitherto to this great call have been the smaller Sunday Schools. But few of our larger schools and churches have helped. I appeal especially to the larger Sunday Schools. Give the children a chance. They will gladly respond to this appeal. Don't deny them the privilege that must ever give them increasing satisfaction to know that they have had a part in the erection and equipment of our Orphanage—an institution that will for the unnumbered years, in the name of the great Methodist Church, continually contribute to the uplifting and saving force of our great Church. Help us, brother.

This is an emergency call. Our debt now approximate $11,000; $4640 of this debt is due in November, and $[illegible] in January. Our work is hampered as long as we have this debt. We must restrict our operations. Many calls for help must be denied. Our hearts are grieved, deeply grieved, at the bitter, distressed cry of the homeless and destitute child. And God knows there are many, all too many, such appeals. How painful it is to refuse shelter, food and clothing to these "little ones" is hard for those to realize who are not constantly confronted with the problem. Let us be in a position to reach and help all cases possible. Let the great Methodist Church of Louisiana do her part. If the Sunday School superintendents, pastors and Christian people will rally to this call for help, we will not fear the result. OBSERVE "WORK DAY," September 25.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE TRAINING SCHOOL

On the first of September the regular exercises of the fall session begin, and we are hoping to have a large patronage accorded this junior educational institution, owned by Mississippi Methodist people, and largely dependent upon them for patronage. A well-equipped building and a strong faculty under my direction make it possible for the Training School to render superior service to the boys and girls who shall study with us here. The location is in the healthful hill country. The discipline is kind, but firm. No baseball or football games are allowed, but daily calisthenic exercise is required. As president, I am careful to admit and retain in the school only such pupils as are cheerfully obedient and courteous. We prepare students to enter any college. Our rates are remarkably low. Board, with furnished room and fuel, costs $2.50 a week. Tuition is $30, one-half in advance. All other fees total $5. Books are furnished at cost for cash. We grant testimonials of graduation only to students completing satisfactorily the studies required in the Academic, High School, Piano and Business Courses. Students can enter at any time, but it is best for those who enter early. Let prayer be made for us by the Church. W. A. BETTS, President.

FROM SIMMESPORT, LA.

I was appointed by Bishop Ward to the new charge (Bell City) last Conference, and labored with those [illegible] select" folk until in March, when I was taken seriously ill with [illegible] (lock-jaw); but the Lord [illegible] yet for me to do, and graciously [illegible] life. I never will [illegible] kind-hearted and noble people for their unbounded service and sympathy during my ilness.

While in north Louisiana, convalescing (being nervously prostrated) having partially recovered, and on the eve of the resumption of my work at Bell City, news was received that Bishop Ward had changed me to the Simmesport Charge, which had been abandoned by L. F. Grigsby. I deplored very much leaving the good people of Bell City, but a change for my health necessitated my removal. We arrived at Simmesport the 11th of June (the day following my appointment), and preached at Woodside the second Sunday.

The people on the whole charge have received us very kindly and enthusiastically, and were elated over the fact that they were only a week without a pastor. While unwell and very weak since coming to the work, we have succeeded in getting things fairly well reorganized, and the work looks up. This is a fine people, and they been served by some of our best preachers. They have shown every kindness to the present pastor, and seem to be deeply interested in his [illegible] along all lines, and we are delighted with them.

The former pastors may be glad to [illegible] good news of a revival at Bay Hills (one of our appointments). The meeting closed out on Tuesday night after the third Sunday in August. The pastor did the preaching. This is said to have been by the leading folks of the community, the greatest meeting ever held at Bay Hills. The congregations were splendid from the beginning, and at the close the house was filled to overflowing. The interest was excellent and one remarkable feature was the attendance of [illegible] Catholics, numbering at the closing service over fifty. Quite a few came up and expressed themselves as being delighted with the services, and an awakening is apparent among them.

The church was greatly benefited; backsliders reclaimed, and sinners converted; and the old erroneous idea that a pastor cannot hold his own revival meetings was exploded. There were eight additions on profession of faith, two of whom were Catholics. Among those who are prominent in the community, who joined the church were such men as Jim Hardie, Lambert Redman. In this the pastors who have labored here will rejoice with us.

The writer, assisted by Brother Brown, (presiding elder), held a few day's meeting at Jacoby, which was [illegible] successful. Brother Brown came to the assistance of the sick pastor and preached from Friday night until Sunday night, when the meeting closed.

The presiding elder held our third Quarterly Conference on Saturday. The reports showed that the work was progressing. Our "beloved's" stay was helpful and very much appreciated. The Alexandria District has an energetic and consecrated presiding elder, who has the work at heart and well in hand; who does not come and hold Quarterly Conference between trains, and leave, but spends some time with preacher and people.

We are praying and hoping for a continuation of the blessings of the Lord on the Simmesport Charge. Brethren, pray for us.

A. R. HOFFPAUIR.

P. S.—I am working for the dear old Advocate; will send a club of not less than ten subscribers before Conference. A. R. H.

Simmesport, La., Aug. 21, 1909.

MANY, LA.

We closed to-day a good revival at Many. Thirteen were added to the church: twelve on profession of faith and one by certificate. Brother A. C. Holder, our pastor at Leesville, did the preaching and did it well. No better help have I ever had in a meeting than Brother Holder. Brother R. E. Huston, of Windsor, Mo., a consecrated singer, led the singing and we recommend him to any one who may need a singer.

We have had twenty-eight accessions to the church on the work this year. Our work is in good condition. We have a fine people and we are expecting still greater things from the Lord.

I hope to soon send in a club of subscribers to the Advocate.

REVIVAL AT FERNWOOD.

On Monday after the third Sunday in June, was the beginning of a great meeting in Fernwood. Rev. W. M. Sullivan, of Centenary Church, McCom[illegible] did the preaching, and to say that was well done, very poorly express[illegible] it.

The first sermon was appropriate and demonstrated beyond a doubt that the right man was at the helm. Every service was powerful and wonderful in first-class results. The [illegible] lasted ten days, and there were [illegible] hundred and sixty public prayers. We had a number of extraordinary answers to prayers. We had more than twenty accessions and a large [illegible] of conversions.

The Fernwood Lumber Company, at this place, is run in Jesus' name. A beautiful church built for the Methodists last year, and one also for the Baptists. The company has put a church on wheels for the benefit of the men and their families in the woods. No man ever had a better appointment than this preacher. I can't move this winter unless I can have good luck in selling my potatoes, cotton, and corn.

Our revival for this place will begin next Sunday. Our presiding elder has filled all of his appointments with us and has been a great blessing to my people.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on mouthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

CARTHAGE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: [illegible] August [illegible] Wesley [illegible] God [illegible] Satin Weeks [illegible] was [illegible] in full force [illegible] us from [illegible] heavenly [illegible] be unto God, we were [illegible] power [illegible] until his evil influence [illegible] at least, and to show to the world that God is love, and that love is power. Brother Mellard was at his best, and those who [illegible] can truthfully say that he did [illegible] preaching. His sermons, [illegible] from the first, improved [illegible] Thursday night they were [illegible] the best I ever heard. I think [illegible] conviction proved too much for [illegible] until Wednesday night when we [illegible] a very fine altar service, and [illegible] than doubled in numbers [illegible] the following night. We finally [illegible] received eleven accessions, ten by baptism, several family altars [illegible] quite a number of conversions. [illegible] tized five infants and will have more to baptize at our next [illegible] here, and probably receive [illegible] members.

No one but another pastor [illegible] know how I feel over this meeting. [illegible] more prayer and [illegible] than any church I have ever served except one—on account of [illegible] falling in [illegible] less and all pasters know how my heart now rejoices in God [illegible]

A prayer meeting [illegible] the two [illegible] odist and Baptist, and [illegible] [illegible] congregations [illegible] known for a number [illegible] the early part of July [illegible] the latter part of September [illegible] will begin a meeting at [illegible] with Rev. C. N. Guice to do [illegible] preaching, and from there to Carthage. Pray for us, that we have [illegible] meeting at each place, conversions of souls, and [illegible] shouts as we had in Rocky [illegible] May God bless the Advocate and its readers.

A LAYMAN'S REPORT.

The spirit of religious fervor is manifesting itself in the churches of Longtown Charge.

Our beloved pastor, Rev. W. V. Shearer, planned a series of seven protracted meetings for the summer's work. The first occurred at Longtown. Rev. R. H. B. [illegible], of Starkville, preached the glad tidings with power and endeared himself to us for all time. Rev Jesse Earnheart, of N. C., assisted. He is a revelation. The results of the meeting were good. There were twelve conversions, with ten accessions to the church. The church was somewhat stirred. It needed some beating, perhaps.

The good work is still in progress. Rev. W. S. Lagrone, the Conference Evangelist, is now with Brother Shearer. There has been about fifty conversions to date.

The church at Longtown was wrecked by a storm last spring. Thanks to God and the liberal spirits who sent us donations, we have a substantial church, with an indebtedness of only $150, due Dec. 20, 1909. The Lord takes care of his own.

The church is peculiarly remiss in its duty to the church organ, the New Orleans Christian Advocate. "Me too." I send check to cover cost of a year's subscription. Come on, brother, and do likewise.

F. E. P. DANIEL.

HARPERVILLE CHARGE.

Our series of meetings began on Sunday, Aug. 1, at Hillsboro Church, with Rev. W. J. Dawson, of Morton, Miss., doing the preaching. Our meeting was a success, the church greatly revived; much interest manifested in all the services. Seven were added to the church which will greatly strengthen it numerically, as well as financially. All were young people that joined the church, and a long, useful life seems to be promised all of them. The only hope of the world is to save the young people and the children for God and the churches. By so doing, the church and God will get the entire life of the individual and their influence will all be for good and the upbuilding of Christ's kingdom on earth.

Brother Dawson preached with power and effectiveness, the preaching proved to be the savor of life unto life, and not of [illegible] death.

Our Children's Day exercises were held at Harperville Church Aug. 8, and by the way, I might say right here that it was the first observance of Children's Day that the M. E. Church, South people ever had in Harperville. The children all did well—they recited their beautiful and instructive pieces to the approbation of all present. We had a delightful children's service, a splendid audience in attendance to witness one of the best children's services that the writer ever had the pleasure of beholding. The [illegible] of the exercises did their work well in training the children for the occasion. After the noon-day meal, we reconvened in the church and heard a very fine sermon delivered by Rev. H. Millard, of Forest, Miss.

At night Sunday Aug. 8, we preached, or rather we began our annual meeting at Oak Grove Church, Rev. H. Millard did the preaching and he did it well. His efforts were blessed by a goodly number being added to the church and the church was greatly revived, and everyone that attended the services seemed to be benefited by their coming to the Lord's house.

May God bless the Advocate and its many readers; and Doctor, I pray that God may let you live many years yet to serve the church and the good cause that you represent in your present relation to the church.

It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly---read letter below:

Brookside, Ala., May 4, 1903.

The two physicians here had 3 very obstinate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months' standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johnson's Tonic. I removed all the printed wrapper and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle as a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

September 5. Multiplication by Division. Mark vi, 35-44. (Chapter Rally Day and Installation of Officers.)

The throngs had pressed upon the Master and his disciples until they had no time or opportunity to eat. The Christ called his disciples apart into a desert place to rest awhile. The throngs seemed to find out his destination in some way, and they actually outwent them and were awaiting when the little company disembarked from their boat. The Lord had compassion on the multitudes and taught them many things. When the day was far spent the disciples wanted to send the multitudes into the neighboring villages to buy themselves bread, but the Master said: "Give ye them to eat." The best that the disciples could suggest was to buy two hundred pennyworth of bread, which would probably have swamped their scant treasury, and have been an inadequate supply for the multitude.

But a small boy was there with five loaves and two small fishes. These loaves and fishes the Master took, blessed them and brake and gave to the disciples, and the disciples to the people. When all the people had eaten all they wanted from this scant store, there was twelve baskets of fragments left.

Something of this same thing has been true with the Master's disciples ever since. When they have freely used their means with unselfish thought, the power to do and the means to do with has multiplied in the hands of his servants. Men have sometimes tried to make merchandise out of their charities and come to grief; but the heart that gives to its apparent undoing has found that strangely the Lord supplied the means of doing. He has repeated untold times the story of the cruse of oil that failed not, and the barrel of meal that was not emptied.

There is not only for us a lesson of generous giving, but also one of faith in the power of our Lord. When we measure the results we seek, by the means at our command, we often falter, but he who multiplies the loaves and fishes will help his servants when their apparent resources fail. The men and women who have accomplished great things for the Lord will tell you of the hours when faith has been tried to the uttermost, and when it did not seem possible to go forward, but faith removed the mountains of difficulty. A dying child placed in a minister's hands a toy savings bank, and required a pledge from him that he would build a church. He tried to avoid a direct promise, but nothing else would satisfy the dying one. At last he promised, and the little one fell asleep satisfied. The minister told the child's desire, and the story of the savings bank, and men who had taken little thought of the evident need gave freely of their means, and the minister kept to the letter the pledge made to this dying one.

BAKER, LA.

Dear Doctor Boswell: We are making good progress on the Baker Circuit; have held two meetings, one at Baker and Deerford. Rev. Thomas M. Buley, of Plaquemine, assisted me at Baker. This meeting was well attended and resulted in three accessions to the church and the membership greatly strengthened. Brother Buley won the hearts of this people.

The second Sunday we began at Deerford, the writer preaching at 11 a. m., and 8 p. m., and on Monday at 11 a. m., and Tuesday at 11 a. m. On Monday and Tuesday night our presiding elder, Rev. C. C. Miller, was with us and preached two strong sermons, and Rev. J. H. Williams, of Headland, Ala., arrived Wednesday and preached twice a day till Tuesday night. While the weather was unfavorable in the beginning of the meeting the people attended well, and on the windup great crowds—more than could be seated—attended the services. This was considered the best meeting held there in many years. There were fifteen accessions to the church and a large number reclaimed. We baptized five infants.

We begin at Blackwater next Sunday. Rev. Jno. T. Sawyer, D.D., will assist us at that point. The Blackwater congregation, headed by Mrs. Robt. Heausy, pounded the preacher recently, which we appreciated very much. Pray for us.

Her faith was unshaken, her fortitude admirable, her resignation beautiful. A few moments before passing over the river she affirmed her belief that Jesus would [illegible] her through the valley of death, and expressed her willingness to go. Her funeral service was conducted by the writer, assisted by W. W. Mitchell. She leaves a father, mother, two brothers, and seven sisters to mourn their loss. Her elder brother is Rev. J. A. McKee, at present pastor of Morrison Memorial Church, Denver, in whom she felt special interest for his work's sake. May all her loved ones emulate her beautiful example, and meet her again where death and parting will be no more.

W. G. BURKS.

Miss MARIE ELLIS. To the person who lacks imagination, or spiritual perception, death is the mere painful, heartrending, dull passing into black night. To that world-old question, "If a man die, shall he live again," faith has given an answer that rings down the ages. These thoughts come to me through my tears. I look towards the blue ether, where my childish faith taught me heaven lies and where good people go when they die. I am looking for the soul of my dear pupil and friend, Marie Ellis. [illegible] many times have I looked into [illegible] her pure soul lookin[illegible] faithful, wholly [illegible] But [illegible] ether shows her [illegible]. She is beyond. She has become one of the host of sweet spirits that minister around the great white throne. A girl graduate. Is there anything God ever made more promising? I am told she was a leader for Christian living among her friends and classmates. No cant, no hypocrisy, not simply words, but deeds. She had the rare grace of Christian living. Why did God take her away? I am not a philosopher, or a theologian; I have seen my own flesh and blood go silently back to that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveller returns, and thinking now of what I [illegible] on, I believe God let her live and die for the benefit of others. This is God's way. The bloom fades, but the fruit comes therefrom; the seed dies, but the plant grows; animals die, but man lives therefrom; the man dies, but his memory lives. This is a law of nature and being of nature is also of God. Is there one whose life came in contact with hers who was not blessed? Are not our lives, our conceptions, our memories enriched by her sweet living? Surely. The bride of death the sweet girl was. I never see a beautiful young woman die that I do not think she is [illegible] of death. But she is merely passing into a more beautiful, a more eternal, a more spiritual form. Why is it [illegible] [illegible] four [illegible] [illegible] S[illegible] trusted. [illegible] [illegible] of the shad[illegible] [illegible] Her [illegible] [illegible] expressed [illegible] No [illegible] from a [illegible] [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] in her [illegible] to the [illegible] of her Master, [illegible] the flowers, typical of [illegible] purity of her life, she [illegible] away to stay with the angels. There is so [illegible] in her life as a school girl which may well afford us food for [illegible] young people [illegible] that service to God takes from them all [illegible] happiness, all those [illegible] pleasures which we usually associate with young life. Not so. None was [illegible] a more [illegible] Christian than Marie. [illegible] more [illegible] of us also think that we must wait until we are settled in life to serve God, thinking that our example is not [illegible] Marie's life proves that [illegible] should do the simple service and leave the rest to God. No words of mine [illegible] to [illegible] the dull heartache of the circle of loved ones; no sympathy [illegible] will [illegible] their tears [illegible] love [illegible] will bring [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] light [illegible] and happiness for all [illegible] no flowers kept blooming [illegible] the little mound out in the silent city of the dead will make less [illegible] the anguish of our bereavement; no marble, though of Parian [illegible] will fill an empty chair at the fireside, but [illegible] God, who made and loveth all, has taken her away beyond the [illegible] and he expects us to meet her in the sweet by-and-by."

GEO. G. HURST.

ANTHONY LARKINS HOLT was born March 12, 1836, and passed to the land of peace June [illegible] 1909. This briefly may be indicated the boundary lines of our brother's life on earth, but concerning his character we do not feel competent to pay him the tribute his pure life merits. In early life he gave his heart to God, and so complete was the surrender of himself, so sincere his consecration to the cause of righteousness, so genuine his devotion to duty, so humble his profession of discipleship, that no one could doubt his acceptance with God. He was a Methodist of "the old school." He loved his church and her doctrines; he was loyal to his pastor; he was able in prayer. No sacrifice was too great for him when his church or his fellowman had need of his time or his goods. His life was pure and unselfish, his faith simple and childlike, his ideals high and [illegible] his character spotless. His [illegible] the preacher's home, his time [illegible] He never murmured nor complained; was buoyant in joy and submissive in pain. The eighteen months of suffering and weakness just preceding his departure from earth was endured with a resignation expressed in the words, "Thy will be done." Brother Holt was a patriot as well as a Christian. He gave four years of service to his country, serving in the gallant Third Mississippi Regiment until honorably discharged. He was a faithful lover of wife and children, a true husband, a noble father, a protector and counselor in whom the family trusted—loved in life and lamented in death. A widow, six sons, and four daughters survive our brother, but they do not mourn [illegible] have no hope. May the Spirit of God lead the sorrowing ones so that no clouds may ever obscure their pathway; and may the peace of God be theirs always, is the prayer of their former pastor.

J. W. CAMPBELL.

Sister SARAH ANN VIGOUROUX (nee Merrill) was born in Green[illegible] Miss., Oct. 30, 1843, and died [illegible] Miss., July 30, 1909, in [illegible] of the Christian faith. [illegible] 1870, she was married [illegible] Vigouroux, to this union [illegible] children, four of whom [illegible] [illegible] Clarence, with the devoted [illegible] mourn because of her [illegible] [illegible] the past eighteen years [illegible] consistent member of the [illegible] Church, and more especially [illegible] three years during which the writer was her pastor. For [illegible] two years she was a great [illegible] but notwithstanding [illegible] attend Sunday School and [illegible] and always bore her suffering and affliction with Christian [illegible] resignation. It was the [illegible] with her during [illegible] last hours, and while [illegible] to part with her devoted husband and loving children, who she called about her bedside, one by one, [illegible] expressed a readiness and willingness to go, and said the way was clear. The sorrowing husband said to the writer as she was going down into the valley, "She has always been a good woman and a faithful wife." After the funeral services from the Scranton Methodist Church, we laid her body to rest in the Pascagoula Cemetery, to await the resurrection morn. May the sorrowing ones look to the [illegible] of all comfort in this dark hour, and live so as to be with her [illegible] where parting words shall not be spoken, and where God himself [illegible] wipe away all tears [illegible] eyes.

T. B. COTTRELL.

The subject of this sketch, JOHN WILLIAM MILLER, was born Dec. 22, 1878, in Grenada County, Miss., and died July 26, 1909, in Melrose, N. Mex. He was the son of P. M. and Fannie H. Miller. They were devoted Christians and faithful members of the Methodist Church, consequently their children were brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Dr. Miller, early in life, professed faith in Christ and joined the Methodist Church, in which he lived a consistent Christian until his death. He chose the medical profession for his life's work. He graduated from a Memphis, Tenn., medical college and went to Oklahoma to practice his profession, where he did about four years of successful practice, when he was stricken with that fatal malady, consumption. He went to New Mexico hoping in that salubrious climate to regain his health, but no power could stay that dread disease, and he had to succumb. Dr. Miller was a man of splendid native intellect, and this, together with a high sense of honor, constituted him a young man of splendid parts. How sad, with such bright prospects of life and usefulness to be cut short by death, but God, our Maker, knows best, and by-and-by we will see that it was best. His disease-stricken body rests now in mother dust, but the soul, which is the real man, has taken flight to that glorious building of God not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, where his pious father and [illegible] mother, together with three angelic sisters, had preceded him. Now they are together never to be separated. It will not be long, if faithful to their Lord, until the rest of the company of his loved ones will arrive and then sad parting will be no more.

Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom has removed from our midst Mrs. [illegible] Carraway, be it resolved by the ladies of the Home Mission Society of Tchula, Miss.:

First. That while we bow in humble submission to his will, we recognize that our church and our society has lost a zealous and an efficient worker. Her influence will remain long among those who labored with her.

Second. That to her family we extend our heartfelt sympathy, and beg them to look for consolation to him who alone can comfort them in their sorrow.

Third. That copies of these resolutions be sent to the home paper and to the New Orleans Advocate for publication, and that a copy be furnished the daughter of the deceased.

HER DUTY

"I feel it my duty," writes Mrs. Martha Dingus, of Lykins, Ky., "to inform you what Cardui has done for me. I have been a chronic invalid for years. I reckon I have had about every ailment that women are heir to. I have doctored a great deal with a great many doctors, as we have traveled a great deal in search of health, yet received but little benefit and got no better.

"Four months ago I commenced to use Cardui, and since then have been steadily improving all the time. I am now 46 years old, and am in better health than I have been in 20 years, and I give Cardui the credit for it."

Cardui has been known, during the past [illegible] years, as a reliable, effective remedy for the ailments peculiar to women. It is a pure, non-intoxicating preparation, made exclusively from vegetable ingredients, having a special curative effect on the female system. Cardui has been found to relieve pain and restore disordered functions to health.

If you're ill, don't wait until you have suffered for years before taking Cardui to relieve you. Isn't it your duty to spare yourself this pain? Get Cardui at once. All reliable druggists sell it.

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 5, 1909.

PAUL'S THIRD MISSIONARY JOURNEY—FAREWELLS.

Golden Text: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."—Phil. iv. 13.

After the riot at Ephesus, Paul thought best to go away, for his presence might bring [illegible] involve his friends, as he had made friends in all classes, even among the chief men of Asia there were those concerned for his welfare. So he took his departure to Macedonia, where he felt he would be received with much courtesy [illegible] and affection. No details are given as to his points of visitation, but going over those parts, as the Scripture saith, he gave much exhortation, and then came down into Greece. Some say the city of Corinth is meant, and there he remained three months.

His plan was [illegible] of Cenchrea, but [illegible] the Jews heard of [illegible] for him to do him [illegible] he retraced his steps [illegible] Macedonia. This far he had been [illegible] by the representatives of [illegible] churches in that [illegible] country where he had [illegible] and established [illegible]. New [illegible] friends, went on before and waited at Troas, while Paul stopped at Philippi to bring Luke with [illegible] all were [illegible] had been revealed to Paul that he would never [illegible] in those parts again.

His stay at the places in the line of his journey was short, for he was in haste to arrive at Jerusalem by Pentecost. On this voyage down the coast of the Aegean Sea two notable incidents occurred that are worthy of study, else they would not have been mentioned so minutely in the Scripture. One was the raising to life again the young man Eutychus at Troas, which would be a lasting impression of the power of Jesus' name over death itself, and would be remembered in connection with Paul's all-night sermon to them. The other incident was his farewell address to the elders of Ephesus, delivered at Miletus, at which place they all met by appointment. It is this discourse that is the subject of our Scripture study in this day's lesson. The words as we read them, and know who spoke them, and to whom they were spoken, seem like a loving reminder that the speaker wished to be always remembered as having done his full duty. He calls them brethren, and is telling them of things they already know, for they always had been fellow-sufferers under all persecution. He shows his strong affection for his own people, the Jews, even when he tells of their cruelty to him, with tears and temptations, but his recourse always was his humility of mind in serving the Lord. Paul was well known among the Jews; they knew of his being reared as a Pharisee, with all the pride of self-righteousness characteristic of that class; yet in all things he followed the meek and lowly Jesus. Then he reminds them, his assembled brethren in Christ, how he had done his duty to them, both as a preacher in teaching them publicly, and as a pastor in the Lord's work from house to house.

The salvation of the Jews was a heavy burden on Paul's soul. He was ever mindful that Israel, as God's chosen, should be preached to first, and he was full of bitterness when, on every occasion, the gospel was to them a stumbling-block, and the Greeks, being led by them, thought it foolishness. He told his friends that notwithstanding this he continued to preach to them repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, and because they would not hear, and with this fact ever present with me, "I go bound in the Spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that await me there, save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me." "But," continued the Christian chieftain, "none of these things move me." What could they do to him that they had not done? It is true they could put him to death, and he had often thought of that, else why should he have said at one time, "I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better; or abide in the flesh, which is more needful for you." Thus accustoming himself with the thought, he continues, "Neither count I my life dear unto myself," only that he might be allowed to finish the great commission given unto him with joy, that he might complete the ministry which he received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God. Then, seeing the future with a prophet's vision, he admonishes his hearers of needed watchfulness over the flock over which the Holy Ghost had made them overseers, to feed the church of God, which He has purchased with His own blood. Then, with love and earnestness, he warned them of dangers that might arise in their very midst. It was like the solemn occasion of the last supper, when the Master had gathered about him the twelve, each one of whom was supposed to be loyal and true, as he said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, one of you shall betray me." What a charge to those who are leaders in the church! Not to pastors only, but to all who by the example of a pious life have been selected to fill various official positions. The only safe course for all is the keeping of Paul's closing words: "I commend you to God and the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified."

How could the Ephesian elders ever forget these loving and earnest words? So to more deeply impress them with his sincerity, Paul knelt down there on the seashore and prayed with them all. After the prayer they all wept, and fell upon Paul's neck and kissed him, "sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more."

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE.

The joint committee announces that the Sunday School Superintendents Institute, to be held under the auspices of the Sunday School Board of the North Mississippi and the Mississippi Conferences of the M. E. Church, South, will be held at Meridian, Miss., beginning Wednesday night, Sept. 22, and closing Friday noon, Sept. 24.

Dr. and Mrs. Hamill, of Nashville, Tenn., will have charge of the Institute, which of itself is a guarantee that it will be of the very highest order. Dr. Hamill is a superintendent of the Training Department of the Methodist Church, South, and Dean of the Monteagle Training School, while his wife is one of the best primary workers in the country.

Mr. E. N. French, superintendent of the Supply Department of the M. E. Church, South, will also be on the program. He is one of the most successful Sunday School superintendents in the South, and is unexcelled as a leader of congregational singing. Mr. French will have on exhibit samples of his Sunday School supplies of all kinds, which alone is worth a trip to Meridian to see.

Rev. W. IMPORTANCE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

By Miss Della Pittman.

Foreign missions is the most important subject we could undertake to discuss. Just think of the importance of one soul, and then think of the many, many souls that are perishing in the foreign field for the want or need of the gospel. God is working for the salvation of the world, and if we are like him we will work for the salvation of the world also. The first petition is the missionary's prayer. It looks to the reign of Christ in all the earth, when the hoary customs of superstition and the hell-empowered hosts of sin shall be crushed beneath the chariot wheels of the conquering Christ. It has been promised him that he shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the rivers unto the ends of the earth. Again, it is said, "The earth shall be be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." The promise is made to him: (Christ) "Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." Now, how shall this be done? How shall Jesus have the uttermost parts for his possession, that he may reign from the rivers unto the ends of the earth? What power will he use to save men and bring in his triumphant reign of peace? The gospel is the power of God unto salvation, that is, it is the power that God uses to save. Hence, when Jesus said, "all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," he immediately added, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations," yea, "go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, and lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." These show us that God is aiming to cast out sin, drive back the devil's dark legions, and subdue the world under Jesus by the gospel. The work to be done is great, hence we hear the Master say, "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers unto the harvest." If the harvest be reaped the laborers must go forth. If we have the spirit of Christ, we have the missionary fire in our hearts, for Jesus was the first and greatest missionary; he has undertaken the subjugation and salvation of the world, and the gospel is his chosen agency. All who receive its benefits owe it to the balance of the world, therefore, we must Christianize that is, we must put forth every effort to send the gospel to every soul, or we must perish by our own prosperity. If we do not, short will be our race from the cradle to the grave. If in our haste to be rich and mighty we outrun our literary and religious institutions, they will never overtake us, or only come up after the battle of liberty is fought and lost, as spoils to grace and victory and as resources of inexorable despotism for the perpetuity of our bondage. But what will become of the world if her prosperity rushes up to such a majesty of power, while those great institutions linger which are necessary to form the mind and the conscience of the vast world. It must not be permitted and yet what is done must be done quickly, for population will not wait. Our alliance of blood and political institution and common interest is such that we cannot stand aloof in the hour of her calamity. Her destiny is our destiny! And the day her gallant ship goes down our little boat will sink in the vortex. We know the work is a vast one, and of great difficulty, yet, it must be done.

We did not in the darkest hours believe that God had brought our fathers to this goodly land to lay the foundation of religiousu liberty, and wrought, such wonders in their preservation and raised their descendants to such heights of civil and religious liberty, only to reverse the analogy of his providence and abandon his work and though there now be clouds and the sea roaring, and men's hearts failing, we know there is light behind the cloud, and that the imminence of our danger is intended, under the guidance of heaven, to call forth and apply a holy fraternal fellowship between the East and the West, which shall secure our preservation and make the prosperity of our nation durable as time, and abundant as the waters of the sea. Heathen are coming to our shores by the thousands every year. The Panama canal now being cut will bring the Far East right to our doors, and millions of heathen people will come to our country and we must Christianize them before they come or they will heathenize us; therefore, if we fail in this great work, our destruction will be as signal as the birthright abandoned, the mercies abused and the provocations offered to beneficent heaven. The descent to desolation will correspond with the past elevation, no punishments of heaven are so severe as those for mercies abused; and no instrumentality employed in their inflictions is so dreadful as the wrath of God. No spasms are like the spasms of expiring duties, and no wailing such as her convulsions extort. It took Rome three hundred years to die, and our death if we perish, will be as much more terrific as our intelligence and free institutions have given us more bone, sinew, and vitality. May God hide from me the day when the dying agonies of my country shall begin. O, thou beloved land, bound together by the ties of brotherhood and common interest and perils, live forever, one and undivided. "There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek for the same Lord over all, is rich unto all that call upon him. Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed, and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?" Christ bids his disciples his followers in all ages to preach his gospel to every creature. They cannot hear of him in all the world, so as to believe in him unto salvation without the preaching of his word. They cannot hear without a preacher. Now hear the final question, which drives the truth home to all of our hearts who do not go abroad unto the nations that are dying withut the knowledge of Jesus. How shall they preach except they be sent? Sin costs more than religion. Bad habits cost far more than the most liberal giving to God's cause, if we count money, and what is more than money. Robbery of God is a horrible and undoing sin. Giving to God has a wonderful power to bind the life to him. Your salvation is a call. You were saved to serve. The expecting, unsatisfied Christ is a call of pathos, and sweetness. The billion Christless ones are a call—a call from a thousand million throats. Do you not hear them? The open door, the divine opportunity is a call and Christ bids us go. Should we refuse his biddings we might wake some day and find ourselves as Jonah did, swallowed up by a whale.

Shintoism, which has become the state religion in Japan, is not a religion at all, but a reverence for ancesters; Japan must have a religion, for no nation is likely to avoid decay unless its morals are reinforced by religion. If I had the authority to decide the question, I should send some of the leading men of each denomination to Japan to present Christianity to the uneducated Japanese. English is taught in the schools of Japan, and one can speak to the Japanese without aid of an interpreter. This proposition has been tested several times. While it would be an advantage to have a preacher who could speak the Japanese language, still it is more important that we should send our ablest divines there—men who can meet the most intelligent of the Japanese upon an equal footing, and defend before them the Christian philosophy of life. Japan is the gate-way of the Orient and to-day is exerting an influence upon China greater than the combined influence of all the European nations. Western civilization is likely to enter China through Japan: in fact, I believe that the Christian religion presented to the Chinese by the Japanese would spread more rapidly than if presented in any other way, for China has come to regard Japan as a leader of thought. More than 5000 Chinese students are now at school in Japan, and Japanese teachers are being more and more employed in China.

The Christian ideal of life is the highest ideal. There is no more beautiful conception of life than that it is an overflowing spring. There is no true measure of greatness except the Christian measure—namely, service. If this ideal is good enough for America it is good enough for all the world. If truth must, according to eternal laws, triumph then this ideal must triumph over all lower ones; and how can it triumph over lower ideals unless it is brought into contact with them. If we see a man following a low ideal and making but little of life, is it not a kindness to offer him a higher one which will not only multiply his usefulness, but his happiness as well. If the Christian ideal is worthy to be followed in America, it should be presented in every land, and experience has shown that it is an ideal capable of being made universal; for it has commended itself to people in every nation. But it is said we must not neglect home missions in our zeal to carry the gospel and its attendant blessings to foreign shores. This is a familiar objection, but as a rule, it is urged by those who do the least for home missions. I think in the efforts to help others one finds more improvement than could come from selfish contemplation of one's self alone. So, if we refuse to extend a helping hand to other lands until all its people have passed beyond the need of improvement, we'll do nothing for the world. An army equal to one-half the population of the United States of America waits for us. They came from the East and the West, all open and friendly to us, vexed with vague unrest and full of unvoiced questionings. We are their hope. We hold their destiny in our hands. We have the message to still their unrest, and answer their questionings. Shall we fail them? never! Let it not be said that a generation of Southern Methodists in the face of such a duty, grudged to these other sheep, astray in the wilderness, the poor boon of a street car fare a week, or withheld from them one out of each thousand of our membership to guide them to the fold. Then the joy of the Lord will be our strength and the angels of God will kiss away the cares and sorrows of time, and Jesus himself will make soft the bed of our death with the fulfilled promise of his presence, and the smiles of his love will lighten our pathway through the valley of death to the golden paved city, where those saved from many nations by our prayers and offerings will shout our welcome.

TO OUR AGENTS AND ABOUT CLUBS.

Every preacher in charge of a church in the bounds of the patronizing Conferences is recognized as an agent of the Advocate. We are willing for any one, on his own responsibility, to raise a club and send it in where it does not conflict with the work of the pastor, but the preacher in charge is our authorized agent.

The rate of the regular subscription has been fixed at $1.50, as you have seen in the many notices we have given. The rate of commission on either new subscribers or renewals, will be 10 per cent of the amount collected. For a subscription at the rate of $1.50 the agent who collects is authorized to retain 15 cents.

The club rate will remain from now until the sessions of the Annual Conferences—$1.25 on clubs of ten or more subscribers. The commission on the clubs will remain unchanged at 25 cents until Conference. These clubs do not have to be sent in all at one time, and the number may be added to indefinitely until your Annual Conference meets. We make no distinction between new and old subscribers in the clubs. The only conditions are that you secure enough subscribers to be entitled to the club rate, and that arrearages be paid.

Any preacher who so desires may give his subscribers in the club Go Forward, instead of retaining his commission. To make it more plain, if you send ten or more subscribers and $1.25 with each name we will send Go Forward if you make especial request for it.

When personal checks are sent or cashier's checks, add 10 cents to cover exchange. The banks charge 10 cents for collecting either the personal check or the cashier's check. Almost any bank where you have an account will give exchange on New Orleans or New York for the asking. If you will notice the receipts we are now sending out, we give receipt for the amount actually realized on the check in this office. In the case of small checks we will give credit on the subscription only as far as the amount actually realized will pay.

The reason that we have reduced the former commissions paid and the reason that we are watching so closely even the exchange that we have to pay on checks is that we have reduced the price of the Advocate, and there is no margin for unnecessary expense. Ten cents in one instance does not amount to much, but it may be the whole of the profit to us. When you multiply it by thousands, it becomes a serious matter, and we are cutting off all the margins in order to give all our subscribers the benefit.

DIRECTIONS.

Correspondents will please direct all communications intended for the Editor to 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La. Communications intended for the Business Department should be addressed to the Manager of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Write with ink, and only on one side of the paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after two weeks, notify us, and we will make it right. Papers will be continued unless subscribers order otherwise.

Glances at the World.

Before the expiration of President Roosevelt's term, and with his consent, Chief Forester Gifford Pinchot, of the Department of the Interior, withdrew from entry about a million acres of land, possessing valuable water-power sites, located, if we are not mistaken, in the far West. He did this in the interest of the people. But Mr. Ballinger, who succeeded to the Secretaryship of the Interior, countermanded the order. A storm of protest, such as he did not anticipate, immediately followed. It was too strong to resist, and Mr. Taft ordered Mr. Ballinger to withdraw the lands again, but too late, for within two weeks after Mr. Ballinger's countermanding order nearly all the water-power sites had been grabbed up by private interests. Mr. Ballinger's act did not allay the friction that for some reason had generated between himself and Mr. Pinchot. It doubtless strained the relations between them more than ever. The people's sympathy is with Mr. Pinchot. One of the great papers of the Northwest says: "The Secretary will find it difficult to make the public believe he was not actuated either by a too great friendliness for land speculators, or was hostile to Mr. Pinchot, either of which explanation ought to cause his retirement."

Nothing is unfairer than the practice of some secular papers in setting before their readers the statistics of the churches. Invariably when they publish the figures they make it appear that the Roman Catholic Church is the strongest Church in point of numbers in the United States. They never take time to say that the Roman Catholic Church counts every man, woman and child as a member, while Protestants count only those who are enrolled as communicants. The last United States census (1906) returns the Roman Catholics at 12,079,142. It gives the Methodists 5,749,838 members or communicants. That looks like the Roman Catholics outnumbered the Methodists more than two to one. It only seems so, for if the Methodists counted as do the Romanists, they would report more than 15,000,000 members, men, women and children. The communicants in all Protestant Churches in 1906 numbered 20,857,303. Counting like Roman Catholics, the Protestants numbered a little over sixty millions, or more than four times as many as Roman Catholics. But the Roman Catholics are increasing at more than double the rate of Protestants. This is owing entirely to the vast number of immigrants from Europe, nine-tenths of whom and more are Romanists.

The cost of maintaining the army and navy of the country is enormous, and constantly growing. The cost is on an average of $17 to every family of five in the United States. Nobody, we suppose, will deny the necessity for keeping up the army and navy, and other means of self-protection, but that a degree of extravagance is indulged in such matters few will dispute. And there are not a few who believe that armies and navies do not constitute a nation's strongest defense. In an address delivered to the farmer's union in Oklahoma by a leading railroad man, the speaker said. "It is better to build homes than it is to build battleships. The extension of the grain and the cotton fields in the Mississippi valley and in the west are stronger military defenses than are ships. We should spend more of the money we burn up in powder in making new farms. A forty-acre farm irrigated will comfortably support a family of five. It costs $55,000 to make a twelve-inch gun. This money would reclaim 1571 acres of land, providing homes for 196 people. When all the guns on all the battleships are shot one time the government blows off in noise and smoke the sum of $150,000. This would reclaim 4000 acres of land, giving homes to more than 500 farmers and their families. The money consumed in powder is lost for all future time." There is much good sense in these words.

Some years ago the United States purchased from Russia a vast territory called Alaska, at a nominal price, $7,000,000, we believe. This was regarded as extravagant for mountains of ice. But the Russians did not know what they were selling, nor did our authorities know what they were buying. Judge Wickersham the delegate from Alaska to Congress, in his plea for legislation in behalf of the territory, speaking of its resources, says: "We have more coal than Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio; more gold than California and Colorado put together; more copper than Montana and Michigan. Alaska is a most healthful place. The sick and the halt are not to be found there. Only vigorous, sturdy, progressive men have established themselves there and according to the census taken in 1900 we had a population of 63,592. Alaska covers an area of 600,000 square miles, every mile containing valuable mineral deposits. Alaska virtually feeds herself. When we get more people and more capital there and the immense territory is opened and properly worked, she will not only feed herself, but millions of other persons. We have discovered the quartz from which the placer gold comes. This means that the gold industry will be worked indefinitely in Alaska. A railroad is being built up Copper River. This will enable us to get our coal, copper and other minerals and agricultural products out to the Pacific. Alaska does not ask for money or appropriations. It has been a paying proposition from the start, and yet its profitable development is only beginning. The gold, of course, came first in process of exploration, but this is only a small part of its wealth. The copper, the coal, the lucrative fisheries and other forms of wealth are virtually inexhaustible."

"The prudent man foreseeth the evil and hideth himself." This saying of the wise man brings to mind the thoughtful act of a gentleman in Arkansas, who loaned a large sum of money to a firm just set up in business. About a year or more after starting, he discovered that the firm had introduced a line of liquors into their trade, and immediately he demanded the return of his money. He said the firm was "on the eve of breaking," and, besides, his money "should not go to help the liquor business." He was right. The firm soon failed. This was long before the agitation of state-wide prohibition. This text has been forced upon our attention within the past few days. A preacher was in our office last week, who had just ended a long journey over the railroad. On the route he fell into conversation with a gentleman who had been largely interested in a brewery. They naturally talked of prohibition and kindred subjects. The gentleman did not hesitate to express his opinion, or tell his business. He has not learned yet that the man he was talking with was a preacher, though he learned his position on the liquor question. The gentleman was frank to say that he was opposed to prohibition, and though his means had been invested in a brewery, he had withdrawn every dollar from the business, believing that the trade was doomed." "The fanatics, the preachers, and the church people, would prove too much for it." He expressed the opinion that "prohibition would carry in Louisiana in less than ten years." He is doubtless a true prophet, only he has given the liquor trade four years more of life than it will be permitted to enjoy. Other brewers would be wise to recognize the coming event which already casts its shadow, and provide against the evil day. If it finds them unprepared, they will have only themselves to blame.

Housekeeping may not only be reduced to an exact system, but in these latter days may be largely carried on by machinery. Even the sweeping may be done by electricity without stirring up any dust; Appleton's Monthly tells of a family of small means that conducts household affairs after the following fashion, the wife of course, being her own cook, maid and laundress: "On Monday the family wash, which has been soaking in soapy water all night, is put into a tub. She turns a switch; then cuddling baby in her lap she opens the morning paper and rocks and reads while the electric motor is swishing the soiled clothes back and forth in the washing machine. The first step of the laundering process finished, she rinses the automatically cleansed clothing in clear water, turns another switch, and feeds the moist cloth through the rubber rolls of the wringer, which is operated by the same motor that ran the washing machine. After the clothes are dried she irons them with electrical flatirons, and what was once a back-breaking, health-destroying form of drudgery has become almost a positive pleasure. The kitchen of this home has in it a gas stove, but it also has an electrical cabinet on which a goodly part of the meals are cooked. The cabinet is homemade, of dark stained wood, and on its broad shelf are several electrical "stoves," plates of iron in which are resistence coils that warm up to a cooking heat when the current is turned on. The electric oven stands on the floor when not in use, for it takes but an instant to screw the plug at the business end of its wire into the socket, and be ready to roast the Sunday leg of mutton. And all this in the house of a man who earns but $18 a week."

For the fiscal year ending June 30 last, the Government's expenses went $96,000,000 beyond its receipts. In commenting on this fact Leslie's Weekly says: "It was due solely and entirely to excessive expenditures in the operations of the government, and not to any falling off in the revenues. The government's income in 1908-09 was over $601,000,000, or more than $3,000,000 larger than in 1907-08, and with the exception of that of 1906-07, it was the largest on record. But there has been an addition of $112,000,000 in the past two years to the annual expenses of the government, so that the government is spending more annually than it did during the war with Spain. In 1896-97, the fiscal year before the Spanish-American War, the government expenditures amounted to only $365,774,159; but in 1907-08 they had increased to $659,196,320, while in 1908-09 they amounted to $690,892,976; the total addition in the twelve years having thus been the enormous sum of $325,000,000. This tremendous increase is due to the fact that we are spending vastly more every year in every department of the government, there having been a rise in aggregate payments in every direction except that of the interest on the public debt." Legitimate expenses of the government naturally increase as the government expands its operations, but there can be no doubt that millions are paid out for which the government gets no adequate return. There is too much extravagance. The appropriation of $25,000 to purchase automobiles for the vice-president and the Speaker of the House was a piece of extravagance for which there is no justification whatever. Why not authorize an automobile for each Senator and Congressman? It would have been quite as appropriate, and just as legitimate.

OUR EDUCATIONAL SITUATION.

By Dr. J. A. Rice.

IV.

Perhaps I can bring together what I have said by elaborating one aspect of the subject that has been referred to in various ways during the discussion—education as the direction and development of interest. The things that we live by are the things that we are vitally interested in. The world has just heard of the discovery of the north pole by Dr. Cook, who sold his home and gave up everything else under the overwhelming passion for the privilege of standing first where one side of the planet is night and the other day, where every direction on the globe is south. This passion made him master all the truth in reach bearing on the subject. Not the tiniest bit of information available could escape his alert mind in search of help to reach his goal. All the rivers and rivulets of his life ran into that one central stream. To most men these things were of no moment; to him it was all in all. This all-conquering interest is education. The primary institutions of society—the home, the church and the school—have as their business making people care for things, for right things, and teaching them to care intelligently. The college curriculum is so arranged to the end that students may care for a sufficient number of things and care enough to seek the mastery of these things through life. Herein is the difference among men—the difference in the things they care for.

There are in us all innate tendencies—dispositions with which we are born. Our natures lean in this direction and that. And there are those who tell us that we must be educated along the line of our preferences. Find out the leaning of the child's mind, and specialize along that line. This is to move in the direction of least resistence and confine life to narrow limits. There are others who say that we must be trained across our preferences, that we must be made to care for things beyond the bent of our natures. If, for example, a girl imagines that she cannot work mathematics, it is all the greater reason for her being held to it till she does master it, rather than let it master her. We must learn to do the things we cannot do. We must practice the impossible. I have seen this doctrine tested in many cases. The interests of most of us can be stirred by tact and persistence in almost any subject.

The range of our interests determines the area of our lives. Holmes' beetle man, who talked every morning about nothing but bugs, is a very narrow fellow. A farmer was once asked—often asked, no doubt—why he was going to send his boy to college, as the boy was to be a farmer. "To put as great a distance as possible between the boy and the mule he plows," was the admirable answer. The mule is interested in food, physical comforts and pleasures. The boy should reach out to the heavens above, the earth beneath, to measureless worlds of fact and truth all around him. Only the man that has a wide range of interests will use all of himself in the business of living. I have before me the catalogue of a university. There are the following departments of instruction: Ancient Languages, Modern Languages, English, History and Political Economy, Philosophy, Physics and Engineering, Mathematics and Astronomy, Chemistry, Biology, Geology and Mineralogy, Education, Law. This means that this university is trying to interest its students in these various subjects, and that it thinks one must be interested intelligently in these various kinds of things, except the subjects leading to professional life, to be a well-rounded man. The food that is to nourish the soul lies in these various fields. The university proposes so to present this food to the boys as to create in them an appetite for it, an appetite so strong that they will be compelled to go after more and more through the years. If that appetite be there already it is only to be stimulated and directed. In order to do this, the teacher must live the things he teaches. He must live mathematics, if the students are to be stirred. They must actually eat his flesh and drink his blood, if he is to get the best results. His subject must be so vital to him that in absorbing the subject they absorb him. There must be also an atmosphere congenial to hard work and the inquiring spirit. There is a certain something that pervades the classroom of a great teacher and a great school like the air we breathe. This is the most powerful factor in school life. You feel it everywhere, though there is no one thing that you can designate as being the determining force. It is the product of traditions. It is the spirit that dominates everything, that pervades everywhere, that cannot be escaped. Like the spirit of a man, it is the institution. Breathing this spirit begets a certain attitude toward the universe. That attitude is the education given by that institution, no matter what may be taught there, and that will last when all the teaching is forgotten. That attitude is the expression of the interests there generated. A year or two ago a Chicago professor gave out a list of questions that he thought ought to be asked all applicants for the B.A. degree. I have mislaid the list, but the orthodox ten questions covering things not in the course would not be bad. The following, for example:

1. Do you see anything beyond the stars?
2. Will a lone dog follow you?
3. Do you see anything to love in a little child?
4. Are you on good terms with yourself?
5. Do you love the great outdoors?
6. Can you find as true music in daily duty and drudgery, such as washing the dishes and scrubbing the floors, as in playing the piano?
7. Could you sit on a drygoods box on Canal street, New Orleans, at noon and write an editorial?
8. Do you know how to start over when you have failed?
9. Can you get on well with people you don't like?
10. Is the old home as interesting as it used to be?

It would be hard for a boy to pass this test that had been four years in a superficial, godless, pleasure-doting community. It is quite possible to have fine equipment, fine faculties, a fine body of students, and still have an atmosphere that chills reverence and the finer things of the soul. I was four years in a college community where there were all the necessary adjuncts to morals and religion—a chaplain, a Y. M. C. A., regular religious exercises, and the official endorsement of the administration upon all good works. Yet there was in the atmosphere something that chilled every religious instinct. Nobody could locate it; yet none could fail to feel it. I remember that once I invited one of Moody's helpers to hold chapel. He kept us a little over-time, and I almost trembled. Nobody objected; yet there was a certain attitude toward the meeting that said very plainly that valuable time had been taken for an exercise that had no relation to the work of the college.

Education by Christian men may be very far from Christian education. In spite of a noble body of devout men, there may be an invisible, yet all-pervasive influence at work that chills the holiest things. Having spent some fifteen years in colleges, seminaries and universities, observing the trend of influences in such communities, I cannot but say that the most powerful factor in it all for weal or woe is the atmosphere. And that atmosphere is not determined by the outward platform upon which the institution stands. Even denominational colleges may be positively inimical to real religion. Where the shibboleth of a sect counts for more than adherence to the truth, and where the railings of ignorant apologists settle great questions out of hand, the Spirit of the Master is a stranger and the heart of helpless youth is perverted. Young men and women demand that things religious shall be real and vital, shall go deeper than mere opinion and reach farther than words. Even religion may be made a farce. The mere presence of a creed does not settle the religious value of an institution. Nor are we ready to say that the absence of a formal creed proves irreligion. What are the deep, abiding, vital interests that by the atmosphere, all-pervasive and all-powerful, are held to be paramount?

In the curriculum to which I referred a moment ago, there is no suggestion of religion except the name of a chaplain who has nothing to do and the offering of a course in the philosophy of religion. Nor is there anything in the atmosphere of the school that emphasizes it. By all tokens religion is no part of life as set forth by this university. Shall the atmosphere in which our youth are trained dwarf their interests in the most vital and important aspect of their lives? Is not education outside religious influences and interests—education away from religion? If the things for which the church stands are finally ruled out of the hearts of our young during the years of college life, who shall say how we may ever bring them back?

AN EVIL TO BE CORRECTED.

By Geo. D. Sanders.

For some time I have pondered over a matter which I believe to be of much concern to our preachers, to our church, and to the cause of Christianity in general in the years to come. I have now fully made up my mind to ask space in the Advocate to call attention to this ever-growing and increasing error, and the serious results that are sure to follow, if persisted in.

I refer to the tendency of to-day on the part of parents and guardians to allow their children and their wards to return to their homes or go visiting, or, in some instances, to play upon the streets and highways, after Sunday School and during the preaching services instead of, as in former years taking them into the regular church services.

Having been for many years a father, a Sunday School superintendent and a close and interested observer, I must say that to me the condition is is alarming, and the inevitable results will be more so. Go almost anywhere you will throughout our church domain, either in hamlet, village or city, on a Sunday morning, and you will see, as soon as Sunday school is dismissed, streams of children and young people passing out and wending their way homeward, instead of (as in the early years) taking their rightful places beside their parents for the regular church service.

We know (because the Bible tells us so) that the human family is sinful by nature, and consequently we are more prone to wrong than right, to evil than good. This being so from nature, how can we expect the right, the good that is in us, or of which we are capable, to dominate unless we are duly trained and educated to love the good over the evil, the right over the wrong?

My long experience and observation, and now, thorough conviction is, that in order to have men and women who are really loyal to the church and its ordinances, it is absolutely necessary to train and educate them from infancy to love the sanctuary of the Lord. It devolves alone upon the parent and guardian to do this, and he or she who occupies such a relation cannot shirk this responsibility, and God, in His justness, will reward us in his own way.

In conclusion, I suggest an earnest, prayerful campaign on the part of the church in general and the ministry in particular in this very important matter, never stopping [illegible] back until every child and ward of every Methodist parent and guardian will be seen in his or her proper place in all the services of the church. Otherwise, hear this note of warning: Our preachers will have to face empty pews in the years to come.

LETTER FROM REV. R. A. CLARK.

If I had time, and if you had space in the Advocate, I would give an account of my trip to Seattle to the International Epworth League Conference, and my ramblings through the great West. I had aboard my special car, the Liszt, twenty-three ladies and six gentlemen. We left West Point the 24th of June and returned the 24th of July. We made stopovers at Denver, Colorado Springs, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and Yellowstone National Park. Among the side trips we took were the famous Moffatt Road from Denver, Cripple Creek, Pike's Peak, Garden of the Gods and the Canyons from Colorado Springs. While in Salt Lake City we went in bathing two afternoons in the great Salt Lake, visited the Mormon grounds, etc. From Los Angeles we visited the Beach, Pasedena, Ostrich Farm, Sunken Garden, Catalina Island, where we viewed the bottom of the ocean through the glass-bottom boats, and we had the pleasure of worshiping with our good friend, Dr. Shoaff, both morning and evening, on Sunday, July 4. At 11 o'clock he preached a fine sermon in keeping with the occasion, and at night a special service was held by the Leagues in honor of my party, at which service I was called upon to give the principal address, which was in the nature of greetings from the League work and church work in general from North Mississippi. Dr. Shoaff and daughter met our party on arrival, and showed us many courtesies while in the city.

National Guard Armory, Seattle, Wash., Where the Great League Conference was Held.

In San Francisco we visited the army post—the Presidio, Chinatown, The Cliff House and Sandy Beach, and got a birdseye view of the city, which has rebuilt to a great extent all houses demolished and burned three years ago by earthquake and fire. However, there is considerable sign yet of the disaster.

While in Portland for a part of a day we took in the old Clark Lewis Exposition Grounds, got a birdseye view of that beautiful city of roses and visited some of the leading department stores and hotels.

While in Seattle we took in a part of the great International Epworth League Conference, where there were 3,000 delegates from all Methodism, North, South and Canadian. This was an inspiring occasion. We also took in the Alaska-Yukon Exposition, and went to Victoria, B. C., one day. Our last stop was at Yellowstone Park, where we spent six days, and from the time we entered until we came out it appeared as a perfect wonderland. I will not attempt to describe it in the space and time I have. It is well worth the time and money one spends to see it.

From beginning to end of our trip, there was nothing to mar the pleasure of the party; no sickness to amount to anything more than sea sickness while on ship going to and from Catilina Island. We ran on schedule time almost all the way, not missing a single connection, and had a very congenial party. We kept our Pullman and porter from starting point, and only took baggage out of the car while in Yellowstone Park.

This is an ideal way to travel. We used our car to sleep in while stopping over. Many people had to sit up at night because no berth could be secured since travel was so heavy, but we avoided all of that by having our own car.

My good friend, Rev. J. W. McKee, met us at Denver, and showed us courtesies. I feel the better qualified for my work as a result of the trip.

We begin our union meeting in Okolona to-night (Aug. 27), with Rev. E. B. Ramsey, of Memphis, at the helm. Let prayer be made by all who read this that God will give us a great victory.

Now, a word about the Annual Conference. We are looking forward to the coming of the brethren in December. We hope to make the Conference as pleasant a session as they have ever attended, as far as entertainment is concerned. In due time homes will be provided, and everything fixed in good order. Our church has recently been beautified by a handsome carpet, and installing the new pews. We will not have a pipe organ by the time Conference meets. Of course, requests of different kinds will be made, and already chairmen of the different boards are asking for certain nights, and as far as we are able we will comply with everybody's request. We trust that the brethren will be glad that the Conference came to Okolona after it has adjourned. Possibly I will have more to say about the Conference later.

Okolona, Miss.

THE HELPING HAND MISSION.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I beg you to let me have the space necessary in your valuable paper for the following statements concerning the Helping Hand Mission, which entered upon the tenth year of its strenuous work August 24, 1909.

From a very small beginning the Helping Hand Mission has grown to be a mighty power for good to many thousands of citizens and strangers. The steady growth of the institution may be seen from the steady growth in the amount of monthly rent paid —growing from $10 at the beginning to $50 at present, the size of the premises of course corresponding to the amount of rent.

Pastor Hoffman gives his services to the Mission without salary. The general assistant, Mrs. Hoffman, has kindly condescended to accept $5 per month as a small semblance of a salary.

Whoever is engaged with his hands to work for the Mission gets for his services whatever his contract calls for—the Helping Hand generally giving, in many ways, beyond such agreement. Persons in our employ are mostly such as fail of being employed by any one else and consequently their breaking in and teaching them their work is a hard task; but no sooner has one of them been tolerably well broken in, clothed and well fed, and secured a few dollars, off he goes "to make money," and another green hand gets the same benefit of training and fitting out for good paying positions. These hundreds who have been transformed into independent laborers whose services are well paid for by sensible persons who can afford it.

The work done by the Helping Hand would in the ordinary way cost the community from five to ten thousand dollars annually. We do the work with about eleven hundred dollars, cash at our command, per year, 25 per cent of which is given by Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman from the proceeds of their Bible House. The beginning and steady growth of the Mission is wonderful. God furnished the preacher and the efficient and untiring general assistant. God furnished the pastor and his wife a separate income through the Bible House, so that these two not only gave themselves to the work, but also about one-fourth of the means. The balance, three-fourths of the eleven hundred dollars absolutely needed and used per year, was given by Jew and Gentile and Christian who have and support religious institutions of their own; but freely did they give of their substance to enable an independent Lutheran pastor to keep up the Helping Hand Mission. That has been done by the Lord, and it is wonderful in our eyes. The Lutheran church declares that nothing is needed for the unity of the church but that the Word of God be preached in its purity, and that the Sacraments, viz.: Holy Baptism and the Lord's Supper be administered according to God's ordinance, and this we claim is done at the Helping Hand Mission. There are some people all over the city who consider the Helping Hand Mission as their church and Pastor Hoffman they hold to be their pastor. These communicants are considered as a nucleus of the Mission. Around such nucleus have clustered from time to time the more than forty thousand different individuals who during these ten years of the strenuous work of the Mission have often been preached to and received spiritual and bodily aid—supported, as stated above, by Jew and Gentile and Christian. God bless them all.

We cannot close without making particular mention of the part which the St. Charles Hotel has played in the keeping up of the Mission. The hotel has during all these years freely given to it such things as keep body and soul together. The greatest praise and sincerest thanks of the Mission are hereby expressed to all the people of the St. Charles Hotel for their uniform kindness to the poor in thus strengthening the over-worked Helping Hand.

Words will scarcely express the feeling of gratitude which the Mission feels toward the Press of our city. Even the best of enterprises in these our times can scarcely exist if the newspapers are against them. The daily papers of the city have our sincere thanks for all the courtesy shown the Helping Hand.

We ask all good people to believe us to be ever gratefully and truly, J. J. HOFFMAN, Manager.

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

Wednesday, Sept. 22 will be opening day at Port Gibson Female College, which will then enter upon the 71st session of its honored history. The coming session bids fair to be the most prosperous this splendid educational institution has ever had. Already the applications received very nearly equal the total attendance of last year, which was larger than during any previous year, and President Hawkins is greatly encouraged over the outlook.

All the departments of instruction will be in charge of finely-trained and experienced teachers, and thorough, satisfactory work may be counted on. The department of music is under the direction of one of the best-equipped and most gifted vocalists of the South, and I feel sure that her superior is not to be found in any school in the State. The concerts given by her pupils are always a delight to the citizens of our town. Two years ago the curriculum was raised a year higher, and as a result of this change the standard of scholarship for graduation places this school on a par with any college for girls in the Southwest. Several of the recent graduates have already obtained fine positions as teachers and are making a name for themselves and for the college.

The moral and religious influences at Port Gibson Female College are of the very best, the building up of noble character, the making and development of refined, cultured Christian womanhood being the ideal constantly kept before the students. Worldliness finds little congenial soil at this institution of learning.

Located in a town noted for its healthfulness, Port Gibson Female College has a very enviable record as to health of its pupils. It is worthy of note that not a single case of serious illness occurred among the students during the past session. It is an admitted fact that President Hawkins feeds well, and most of the students improve noticeably in health after coming here. Parents who are looking for a school of high grade to which to send their daughters, where the most wholesome influences prevail, and where they will be as carefully looked after as if they were at home, cannot make a mistake in sending them to Port Gibson. Furthermore, it would be exceedingly difficult to find such excellent advantages elsewhere at such reasonable rates.

M. M. BLACK, Pastor.

"PAYING THE PREACHER"—AGAIN.

By Hon. W. A. Belk.

I have just received the following letter, which I give verbatim, except I omit the name and address of the writer:

> "Hon. W. A. Belk, Holly Springs, Miss.:
>
> "Dear Sir—I read your article, 'Paying the Preacher,' in the last Advocate with more than kindly interest. There are two or three things I would like to submit to your good judgment. Why are some preachers better paid than others? The average salary is only about $250. Our presiding elders get from $1,500 to $2,000. One told me that on a large district his traveling expenses for the year were not more than $250. Three-fourths of the preachers in his district did not receive more than $500 each. It is not that preachers are complaining of their salaries, but why make this difference?
>
> "Do you not know that the Bishops do make a difference, and favor certain men, to the exclusion of others? How is it when a Bishop can leave a number of men without appointments, and make no effort to repair the injury, as I learn, actually happened in Texas? What redress has a Methodist preacher when he is discriminated against by those in power? No, it is not the matter of salary, but the desire to have a 'fair deal.' The present polity of the Methodist Church must and will be modified to meet changing conditions, or else it will soon be a back number. I wish you would give some light and suggestions along these lines in the Advocate. We wish the laymen to see and assist in correcting existing abuses. Cordially yours."

To the first question I answer: "Some preachers are better paid than others," because they are worth more. Somehow, the rest of the world has got each one of us sized up at about what we are worth. Preachers are no exception to that rule. The Bishop and his cabinet generally know the value of each preacher—and so do the people. His second complaint is that the presiding elders get too much pay. My idea about that is that the presiding elder ought to be one of the very strongest preachers of the Conference. To discharge his duties so as to command respect he ought to be specially able. He should be to each pastor and to the Quarterly Conference what a Bishop should be to an Annual and General Conference. As a rule, I think this is true. Then, if I am correct, he does not get any more salary as a presiding elder than he could command in a station. Besides this, his expenses are naturally more because he is on the go all the time. To prove my position as to the ability of the presiding elders, I beg to cite the eight now filling those places in the North Mississippi Conference, and I cite them (with apologies to them) because I am better acquainted with them than I am with those in other Conferences. They are Augustus, Lewis, Jaco, Lipscomb, Young, Meek, Cunningham and Felts. Which one of those could not command as a pastor the salary he is getting as an elder?

He further complains that the Bishops "discriminate" against certain preachers. About that I am ignorant, but I have been a Methodist for a long time and with my knowledge of our Bishops it occurs to me that if any man, as a rule, is "discriminated against," then something is wrong with the man. He as a rule is generally valued at his real worth. I know nothing about the Texas matter to which he refers, but I will venture that the Bishop had a good reason for what he did. I am decidedly of the opinion that as a general rule every preacher gets a "fair deal." He may not think so, but there comes his trouble. Whenever you hear a man begin to complain that he is not "fully appreciated," then it is time for him to begin to "take his inventory." I am glad that this good preacher has written me the above letter. It only proves to me that he has one eye on the presiding elder and the salary, and the other on the Bishop and the appointment. My dear brother, if you will quit that and just get busy at saving souls and nothing else, then perhaps you will not see any "discrimination." God will bless you, and your "stock in trade" will soon be above par. God needs you and has called you—not to make money, but to save the lost. His contract with you calls for souls—not dollars. Quit complaining, and seek only "that which is lost," and see if you will not be happier. Very sincerely,

Holly Springs, Miss.

[Note by the Editor: Like Brother Belk, we "knew nothing about the Texas matter," but venture to say: If the Bishop purposely left "a number of men without appointments," and they had passed in character, he transcended authority, and could easily have been reached by law. Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are not autocrats. They are charged with the appointment of the preachers, nobody else is, and from our long acquaintance with them in the cabinet, we should hesitate long before charging any one of them with a desire to inflict personal injury on any preacher. Sometimes the Bishops have poor advisers in the shape of prejudiced presiding elders—we are sorry to say. And we may add, that what appears to be discrimination against a man by the Bishop is almost invariably the result of bad advice. The bad advice is sometimes innocently given—sometimes on purpose. The Bishop is misled, and innocently afflicts his brethren. And sometimes we have known brethren to be moved for cause. They felt injured—may be got mad, but had nobody but themselves to blame. This question is by no means one-sided.]

"PAYING THE PREACHER."

Under date of August 12, our good friend, the Hon. W. A. Belk, of Holly Springs, presents the readers of the Advocate with some timely suggestions upon the subject indicated by the caption at the head of his article "Paying the Preacher."

It is not the purpose of this writer to attempt a criticism of the paper under consideration, but the rather to enlarge upon it, developing certain lines of thought suggested by it.

We quote from the article as follows. Speaking of the divinely called man of God, he says: "Will God let him suffer further than he ought to suffer?" May we ask if it is not an accepted fact that man has it in his power to confuse God's plans by a failure to comply with the divine will? Surely so. Is it not a conceded fact that men often bring themselves and their friends as well, into trouble, and even into death by utterly disregarding well known laws and wholesome regulations? This will not be questioned.

Again our friend inquires: "Does not God know what is best for that man in order that he may accomplish the greatest good?" Will not God know best where this man or that one should be sent in order to do the greatest good? "It seems to me that he (the preacher) should swing absolutely out upon God and leave all questions of detail to him." "If left to decide the matter, will God make a mistake?" All this sounds well, but to be consistent would it not be in order for laymen of means and influence to stand aside and let God and the cabinet make the appointments? It would seem so; but do they do it? Do not some of our most influential laymen sometimes attend upon the sessions of the Annual Conferences with an eye to securing a "choice man," or to work off a less choice one? Do they not frequently correspond in advance with the "powers that be" giving out information to the effect that certain things must or must not come to pass?

Once more we quote: "I am firm in my conviction that when a man is truly called of God to preach the gospel that he ought, if he undertake to answer the call, just to turn himself with all he has over to God, and ought not to figure on appointments or salaries, but leave that part to God, and put in all his time and talent to save souls." Good. Then let outsiders—politicians and wire-pullers keep hands off, and let all preachers faithfully observe these wholesome instructions and act the part of loyal itinerants and we shall have much less dissatisfaction and consequent complaint."

It makes a conscientious man tired to hear some men tell what happened at Conference, and all to their certain knowledge at the time.

"This man was informed, that man was slated, and this step was taken, and this letter was read and that fact was known and a general go round within certain circles." The nauseating element lies not so much in the know-all man, as it does in the sad fact that there is too much of this sort of practice. Shame on all concerned in this unmethodistic drift from the real spirit and practice of the true itinerant.

It would be a God-send if all men would deal openly, fairly and impartially as touching these things. You will hear a brother say: "I knew long before Conference where I was going, and again: "I will not do so and so." As long as men meddle with their own appointments, or those of their friends there will not cease to be dissatisfaction and "disgruntled men, if you like the term."

We do not mean to say that it is not some times fair and even necessary for well informed men to give needed information under trying conditions—such a course does not come under the head of "meddling." May the time hasten when wicked prejudices and selfish ends shall cease to figure in high places, and where laymen and preachers alike shall find it in their heart of hearts to look upon one another as brethren equally united in love, and equally entitled to brotherly consideration in all matters pertaining to the common good. Whatever may or may not have been the writer's experience or practice, one thing is certain, he would gladly sign a solemn pledge to firmly abide the decision of the cabinet without a word or a murmur, if only his brethren to a man would sweetly submit and gladly obey the powers that be.

With much love, COURTLAND.

"THE GATES OF HELL."

By a Circuit Rider.

The above is the title of a pamphlet of 63 pages by B. F. Vance, of Bristol, Tenn., mailed to my address [illegible] by the author (or somebody else), presumably for review. The author contends that the Baptist church is the only church in the world, and that all other denominations are "the gates of hell," and he gives them the appellation, "Gateites."

Nothing in print will surpass it for ignorance, bigotry, arrogance, pharisaism, narrow mindedness, intolerance and all the rest. It severs diplomatic relations with all churches of Christendom except the Baptist. Out of the profundity of his ignorance the author damnifies every church on the face of the earth except the matchless one he represents. The pamphlet is cartooned: one of which represents a Methodidst preacher in the pulpit with a miniature devil on his shoulder preaching the precepts of men for the commandments of God. On the opposite page, and by way of contrast, a cartoon represents a Baptist preacher in the pulpit with the Holy Spirit on his shoulder, who alone preaches all truth. The cartoon says that "one who is spirit-guided is a Baptist." There are other cartoons, but these are samples.

The author claims many endorsements, among the number, Elder T. T. Eaton, editor of the Western Recorder, and Elder J. B. Stillman, treasurer Baptist General Association of America. The pamphlet is unworthy of serious notice except as it represents the opinions of many Baptists, a few of whom ought to have more sense than to endorse such maniacal and unchristian utterances. Strange to say the hook has already had a circulatiou of many thousands. Perhaps some have read it from curiosity or for the amusement its pages afford.

An intelligent man with a spark of the old-time religion will not endorse such stuff. The book falls as far short of literature as asafetida falls short of the rose. The author knows about things in general what a Hottentot knows about Pleiades. He spells words according to a dictionary of his own manufacture, and constructs sentences which no grammarian, either ancient or modern endorses. The book is largely the product of "main strength and awkwardness." The Bible says a good deal about "a fool," and we read: "He that sendeth a message by the hand of a fool cutteth off the feet and drinketh damage."

If the Baptist church is endorsing this book, it is disabling its own feet and obstructing its own affairs. It deserves the contempt of all pious people, and much damage will come as a recompense for its folly. While the book without doubt has the endorsement of many Baptists, this scribe does not believe that the rank and file of them do so. For their own good they ought to put a stop to its circulation.

The following quotations are made merely as samples of the contents: "When Jesus commissioned the Baptists to go into all the world and preach the gospel, that very specific statement forbade others doing so, and put everything into the hands of the Baptists, as Daniel said, 'And the kingdom shall not be left to other people.'" "The Spirit in the form of a dove came down upon Jesus when he was baptized by the Baptist preacher. How fitly these doves represent the Baptists, they go in a gang to themselves, who ever saw doves flying around or in a tree with other birds." "John the apostle, an inspired Baptist preacher, says, 'we are of God, he that knoweth God heareth us, he who is not of God heareth us not.'" "Jesus belonged to a missionary Baptist church, and said his sheep would follow him." "Who ever heard of any king being a baptist except Jesus, 'King of the Jews.'" "Jesus took up this missionary Baptist material that John had prepared, and set up a missionary Baptist church. See? Well, if you don't see, perhaps it is because you are blind and there is no light in you."

He says that the Baptist church "was a widow for a small moment—three days and nights—while the man part of Christ, her husband, was dead. See? My, what a knock out this is to all Pedoism and Campbellites who are over fifteen hundred years too late to be this widow that Isaiah is prophesying of." "We only on this account could possibly be the widow, Farewell to all ye 'gates' that are trying to prevail against her." "Why do they (other churches) prosper, if they are not of God? They flourish that they may be taken and destroyed in a day." "The Baptist churches are the only heaven ordained custodians." "The first missionary Baptist church in the world was set up, or established on the mountain, and called a church by inspiration long before pentecost." "The true Baptists being all of the same consistent Bible creed, constitute one kingdom—narrow gate. False churches having different heads, viz.: Luther, King Henry, Calvin, and others with different creeds, of necessity constitute plural kingdoms—the 'gates of hell.' All this agrees with Daniel's prophecy." "That John was a baptist because he baptized, is God's premise, and conclusion, as dictated to Matthew by the Holy Ghost. To deny one is to deny the other, for both cases are alike, and he that denies either, as applied to John or the church, makes the Holy Spirit out a liar, and surely thereby sins against the Holy Ghost, for which there is no forgiveness." "You may ask why it is not called Baptist church in the Bible; simply because it was all the church there was for hundreds of years, and needed no such distinguishing prefix; but since there are over six hundred false churches now in existence we have to say landmark missionary Baptist churches so as to make ourselves understood, and then we can hardly do so .... Please do not sin against the Holy Ghost." "How can they preach except they be sent? It has pleased God to send them through the Baptist churches." "Baptists have charge of this whole supper (Luke 14, 24) and everything else belonging to the kingdom. For nearly 2000 years God's Baptists servants have been out in the highways and hedges inviting people." "The Baptist church institution is is the only heaven ordained custodian of the ordinances, baptism and communion, on earth to-day .... she is the only church that can set a true Lord's table. All so-called churches being false, their communion and baptisms are also false ... Wolves and Hill Billies cannot see this truth for it is spiritually discerned." "Gateites ... your doom is irretrievably fixed." "To-day is Sunday, and thousands, yea millions are on their knees in false churches, praying in all good conscience, and Jesus looks down on them as says, 'and why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say.'" "If the 640 odd different denominations in Christendom to-day were called on for 'clear titles' to their claims, all the lawyers in the universe could not produce a legal abstract from the 'old grant.' The Bishops won't let the Methodist preachers stay in one place long enough (seven years) to even hold a squatter's claim. All the right and title was vested in the Baptists and registered in heaven (Heb. 12, 23) over fifteen hundred years before any of these Harlot Squatters ever began to 'steal' and rob' from Baptists these God-given names and rights." "God, Jesus, the Holy Ghost, and all the apostles were Baptists. The Bible is a Baptist Book. The first church a Baptist church." "It must be remembered that the New Tesatment is all the while talking about Baptist affairs."

The above statements are only samples. The author not only says that no Baptist has the right to call a Methodist, or any other "brother," but he even affirms that all Baptists will lose their souls who marry outside of their creed. Enough said.

"SERMONS BY THE DEVIL."

Some time ago the prospectus of a book with the above title was sent to me from a certain publishing house. It was a book of sermons purported to have been preached by the devil. Of course, it was an imaginary thing, but was designed to bring before the mind of the reader the kind of stuff that is really being delivered from some pulpits under the guise of a Christian sermon, when, in fact, the doctrine is contrary to the spirit of Christianity.

Below I am giving a sketch of a sermon, not, indeed, from the book I have referred to above, but from a minister of the gospel: I heard it and know what I am saying is true.

Folowing is the substance of what I heard:

"God does not expect you to keep the Ten Commandments. He knows you cannot keep them. He knows you are weak. I know I do not keep the Ten Commandments. I could not if I were to try. Brother, it is no use for you to try to keep them for you cannot. You are foolish for trying. God has sent his Son into the world to keep them for us. Hence we have nothing to do with trying to keep the law. When Christ said, 'if ye love me keep my commandments,' he did not mean the law of Moses, but the command of Christ. When Christ came he gave us a 'new commandment,' one that we could keep. All before Christ the people were trying to keep the law (for this was their righteousness) and they failed and God saw it was time to make a change and hence he gave us a new and a better way.

"Now, faith in Christ is our righteousness and not the keeping of the Ten Commandments. All can have faith in Christ, but none can keep the commandments. Christ is our Elder Brother. He is able to keep the law and does for us that which we are not able to do, viz.: keeping the commandments. Brother you need not try to keep them. The more you try the more you will violate them. You are free from the law and from bondage. All this Christ has blotted out and nailed to the cross. The fact is we are not under law, but under grace. The law has no dominion over us now since Christ came and assumed this responsibility for us. I have nothing to do with the law. I have turned all that over to Christ who is my burden bearer. He carries all my sins. I know I sin every day of my life in deed and in word and in thought. I sin all the time. Every breath I draw is a sin! I am sinning right now while I am preaching to you (here I thought 'Amen'). But while I sin, Christ is made sin for me and takes it to himself and imputes his righteousness to me."

As I heard this sermon, I wondered what was his idea of Christ. He seemed to look upon Christ as the dumping-ground for all the filth and immoral putrefaction of human life. Instead of looking to Christ as his Great High Priest, he seemed to regard him as his criminal lawyer, at bar of justice, to get him out of any and all the devilment he might feel like doing while on earth.

Another minister of the "same faith and order" told me that God proposed to save men if he would believe on his Son. Now, said he, I have believed on him and therefore, God is under obligations to save me now, no matter what I may do.

Doctor, this is the kind of preaching we hear all over this country. I think it is time for the ministers of the Arminian faith to speak out against such rank Antinomianism. J. M. ALFORD.

ON KEEPING YOUNG.

A German woman, the mother of a large family, was once asked how she managed to keep so fresh and young-looking. Her answer was prompt: "Because I never allow anything to interfere with my little naps."

"Oh," replied her American questioner with conscious virtue, "it would be impossible for me to rest in the afternoon knowing that a basketful of mending or some other duty remained undone."

The German woman smiled. "Then you do not consider that you are the most necessary thing on earth to your children?" she asked.

There is a vast lesson in this. A tired, nervous mother is a poor pivot for the home life to turn upon. She is the hub of the wheel, from which the young lives start and run, like spokes, out to the encircling rim of the father's care. Yet how often it is that these same little "spokes" are the medium through which the irritability of a weary mother is communicated to an equally weary father, with disastrous results. And all because the woman was just "jaded to death."

It is not actual work which wears out the mother of a family so much as the constant dragging of every member of the household upon her. "Mother, where's my cap?" "O mother, did you see my hair ribbon?" "Is my report for school signed, mother?"—until she may well feel as though she were being torn in a dozen different directions at once.

There is no remedy for all this like the "quiet hour" each day. The best time is from two to three in the afternoon. If there are young children, they are probably having their "little naps" at this time. The older ones are still at school, and it is too early for callers. Do not scruple to tell the neighbors who know you well enough to "run in" that this is your time for rest. Go to your own room. Lie down on a couch, or, preferably, your bed. Relax every muscle, but, above all, relax your mind. Many women get up from an hour's so-called rest wondering why they do not feel more refreshed, when every moment their minds have been on a strain, planning some duty which cannot possibly be performed until the next day. This is a terrible waste of nervous force. You can do a thing only in its appointed time and place. Nothing is gained by doing it ninety-nine times in imagination beforehand.

Fifteen minutes sleep in the afternoon will make you feel like a new woman. All the little irritations of the forenoon will seem to have smoothed themselves out as if magic, and you will look at life with widely different eyes from those over which your weary lids closed only a little while before. If you are one of the unfortunate ones who cannot sleep in the daytime, take your hour of absolute relaxation just the same. Remember that the mother makes the atmosphere of the home. She cannot afford to slight herself.

Above all, during your quiet hour realize the all-embracing care of your heavenly Father. Though this time should be quite separate and distinct from the devotional part of your day, you can still let everything go, resting in the thought that your home life is in wiser and even more loving keeping than your own.

"Thou liest an ocean round my every world of care,
My petty every day; and fresh and fair
Pour thy strong tides through all my crevices,
Until the silence ripples into prayer."

A SCENE FROM LIFE.

He was a cold, selfish man. There was sarcasm in his voice and a sneer upon his lips. He was called a skeptic. Most of his neighbors belonged to the church. He was hard and grasping in his dealings.

"The most overbearing man I have ever seen," said one neighbor.

"He'd skin a flea for its hide," said number two.

"A feller might freeze on his door-step and he'd never open the door," added number three.

For twenty years he had lived among them, growing richer all the time. Farm after farm had been added to his estate, until his acres stretched away for two miles in every direction from his large house.

Perhaps it was part envy, perhaps part fear, for his tongue was sharp and his eye was keen, but whatever the cause, he was cordially disliked by all his neighbors. They called him "Old Skinflint" or "Pinchbeck," and shunned him whenever possible.

"He won't even go to a funeral," said one. "He wouldn't let you have a piece of ice if your child was dying with the fever," said another. "He was never seen in church," remarked the deacon.

"He oughter to be rode out of the country on a rail," put in the horse jockey—"or rotten-egged," added the local politician.

And this was the public opinion of Harrington. If he cared, none ever knew, for he certainly made no effort to win the good opinion of his neighbors.

A new pastor came to the country church, and he was very much in earnest about saving souls. As he went about in his quiet, unobtrusive way doing good, he never lost an opportunity of persuading some to turn from his way.

One evening, as he stood talking with some of the brethren about the work, he remarked: "I am going over and talk with Mr. Harrington to-morrow." "No, no! it will never do," they protested in one voice. "He's sure to insult you," said the deacon. "He'll kick you out of the house," remarked another, "if you say anything about religion." "It will do no good. He's a hardened infidel," said another brother.

"I wouldn't go, Brother Simpson," persuaded one of the leading men of the church; "it will be wasted time, and you'll have your feelings hurt."

"I thank you all, brethren, for your advice," said the pastor; "but, nevertheless, I'm going."

He went. Harrington was sitting on the south porch reading as the minister came up. The pastor introduced himself, and offered his hand. The other shook hands with him and offered a chair.

"As I told you, I am a minister," began the pastor at once, "and my work, you know, is trying to save souls. I came to talk with you about yours, if you have no objection."

Harrington looked at him strangely for a moment. There was simplicity and candor in his face, as well as in his words. There was no arrogance visible there—only brotherly love.

"Very well, sir; I have no objection," Harrington said frankly.

For hours they talked as man to man on the highest of all themes, the welfare of a man's soul. At last they went in, and bowed together while the minister prayed. When they arose, Harrington held out his hand; the minister put his arm about his shoulders. The tears were running down both faces, as Harrington said, in a broken voice: "For twenty years I have longed to talk with somebody about religion and my soul, but they all shunned me, and I was too foolishly proud to go to them. You can hardly know how I have longed for human fellowship and sympathy, but my selfishness has kept me and my fellowman apart. I never knew how it was until now, but the message you have brought makes it clear. I must love my neighbor as myself—and I will."—Rev. Wm. H. Hainby, in Western Christian Advocate.

A SERIOUS SITUATION.

Some years ago it was rumored that the church had no title to Vanderbilt University. It was so persistent that the General Conference of 1906 appointed a commission, consisting of three learned and eminent jurists, to investigate the matter. This the Commission did in due time, and reported in favor of the ownership of the church. Some of us fondly hoped that the question was settled. But it seems that such is not the case, some holding that the report of the Commission is not final, and that it is "not worth the paper on which it was written."

In view of the present state of the matter, Dr. H. M. DuBose, who is thoroughly informed, and keeps his eyes on every movement, gave out the following statement a few weeks ago:

"The Church—the Southern Methodist Church—is just now confronting a serious situation. Efforts have been made to cast a cloud upon the Church's title to great educational properties which it has created or which have been created in its name and right. In at least one important instance an effort has been made to secure legal power to alienate from the Church's hands and use a large trust fund or parts thereof. Now it is being publicly advocated hereabouts that the Church's largest institution of learning be amalgamated with two secular institutions, so as to create a great civic university with 'ample endowments, etc.' The talk in this last case is more or less irresponsible, but it emanates from a territory from which serious efforts at 'secularization' have come before. In addition to all this, it is being boldly affirmed by some that the Church is not capable of running a great university or maintaining a competing standard in its schools, and, therefore, should give way and also give its properties to those who have both the wisdom and the financial ability to do so. That the Church will be able to meet all these machinations and cryptic devices and also demonstrate its right and its ability to educate, we do not doubt. It is to express no fear on either of these points that we write these lines, but rather to express surprise and distress that there should be found amongst us those who seek to excuse the men whose plain purpose it is to embarrass and even to dispossess the Church; who, instead of setting the Church's case out in those plain, strong terms of which it is susceptible, not only weaken its cause by confused reasoning and involved statements, but make plausible arguments on behalf of the 'benevolence' of those who are seeking to discomfit and swallow us up.

"If any loyal man in the Church doubts that there is an urgent necessity for the General Conference to act and set us straight as to our rights and duty with reference to our great educational causes and trusts, he is surely uninformed concerning things going on 'at Jerusalem.'"

The reader is requested to give special attention to the words which we have italicised in the above statement. 1. "Efforts have been made to cast a cloud upon the Church's title to great educational properties, which it has created, or which have been created in its name and right." This refers to the efforts certain parties have been making to show that the Church has no legal ownership in Vanderbilt University. The statement is equally applicable to the trustees of Randolph-Macon College, who, since the Carnegie pension fund was provided, have claimed to be the legal owners of that great institution.

2. "An effort has been made to secure legal power to alienate from the Church's hands and use a large trust fund or parts thereof." This refers to an effort made at the last session of the Tennessee Legislature to pass a bill which, though general in its character, would have allowed the trustees of any chartered institution, including Vanderbilt University, larger liberty than they now exercise in the use of certain funds. This bill was presented, if not prepared, at the instance of a member of the Vanderbilt faculty, and would have passed but for the timely intervention of Dr. Du Bose and one of the editors of the Baptist and Reflector, whose name we do not now recall, who opposed it before the Legislative Committee.

3. "It is being publicly advocated hereabouts that the Church's largest institution of learning be amalgamated with two secular institutions, so as to create a great civic university, with ample endowments, etc." Dr. Du Bose says "the talk is more or less irresponsible," but since his statement was given out it has been made known that a great "civic," or secular, institution, through the Peabody legacy, is to add to its properties a great building adjacent to the Vanderbilt grounds, so that students of the respective institutions may have the benefit of both schools. This may be a good thing. But why should the Peabody trustees leave their own ample grounds, and go to the expense of thousands of dollars in purchasing costly real estate adjacent to Vanderbilt? That amalgamation may be ultimately effected? We undertake not to say.

4. "It is being boldly affirmed by some that the Church is not capable of running a great university or maintaining a competing standard in its schools, and therefore, should give way and also give its properties to those who have both the wisdom and the financial ability to do so." That has been the position for a good while of Dr. Pritchett, the chief manager of the Carnegie foundation. But we were not aware, until we read Dr. DuBose's statement, that any leader in Southern Methodism entertained the idea. We do not know to whom reference is made. Certainly no man connected with Vanderbilt University, whether a member of the faculty or Board of Trust maintains such a position. It would be utterly inconsistent. If there be such he must feel persuaded that his presence and influence is necessary to give the university respectability, and to keep it from going to destruction. Except with a conceit of that kind and degree we do not see how a thoroughly consistent man can hold a position of honor or profit in a church institution of university grade, if he believed the Church incapable of maintaining it.

The Church at large, we imagine, will waste but little time arguing with men who tell us that the Church should turn over its schools, great and small, to those who are competent to control them, but it will be compelled to wrestle with those who deny its title to our great university. Every member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is interested in the settlement of the question, for every one who knows of its existence and its work, has justly taken pride in the institution in the belief that it belonged legally and morally to the Church. If it does not, then thousands of Methodists have been deluded for more than a quarter of a century.

If Dr. DuBose is correct the "storm-center" is "Jerusalem," that is, Nashville.

Verily, the church is confronting a serious situation.

AN EMERGENCY—AN OPPORTUNITY.

When the "Layman's Movement" was planned and organized something like two years ago, it gave the whole Church a pleasant surprise. There was enthusiasm throughout the connection. One purpose, it was distinctly stated, was to organize for emergencies, that is, to bring the laymen into such complete harmony and co-operation that, in case of disaster, a large relief fund would be ready to meet it.

An emergency is upon us. It is of such character and magnitude as to cause Dr. McMurry, Church Extension Secretary, to turn his assistant, Dr. Geo. Sexton, from his special work, and send him down to the Texas coast to look after the distressed churches. The coast storm two weeks ago destroyed many homes, and many houses of worship—literally wiping some of them from the face of the earth. The churches are wholly unable to rebuild. They must have help or suffer.

The emergency fund is so greatly needed. It should be forthcoming. To put into Dr. McMurry's hands twenty-five thousand dollars within the next thirty days will greatly strengthen faith in the Layman's Movement. This is the first opportunity our brethren have had since "launching out into the deep." They ought to take advantage of it right away. It would prove a double blessing—a blessing to those in need, and a blessing to those who give.

THE NORTH POLE.

At a time when nobody was looking for it or expecting it, the news dashed all over the world last week that Dr. Frederick Cook, of Brooklyn, N. Y., had reached the North Pole. This is considered a great achievement especially in view of the fact that at intervals, for the past 750 years men have been trying to find it, and hundreds of lives have been sacrificed in the effort; and Americans are justly proud that an American citizen made the discovery. Dr. Cook, according to the report, reached the spot the 21st of April, 1908. He left the United States on the search about three years ago. The long time getting there and the equally long time in getting back is suggestive, not so much of the distance from New York, as of the difficulties of the journey in the frozen regions. What those difficulties were can never be known except by one who has felt a touch of the cold. Notwithstanding an American discovered the pole and land adjacent thereto, the discovery will never be any practical benefit to us, or to any other people. Dr. Cook's observations of a scientific character may prove of great value to the scientific world. We have read of but one man who doubts the truth of Dr. Cook's report. Scientific men generally credit it. As we see it, there is no more reason to doubt Dr. Cook, than there was to doubt the statement of the explorer who less than a year ago said he went within a hundred miles of the place. That man's achievement was greater than anyone who had gone before him. Time will tell, for other men will be stimulated and they will reach the pole, or show that it is impossible.

Since the above was put in type news comes to the effect that Commander Robert E. Peary had also discovered the north pole. He reached the goal one year after Dr. Cook, lacking thirteen days. Thus two Americans have the distinguished honor of first reaching the top of the world. Dr. Cook generously says: "The honor is big enough for two."

PERSONAL.

We have received word that Bishop Ward is critically ill in Yokohama, Japan. He was taken sick on board ship while journeying to his conferences in the mission field.

Rev. R. S. Walton, of Hammond, assisted Rev. Wm. Schuhle in a meeting last week at Wesley Chapel, near Ponchatoula. The meeting was one of great interest and success.

We had the pleasure on Monday last of a visit from Rev. N. E. Alford, a faithful local preacher, living near Magnolia, Miss. He preached for the Mary Werlein Mission congregation last Sunday night.

A pleasant message comes to us from Rev. Paul D. Hardin, San Antonio, Tex. He says: "We enjoy the weekly visits of the Advocate as never before; it comes to us as a message from home and friends beloved."

Rev. H. E. Carter, who holds forth at Sharon, says: "My work is scattered somewhat, but we are progressing very nicely." The list of subscribers—a short one, with the hope of sending more later on—indicates progress.

Rev. B. W. Lewis, Scooba, Miss., is doing well and his work prospering, though somewhat hindered just now by the illness of his wife and baby. The sickness is not serious and Brother Lewis hopes it will soon pass away.

Prof. G. L. Harrell, secretary, in furnishing a report of the Shreveport District Conference, apologizes for the delay. Ever since the Conference he has been "on the go," working in the interest of Mansfield College, and could not give the matter attention.

The friends of Rev. R. A. Meek, of the Greenville District, will be pleased to see his kindly face on our first page. Possibly many of them will be surprised, but nobody will be more surprised than Brother Meek. We received a good photograph without his knowledge. We "didn't steal it, but we got it from the man who did."

Rev. O. P. Armour, of Buena Vista, Miss., has just been blessed with two good revivals—one at Pleasant Grove, which resulted in an addition of thirteen members; the other at Ebenezer. He was assisted at one meeting by Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, of Aberdeen, and at the other by Rev. J. J. Garner, of Corinth. "Everything goes well."

Rev. W. J. Newsom, of the Mount Hermon Circuit, informs us that his father, who was long a great sufferer, passed away on May 21, and that on account of the protracted illness he lost much time from his work. He is now getting along very well. His address is Tangipahoa, La., not Mount Hermon, as stated in the Conference minutes.

We had the pleasure on Monday last of a visit from Dr. A. F. Watkins, of Hattiesburg. The Doctor was in fine spirits, and rejoicing over the completion of his new and handsome house of worship. In a little while it will be ready to open. The cost will be about $50,000, and Dr. Watkins says "it is the handsomest church in the State." Hattiesburg greatly prospers.

President W. W. Smith, of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Lynchburg, Va., informs us that the College "has attained national influence and standing." The "education department" of the State of New York sent President Smith a letter telling him that "the highest registration of any of the women's colleges by the department has been accorded Randolph-Macon." Up to Aug. 20 the registration for 1909-10 reached 505, "from thirty-seven states and countries."

Under date of Aug. 31 last, Rev. T. V. Peters, of Slidell, La., penned us the following note: "On the 22d of this month, after four weeks' illness of typhoid fever, the grim monster, death, came into the home of my father-in-law, J. B. Talley, of Sun, La., and claimed as its victim his life companion, Mrs. Talley. She leaves eight children, the youngest only 8 months old. It was a great shock to the entire family. We worked hard to keep her with us, but the Lord knew best. His will be done."

Rev. Geo. H. Cornelson, D.D., who has been serving the Moore Memorial Presbyterian Church, at Nashville, Tenn., having accepted the call to the First Presbyterian Church of New Orleans, entered upon his pastorate last Sunday. This church is famous by reason of the fact that it was presided over for more than forty years by Dr. B. M. Palmer, in his day the leading preacher in the Southern Presbyterian Church. Dr. Cornelson will serve an intelligent and appreciative congregation. No preacher in the city has a better field for usefulness. He will be heartily welcomed by the brethren of all denominations.

Dr. Geo. S. Sexton, of the Church Extension Board, has sent out a beautifully printed booklet on "that Washington City Church"—the church Southern Methodists are expected to build at the nation's capital. The little book is adorned with the pictures of magnificent buildings of other denominations. They show what others have done, and what Southern Methodists ought to do at Washington. Our people contemplated a representative church in the city as far back as 1858, but the great war put an end to all their plans. The General Conference of 1906 thought it time to begin again, and so advised and exhorted. Dr. Sexton is specially charged with the work by the Church Extension Board. The whole Church is called to help.

GALLOWAY MEMORIAL CHURCH.

More than twenty years ago the Methodist children of Carrollton organized a Juvenile Missionary Society and named it "The Galloway Gleaners." Each year they have made liberal contributions to the Missionary treasury. To-day they have paid to me $25 for the Memorial Church.

J. R. BINGHAM, Treasurer.

CALL FOR A MISSIONARY WORK DAY.

To the Preachers and Members in the Newton District, Mississippi Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

Dear Brethren: Wishing to advance the cause of Missions, and to enlist every member of our church in this great work, we suggest that Friday, Oct. 15, 1909, be observed throughout the bounds of our district as Missionary Work Day, and that all the members of our church in the district give the proceeds of their labors on that day to the Missionary cause. Let all of our pastors announce the day thoroughly and plan for Missionary Rally Day the Third Sunday in October, or as near thereto as practicable, and let us co-operate to promote the Missionary interest in our district.

T. J. O'NEIL, P. E.
W. L. WEEMS, Dist. Lay Leader.

JOINT BOARD OF FINANCE.

Report of the Treasurer of the Joint Board of Finance of the Mississippi Conference, from last Conference to Aug. 1, 1909:

Dear Brethren—You will note that your treasury is now overdrawn, and we are within a month of our next remittance period. Unless you come to our assistance, there will be no payment this quarter. Please do not think that the "other brother will heed this call, and that there is no use of my responding at this time." Let every charge send something, if it only be a small amount. Our worthy claimants are in need. Many of them have nothing to look to but the small amount that they receive from the Board. Will you not, as a whole, come to our relief? We report as follows:

TOPIC FOR SEPT. 12, 1909.

CONNEC[illegible] WITH THE SOURCE OF POWER.

Matt. ix:20-22; Mark, v:25-34; Luke, viii:43-48.

A poor woman, with a long-standing hemorrhage, came into the crowd as Jesus passes through the street and touched the hem of his coat. She was healed. He said, "Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole."

Many were touching him incidentally and accidently; but only she with her burden of want and her desperate faith elicited healing power from him; hence he said: "Thy faith hath made thee whole." As a matter of course, all understand that it was his divine power that wrought the miracle of healing; but his strong way of putting it, stressed the all-important fact that human faith is the one point of contact between human need and divine help. It is true in the realm above the physical also, as Paul said to the jailer at Philippi. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." Here is the picture thus presented: Christ is the source of infinite power—man is in extreme need—by faith man touches this source and receives all the power needed.

This grand truth here illustrated by the miracle was restated with peculiar emphasis by our Lord in the upper-room, the night before Calvary: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also: and greater works than these shall he do." Human frailty by faith touches the divine, and at once becomes in its sphere, omnipotent.

Another fact is stressed by the miracle: Only frailty is ready or at all liable to make the touch of faith. Many strong and self-reliant ones in that crowded street were pressing against the Christ. The disciples called attention to that fact (Luke viii:45). Only this frail, disease-weakened, timid one; made the faith-touch, the only real touch, and felt in her [illegible] the thrill of omnipotence. It was Paul who, out of a wealth of experience and thoughtfulness and under inspiration said: "My power is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my weaknesses, that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Wherefore I take pleasure in weaknesses, in injuries, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses, for Christ's sake; for when I am weak, then am I strong." II. Cor. xii:9-10.

Our Lord, under the shadow of Calvary, said: "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." John, in his First Epistle adds this explanation. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." The great Dr. Cuyler further explains: "Admit Christ into your soul, and with him comes power. You admit that you have been wretchedly weak on a thousand critical occasions in your past life. You promised yourself that you would never yield to certain temptations and commit certain sins and follies; but you did, and your life is strewed with broken resolutions. Be done with this, and be done with leaning on a brittle reed. Jesus Christ offers to strengthen you with might in the inner-man by his Spirit dwelling in you. Ah! you say, that is something supernatural. So it is; for Christianity is based on the truth that the Son of God does enter into the human heart, and just as really affects that heart as the bread you eat affects your body. The whole difference between Saul, the bloody bigot, and Paul, the beneficent, unselfish, heroic apostle of benevolence to his fellowmen was that Jesus Christ had entered into him and transformed him and endowed him with a tremendous power to fight the devil, and do mighty deeds of love. This power will come into your soul through the channel of prayer. Try it and see.'"

REPORT OF OXFORD DISTRICT PARSONAGE COMMITTEE.

To the Oxford District Conference—

Brethren: We, the committee appointed to provide a home for the presiding elder, submit the following, to-wit.:

We believe we have gone over the ground fully, impartially and as rapidly as conditions would justify. We trust that our action will be accepted as an honest effort to settle, in the best possible way, this delicate question.

There were placed in the hands of your committee the Holly Springs District Parsonage property and a fund of some twelve hundred dollars, resulting from the sale of the parsonage of the old Grenada District, with instructions that the proceeds of these two sources be used as, in the judgment of the committee would best subserve the interests of the Oxford District.

The committee was practically unanimous in consenting that Oxford would be the proper place for the location of the property, but could not find a suitable proposition that was within reach. We were unwilling to involve the district in a debt of from fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars without first knowing the sentiment of those who are most concerned.

As far as could be ascertained, not a pastor or other official of the district, either privately or as an officer of the Quarterly Conference, would agree that it would be advisable to contract a debt, under the circumstances.

Finding that we have a desirable property in Holly Springs, which could not be sold except at a sacrifice, and believing that because of railroad connections, social and school advantages, etc., it could still be used to good advantage as a residence for the presiding elder, we therefore agreed upon the following resolutions, to-wit:

First, That the presiding elder be requested to move to Holly Springs and occupy the District Parsonage.

Second, That a sub-committee, to be composed of M. A. Green, L. G. Fant, —. Bradberry and the presiding elder, be appointed to inquire into the condition of the property and to make such expenditures in the way of repairs, furnishings, insurance, etc., as appear to be necessary to the preservation of the property and to the comfort of the presiding elder's family. And that such funds as remain in the hands of the committee, after said bills shall have been paid, shall be placed with the trustees of said property as an emergency fund, to be used at such time and in such manner as said trustees may deem advisable.

Third, That the aforesaid sub-committee be required to report the disposition of all funds, condition of property, etc., to the next District Conference, as a part of this report.

Fourth, That in order to obviate the confusion that will result from having the district take its name from a place other than the official residence of the presiding elder, we respectfully petition the Bishop and his cabinet to change the name from the Oxford, to that of the Holly Springs District.

EFFECT OF THE SPOKEN WORD.

Many persons who were once addicted to the use of opium and liquor are to-day leading useful lives. A large proportion of these were cured by Dr. B. M. Woolley, the Atlanta (Ga.) specialist of whose skill they heard through some kind friend. Dr. Woolley has never found it necessary to advertise much because he is sufficiently well advertised by those whom he has cured. Dr. Woolley has been treating his specialty for over thirty years.

COLDWATER AND LOVE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We are now far advanced in the fourth quarter, our third Quarterly Conference being held July 12. The charge is in a prosperous condition as far as I am able to judge. Advances have been made along all lines. We have a larger attendance in Sunday School, and are doing more efficient work than ever before. Three missionary societies are active, and an Epworth League is living.

The recent District Conference was a great blessing to the town. From the first to the last of the five days, there was not a dull service. The preaching was of high order, convincing in logic and deeply spiritual. It was a Conference with all the features of a genuine revival.

On Wednesday before the second Sunday in July, Brother W. M. Young came to assist us in a revival meeting. He was already in high favor with the people, as the charge never had a more popular presiding elder than he. For seven days he preached the gospel in that way that edified the active Christian, stimulated the backslider, and stirred the conscience of the ungodly. While he was tender and sympathetic in dealing with the sinner, he was uncompromising and fearless in his condemnation of sin. With his qualifications of presiding elder, he has united the elements of the true evangelist. Another appointment called him away Wednesday, and Brother S. L. Pope, Senatobia's popular pastor, came and remained two days. The change of preachers caused no break in the interest of the meeting. Brother Pope's sermons were strong presentations of gospel truth, directed to the heart of the sinner. His sermon on "The Sin Against the Holy Ghost," made a profound impression.

While there were but three accessions to the church on profession of faith, in some respects, it was the greatest meeting that has been held here in many years.

On Wednesday before the first Sunday in August, Brother L. P. Wasson, of Arcola, came to assist us at Love. During the course of the meeting he preached a series of strong revival sermons that resulted in strengthening the faith of the Christians, reclaiming backsliders and adding three to the church on profession of faith. He is deeply spiritual, yet bold and fearless in dealing with sin. While he is a young man he easily takes his place among the best preachers of the Conference.

We give God the praise for all that has been accomplished.

V. C. CURTIS, P. C.

Coldwater, Miss.

We desire to state to the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate that after having made a very careful investigation of COCA-COLA, we have concluded to accept its advertising.

We find by consulting the most eminent authorities that COCA-COLA does not contain in the minutest proportions either cocaine, morphine, or any other narcotics, that it is not injurious to health, but is refreshing and invigorating in its physiological effects.

COCA-COLA contains about the same amount of alcohol as is found in a vanilla ice cream soda, or in a glass of ordinary soda water. The infinitesimal amount of alcohol in COCA-COLA is derived from the flavorings used.

It contains caffeine in less quantity than is found in a cup of strong coffee and about the same quantity as is usually found in tea, but it is absolutely free from the tannic acid found both in coffee and tea.

Notwithstanding the absolutely innocent character of COCA-COLA, competitors have encouraged and paid for circulations of false and injurious statements concerning the article, thereby leading many sincere persons to a false impression of the component parts of this really meritorious beverage.

In the interest of truth and of justice, complete information will be supplied either by The COCA-COLA Company, Atlanta, Ga., or by ourselves, giving analysis of the article by leading chemists of the United States and statements from prominent physiologists as to the physiological action of COCA-COLA. The COCA-COLA Company are willing, if so desired, to pay the expense of scientific investigation of the effects of COCA-COLA, by any church, body, or temperance organization, or by any combination of religious publications, which desire to know the truth and to publish it.

SCHOOLS FOR CHINA.

The new age that is fast coming in China is threatening the very life of the old moral system of this land. The preservation of all that is good and true in Confucianism and in China's past is bound up with the success of Christian education. It is this influence only that can save China's past and that can make sure her future. The school works so silently, invisibly, that we often fail to appreciate its real value. But it is in the schools to-day that the men are being molded who will mold the future of China. The educated men, in the long run, dominate a land—hence the importance of the character of the education. To live in China, as elsewhere, the school must be endowed. We must equip our schools for the work the Lord calls them to do.—D. L. Anderson.

We are made or marred by education. If the gospel is to be accepted, then it is incumbent upon us to make the spiritual welfare of our children, paramount to all other considerations. If the gospel is true, it is hazardous to suffer our children to be educated under influences that are not clearly and emphatically Christian.—President Daniel, Columbia Female College, South Carolina.

There are many "goodly pearls" among the country homes of Mississippi Methodists requiring only a little persistent faithfulness on the part of preachers to put them upon the world's market of appreciation where such values are current. The nation and the church will be greatly profited thereby.—President Betts, Mississippi Conference Training School, Montrose, Miss.

It is better for a child to grow up comparatively ignorant of letters than to have his mind brilliantly cultivated to the injury or ruin of his moral nature. And if one's financial ability is limited to a certain amount, it is better to put the child in a safe school as long as the money lasts than to keep him in an unsafe one for twice as long a time. Indeed, the longer he remains there the worse it is for him, no matter what intellectual cultivation he may receive.—President Lander, Williamston Female College, South Sarolina.

It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly—read letter below:

Brookside, Ala., May 4, 1903.

The two physicians here had 3 very obsth ate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johns on's Tonic. I removed all the printed matter and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle a a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

THE PASSING OF ALCOHOL IN MEDICINE.

Prof. Wientrand, M. D., of Wiesbaden, in a recent statement concerning the employment of alcohol in the treatment of the sick, quoted by the news sheet of the German Abstaining Physicians' Society, March, 1909, said that in accordance with the results of the present scientific investigations of alcohol, he had reduced the dietetic use of alcoholic drinks in his department of the city hospital and only prescribed it as a medicine in certain individual cases. Even cases of delirium tremens, which were once thought to require alcohol, were given none. Pneumonia, in which the use of alcohol was once thought to be indispensible, was now treated without it except in occasional instances. Of thirteen pneumonia patients recently treated, twelve recovered completely without alcohol.

Fever patients, who often tolerate alcohol exceptionally well without being intoxicated, are often only put by it in a cheerful mood which deceives the physician in regard to the seriousness of their condition. So also with tuberculosis. Formerly, in certain sanatoria for consumptives a half-pint of brandy a day was prescribed in order to increase the weight. But this increase is now secured by systematic feeding, without the regular use of alcohol. Such use of alcohol is also an unwise practice for other reasons. The patient, after his discharge, carries his good or bad hygienic practices to the family. Hence many patients who are cured in the hospital after a long stay during which they receive no alcohol, will go away with the belief that one can live and be well without alcoholic drinks. — Scientific Temperance Federation.

SOUTH MISSISSIPPI COLLEGE.

South Mississippi College, at Hattiesburg, opened Sept. 7th with the largest attendance in its history. Considerable improvement has been made since the close of last session and three members of the faculty have been actively at work in the field all the summer and the prospects of the school are the brighest in its history. The institution offers industrial work by which a large number of young men and women are able to pay about one-half of their expenses. By this means liberal aid is extended to a most worthy class of young people.

THE WOFUL POVERTY IN INDIA.

Except to those who have been in India it is difficult for one to realize the exceeding poverty of the average village Christian. There are thousands of them who, if they are unable to obtain a daily wage of from two to four annas (an anna is equal to two cents), will, with their families, have to forego their evening meal. For many it is a steady fight against starvation for nearly twelve months in the year. At transplanting time and at the reaping there is usually a sufficiency, but for the rest of the year it is a steady contest, not with want, but with actual starvation. The problem of self-support under such circumstances becomes well-nigh insoluble.—The Missionary Review of the World.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

The death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Pepper, June 10, and took from them their precious little jewel, ALICE ELENOR, aged ten months and twenty-four days. Elenor was such a bright, affectionate child—was loved by all who knew her, she caused sunshine wherever she went. Little Elenor, how we miss your smiling face! When we think of the empty chair, our hearts are made to ache, but then we think of the One who doeth all things well, and say, "Thy will be done." Weep not, mother, father, and little brother, and a host of sorrowing relatives, but say, "our loss is heaven's gain, and to-day she stands at the pearly gate waiting for us to come.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

AUGUST HATTERY CALLIHAM, was born Dec. 1, 1880, and died at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. O. Calliham, at Woodside, La., Aug. 9, 1909. He was taken very suddenly and seriously ill about three days before his death; which, while a great shock and loss to his loved ones, came to release him of his suffering. He was the eldest son of his parents and their main assistance and comfort in their declining years. He was affectionate and obedient to parents, kind and friendly to all with whom he came in contact. The writer officiated at his funeral at Woodside Methodist Church, in the presence of the sorrowing loved ones, and a host of friends, and we laid his remains to rest in the Woodside Cemetery. May the God of consolation and grace sustain the sorrowing ones.

A. R. HOFFPAUIR.

MRS. VETTIE LEE, wife of D. E. Evans, and daughter of W. G. and Margaret Rigby, was born April 3rd, 1882, and departed this life July 16, 1909. She joined the M. E. Church, South when she was 10 years of age. Her life on earth was short and beautiful. A visit to the parental home, and one is not surprised at the beautiful life. She was trained up in the way she should go. She and her husband and their three little children had started to her father's. The children went with their father around the field as he had the horse, and she went through because it was not so far, but instead of meeting them at the home of her father and mother here, our Heavenly Father called her to the beautiful home on high, and she disappointed the loved ones here, but has gone to meet their two little children who preceded her to the better home above. We hope there will be no disappointment in the meeting at our Father's home above, but that father, mother and children will all meet there. She was killed by lightning. Dear ones, weep not as those who have no hope, but be ready for that meeting.

Mrs. LULIE ALEXANDER INGRAM, wife of T. C. Ingram, died at her home in Byhalia, Miss., June 4, 1909, having almost rounded out her three-score and ten years. To many who had known and loved her in the days of Lang Syne, the sad tidings of her death came like a cold pressure upon the heart, bringing with it a realizing sense of personal sorrow and loss. Although Mrs. Ingram had been an invalid for several years and her death might have been expected at any time, still, it came as a surprise to her family and friends. In spite of her feeble health and low nervous state, she was, at all times, cheerful and uncomplaining, poor in spirit, rich in love toward Christ. Adorned with this meek and lowly spirit, she wore in her bosom the "pearl of great price," and rested all her hopes in the promises of God. Refined and chastened by suffering, her daily walk with the Master, permeated and sweetened her life, shedding its divine radiance not only in her home, but in the more extended circle of her outside friends; and she looked forward, not with slavish fear, but with cheerful resignation, to the time when the silver cord should be loosed and the golden bowl broken. She has entered into the Father's house of many mansions, where she waits to welcome her dearest loved one "when life's fitful fever is o'er." Mrs. Ingram was born at the country seat of her father, Robt. B. Alexander, near Holly Springs, Miss., Oct. 7, 1840; was graduated with honor from the Female College, Huntsville, Ala., in 1859. When quite young she joined the M. E. Church, South, of which she was a consistent member to the time of her death. In 1870 she was married to T. C. Ingram, of Byhalia, Miss., where her home was established and her children, Dora, S. E., Tommie, Joe L. and Bessie were born and reared. Mrs. Ingram was a woman of high mental endowments, she had a broad comprehensive mind and might have been conspicuous in literary or professional life, had not circumstances compelled her to other and possibly higher lines of work. For what work is higher or fraught with graver responsibilities than the rearing and training of children? She has given to the world four noble women and one man who survive to mourn her death. We can only say to them, "Children, cherish the example of your sainted mother, and follow her, as she followed the Master."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To the Preachers of the North Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: You will note in the proceedings of the Mississippi Methodist Historical Society, held June 7, and published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, Aug. 12, the following action: "That every pastor in the two Conferences be and is hereby requested to prepare or have prepared for the Society a historical sketch of every church on his work."

"On motion, G. W. Bachman and T. B. Holloman were elected Historical secretaries for the North Mississippi and Mississippi Conferences respectively, and instructed to undertake to carry out the provisions of the foregoing action."

I therefore respectfully request that you, i.e., each pastor, give attention to this at your earliest convenience, and prepare or have prepared by a competent person the desired sketch of each church in your charge. Let this include, according to the best information obtainable from records, tradition or otherwise, locality, date of organization, by whom organized, number and names of charter members, present number of members, value of house of worship, with other items or incidents worthy of record.

This may be done without much trouble or time if properly taken in hand.

Have it typewritten if practicable, otherwise in a neat, legible hand and on one side of the sheet only, ready for filing without transcribing.

Please do this as early as practicable and send to me or hand to me at Conference at the farthest.

The same request is made in reference to District, Quarterly and Church Conference Records for preservation in the archives of the Society. Gather up those that are being thrown aside and lost—even the oldest you can find, and send to me prepaid or hand to me at Conference, that nothing be lost."

I hope each one of you will preserve the Advocate of date above given for future reference.

Let us co-operate in this matter of getting and preserving the history of our great Church in our Conference.

G. W. BACHMAN,
Historical Secretary.

Winona, Miss., Aug. 26, 1909.

EXPERT TESTIMONY ON COCO-COLA.

The readers of this paper will be interested in the following letters from expert chemists who have made careful analyses of COCA-COLA syrup from which the popular temperance drink is prepared. Our object in publishing these letters is to correct an erroneous impression which has been fostered by some of our unscrupulous competitors to the effect that COCA-COLA contains injurious material. We believe that intelligent, fair-minded Christian people everywhere are interested in knowing the truth about COCA-COLA and we feel sure that when they know the truth thew will silence the muck-rakers and scandalmongers. We have numerous letters from professional chemists, but space limits us to giving only a few samples below. If you would like to see others, write for a free copy of a booklet entitled "Government and State Officials' Report on COCA-COLA." Address The Coca-Cola Company, Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. J. S. Newcomb, Manager, Coca-Cola Bottling Co., San Antonio, Tex.:

Dear Sir: In accordance with your request of the 12th instant, I secured in the open market a quart of COCA-COLA syrup and carefully analyzed same for the presence of cocaine. The sample contained no cocaine.

Yours truly,
O. H. PALM,
Asst. Chemist to the University of Texas.

REPORT OF GEORGIA CHEMIST.

I have purchased in the open market, a sample of COCA-COLA syrup, and submitted same to chemical analysis. I find therein no trace of the alkaloid cocaine, for which I made special search, and nothing of a nature any more injurous than would be derived from drinking an ordinary cup of tea or coffee.

Yours truly,
JNO. M. McCANDLESS,
State Chemist of Georgia.

TO DRIVE OUT MALARIA AND BUILD UP THE SYSTEM.

Take the Old Standard GROVE'S TASTELESS CHILL TONIC. You know what you are taking. The formula is plainly printed on every bottle, showing it is simply Quinine and Iron in a tasteless form, and the most effectual form. For grown people and children, 50c.

WOMAN'S BEAUTY

A woman's beauty is dependent on her health. To keep her beauty, she must keep her health. Sickness and suffering leave their trace, pain leaves its marring imprint. Ladies have come to realize that to be beautiful and attractive they must give attention to physical fitness and health.

Countless women suffer from ailments designated generally as "female complaint," thinking it is the natural lot of their sex to suffer.

This is a mistaken belief. Nature invariably has a cure for her children's ills. Thousands of women have found permanent relief for their sufferings by using that natural, herbal medicine,—Wine of Cardui. Cardui is a pure, non-intoxicating remedy, specifically for women, which has grown steadily in favor during the past fifty years. Letters pour in every day, expressing the gratitude of the writers, who have been relieved of their misery and restored to health.

When you are nervous or sick, get Cardui from your druggist, and try it.

N. B. Upon request, we will send you, free of charge, our valuable, illustrated 64 page book "Home Treatment for Women." In it you will find valuable information regarding the treatment of female troubles.

LESSON FOR SEPT. 12, 1909.

CLOSE OF PAUL'S THIRD MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

Acts xxi:3-14.

Golden Text: "The will of the Lord be done." Acts xxi:14.

Many writers have pictured the beautiful waters of the Levant, through which St. Paul is now sailing toward the shores of Palestine. Doubtless his thoughts were far away from his surroundings—looking backward in the wake of the vessel, he went over again all the years of toil and cruel persecution, that the gospel had met at the hands of its enemies, and now he was going to face fierce opposition, for nowhere was he, or his past history, better known than in Jerusalem, where at the feet of the famous Gamaliel, he learned the law. No warning of coming danger was needed from loving friends. The Holy Ghost testified to him that everywhere bonds and afflictions awaited him, and while he reflected on the suffering that was sure to attend him, he was not left comfortless, for he that showeth us the things of Christ, was continually showing Paul "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us." Then he knew of another time when he, that he loved so well, "had steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem," where cruel mockings, scourging and even crucifixion awaited him. His ever calm reply to all warnings was, "none of these things move me." Such godly fortitude was not only needed in ancient times, but a like spirit of the love of Christ and trust in God, is needed to-day, at times and places where the minister of Christ is battling against fearful odds, and no murmur is heard. Our heart goes out to the young preacher, who is serving his first charge, at some isolated city mission; doing a work that should not be beneath the strength and power of some doctor of divinity. A general sends his strongest force to protect a point that is threatened by the enemy because of its weakness.

Before a favorable wind, Paul's ship soon came to Tyre, where he found friends that were of comfort to him after the long sojourn among people of other lands. These disciples were ready with their warning that the apostle should not go up to Jerusalem. If we wonder at the repetition of these warnings, and Paul's determination in spite of them, let us remember that when the Lord gave Paul a command, there was no misunderstanding it, for the Lord spoke to his servant face to face in the clearest of visions. Paul knew of the will of God concerning him, he knew there yet remained a great work to be done. "Far hence to the Gentiles." The apostle's life was like the journey of a traveler, who at every rough and seeming impossible place in the road, receives proper direction.

Seven days were pleasantly spent with the Christians at Tyre, then the journey was resumed; Paul was accompanied by the whole company of disciples to a place outside of the city where a formal and solemn leave was taken, as they all knelt down by the seashore and offered up a prayer to God. Stopping one day at Ptolemais, Paul and his company came on to Caesarea, where, when they disembarked, they went at once to the house of Philip the evangelist, to whom the Bible student needs no introduction. Philip had four daughters which did prophesy, in this instance, not necessarily meaning foretelling of events, but rather of comfort through the spirit that abided within them. A climax in the warning to Paul came in the person of Agabus, the same that came to Antioch from Jerusalem, and prophesied of future dearth in the land; he, it was, that came to show Paul, that at Jerusalem, he would be imprisoned and bound, showing him by binding himself with Paul's girdle. Then all the assembled company began to persuade and beseech Paul not to go into certain danger.

Such affection and consideration was too much for Paul's loving spirit; in the anguish of his soul he cried out: "What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." We know he was speaking the truth, and they that were with him, knew it, for they ceased persuading, saying: "The will of the Lord be done."

Not long after that, the journey by land to the City of David began. The Holy Ghost was leading Paul, and Agabus was not sent to tell Paul not to go, but to tell him what awaited him there, in that he might be prepared. Paul was prepared, he was always so, for Jesus kept him so. Jesus even came to him there when he was in deepest trouble; when Paul most needed Jesus, he was there.

All that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution, it will come in some form, but come it will. We love Paul the more we know of what he suffered for Jesus's sake, for we know how he loved his Lord, and we love him for that too. The life of Christ is reflected in Paul, and we can have the same reflection in us. The time may come when the same loyalty to Christ must be in us; at the same time let our endeavor be as was Paul's, "The will of the Lord be done."

FROM DR. J. A. PARKER.

Mr. Editor: Since arriving here, at the home of my son, July 14, I have been as busy as possible trying to build up for the final work of the Conference year. While not much given to boasting, I do sometimes compare myself with "Simon, the son of Jonas," who had a great turn for the art piscatorial. However, with this great fondness for the rod and line, not a volt of energy has been wasted on that sport, but all has been used for recuperating purposes. This care and good living have had a very good effect, and I expect to leave the coast about Sept. 1 in a much-improved condition.

My eyes, though somewhat improved, still have that dark spot in the center of the line of vision, shutting out the word while trying to read. In that regard there has been no appreciable improvement. During my sojourn here, it is said the weather has been hotter than ever before known on this coast. At this writing the weather has cleared up—after twenty hours of storm—and a stiff breeze is blowing in from the sea, making ideal weather. One more week in such weather, will, I hope, count for much, to me at least.

This is the second time in fifty-two years that two months have gone by without preaching. It has been several months since I have read a verse in my Bible—or any other book, and the hope of ever again being able to read is most feeble.

The cherished aspirations of the last few years seem now blighted, and I may fail to fill out my longed for half-century in the regular itinerant work.

Forty-nine times I have been ordered out by our Bishops to different places and duties, and still pray for at least one more assignment.

I thank the brethren for many expressions of sympathy.

J. A. PARKER.

METHODISM AND THE UNFORTUNATE.

Our Savior's interpretation of the religious life was in terms of love expressed in deeds of mercy to the unfortunate. Much of his time was employed in healing the sick, restoring sight to the blind; making the lame to walk, the dumb to speak and the deaf to hear. To the rich young ruler who sought eternal life, he said, "Sell all thou hast, give to the poor, and come follow me," and that, after the ruler had met the full requirement of the moral law. The reply to the lawyer's question: "Who is my neighbor?" is the parable of the good Samaritan. "This do and thou shalt live." Lazarus, the sore afflicted beggar, is pictured "in Abraham's bosom," while the rich man, who ignored his appeals for help while on earth, is found "in torments." "He that loseth his life," in deeds of mercy and kindness, "will find it." "Give, and it shall be given unto you." "Whosoever shall give even a cup of cold water in my name shall not lose his reward." By these and many other deeds and words of Our Lord we see the great emphasis he laid on the benevolent, humanitarian side of the religious life.

Considering how the unfortunate man or woman appealed to our Lord, we can but feel the destitute, homeless and unprotected child must have had large claims upon his sympathy and affection. A man were in better condition "drowned in the depth of the sea" than "to offend against one of these little ones." "Their angel faces do always behold the face of your Father, who is in heaven." "It is the will of your Father who is in heaven that not one of these little ones should perish." "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Then surely no cause can be closer to the heart of the Master than the care of the homeless "little ones" of our country. Yet the great, wealthy Southern Methodist Church has made but a poor showing in this noble work. We have left it to unsanctified hands to perform. People of no denomination, and of the great Roman Catholic Church, and even of the Jewish religion, have been doing the greater part of this work.

The Southern Methodist Church, with 1,700,000 members, are operating thirteen orphanages, with 1,300 inmates, requiring 1,300 members of our church to care for one homeless child. In Louisiana we have but one orphanage, struggling with a crushing debt of $14,000, now caring for thirty-five children. In the city of New Orleans, alone, the Roman Catholic Church housed, fed and clothed 1580 orphans last year, 280 more than the entire Southern Methodist Church altogether, and 1,560 more than we in the entire State did the same year. Besides this, the Catholics cared for over 1,000 aged and infirm, while we have done nothing in that direction, and gave very inadequate support to the worn-out soldiers of the cross, and their widows and orphans.

James' conception of religion, "to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction," is at least an important side of Christianity. And the church that does this kind of work is building her temples upon an indestructible foundation.

We appeal to Methodists to care for their orphans, and feel that the present time calls for their largest gifts.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

Ruston, La.

A FAREWELL RECEPTION.

Miss Hallie Buie, who will soon go as a missionary to Korea, was tendered a most cordial greeting and delightful reception at the Methodist Church Wednesday afternoon by the members of the Ladies' Memorial Society of the church. One feature of the occasion took the form of a novelty shower, many appropriate gifts consisting of snowy linen, beautiful toilet articles, silverware and liberal contributions of cash, being showered upon the guest of honor at the prompting of loving, sympathetic hearts.

At the weekly prayer-meeting service Wednesday night Miss Bule delivered a short address, during which she recited with touching faith and sincerity of manner the call to duty by her Heavenly Master, which had led her to consecrate herself to the mission work in foreign fields.

Miss Buie will leave for California in a few days and after spending a short time with her brother, who is a Methodist minister in that State, expects to sail from San Francisco about Sept. 8 for Korea. As is known to many, She is a daughter of Mr. Prentiss Buie, of Caseyville, and a sister of Dr. E. H. Buie, of Brookhaven. She is an alumna of Whitworth College, and has spent the past two years in the Scarritt Bible and Training School at Kansas City, making special preparation for her chosen work. The good wishes and godspeeds of many friends and Christian hearts will follow her as she goes a stranger to a strange, far-away land for her Master's sake.

The above is clipped from the Brookhaven Leader and will be of interest to the Mississippi Conference, whose heartfelt prayers follow this dear young daughter as she takes her journey to her far-away field of labor. Korea will be nearer and dearer because of this living link.

Many other auxiliaries besides the one at Brookhaven have given substantial proof of their affectionate interest in Miss Buie. Her own home church has been deeply stirred by her going, and is planning large things for her support.

During a recent visit to Hattiesburg Miss Buie was the recipient of many love tokens, and Vicksburg, Natchez, Meridian, Shubuta and other places have supplied something for her future comfort and happiness.

God has greatly honored us in setting apart this young woman from our midst for his service, and we must put back of her our loving interest and hearty support. May her going be a call to each woman of the Mississippi Conference to more consecrated zeal for his service.

MRS. BESSIE W. LIPSCOMB.

THE MISSISSIPPI DELTA.

By Rev. R. A. Meek.

The Yazoo basin of the Mississippi River, commonly called the Mississippi Delta, is one of the most inviting and promising fields of labor open to Southern Methodism. As a place for aggressive mission work, it justly claims attention and challenges the evangelical enterprise of the Church.

This great valley has perhaps an average width of fifty miles east and west, and beginning at Vicksburg, extends northward a distance of 225 miles to the Tennessee line. It embraces in whole or in part eighteen of the western counties of Mississippi, and has an area of 6,600 square miles. The fertility of its soil compares favorably with the richest agricultural sections of the globe, not even being surpassed by the famous valley of the Nile.

Twenty-five years ago this territory was largely a wilderness. The settlements were scattered, there were no railroads, and the percentage of land in cultivation was very small. But the progress made within the past two and a half decades has been phenomenal. There are now more than 1,000 miles of railroad in operation, and in 1902 the assessment rolls showed taxable property (not including the railway assessments) aggregating $42,000,000, an increase of sixty per cent in less than twenty years. During the same period the banking capital of the Delta increased from $350,000 to $2,300,000, and the population from 95,000 in 1880 to 196,000 in 1900.

Here are located some of the largest cotton plantations in the world, many of them having in one tract several thousand acres in cultivation. The exact figures are not at hand, but it is probable that the Delta produces annually not less than 500,000 bales of cotton. Nor is the productiveness of the soil limited to the fleecy staple, but it grows with equal responsiveness corn, vegetables, and almost every other variety of farm product.

The population is unusually cosmopolitan for a section of the South east of the Mississippi River. In many places the Italians are sufficiently numerous to have separate public schools, and are likely to be more plentiful in the near future. There are many Jews, a sprinkling of Greeks, Syrians and Germans, and a good many Chinamen. Of the last named I am told there are 200 engaged in the mercantile business in and around Greenville alone.

But the negroes constitute by far the largest part of our citizenship. Indeed, the Mississippi Delta may be said to be the black man's paradise. He is highly appreciated as a laborer, and here he thrives, accumulates, and enjoys the fruits of his toil to an extent almost unparalleled. In the town of Greenville, where there are 6,000 of them, they have their own doctors, lawyers, stores, banks and newspapers. Hundreds of them own their homes, and some of them possess considerable means.

The white Americans inhabiting this territory are in the main an unusually high class, socially and intellectually. They read, travel and keep well informed. Those in the country are not less refined and intelligent than those in the towns, and the smaller places require as high an order of ministerial service as the larger ones. This makes the matter of pulpit supply a somewhat perplexing problem.

As a field for religious work, the Delta presents many grave difficulties. A few of them may be mentioned:

1. The tides of worldliness are unusually strong. As in most places where money is easily made, the people are disposed to luxurious living. The mania for speculation, various forms of Sabbath desecration, and all of the questionable amusements are widely prevalent.

2. Immigration also operates strongly against the development of the work. The population is shifting, and in many places a strong Church is scarcely built up before the people begin to move away and disintegration sets in. The material coming in to take the place of this outflow has to be worked up and interested before it can be utilized. This presents a laborious and never-ceasing task.

3. Another serious hindrance to success is what may be termed an absentee landlordism. Many families owning thousands of acres of land here live in Memphis, New Orleans and the North. This weakens us much in numbers and more in the matter of ministerial support.

The religious history of this section is chiefly the history of the operations of the Methodist Church. Here, as nearly everywhere else in the South, the followers of Wesley were the pioneers. And for many years, when the field was largely an unattractive wilderness, when there were no facilities for transportation, when the mud and deadly malaria everywhere held sway, there were none to share their toils, and the fellowship of their sufferings. Here they wrought with apostolic spirit, and here a number of them fell at duty's post with a note of triumph upon their lips.

Nor was their sacrifice in vain. The splendid service which they rendered has strongly entrenched Methodism in this field. A considerable portion of the Delta is within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, but in our part of it lies the whole of the Greenville District and three-fourths of the Winona District. We have in this territory thirty-two pastoral charges, nearly a quarter of a million dollars worth of church property, and a membership approximating 5000.

The present situation may be briefly summarized as follows: The Methodist Church is largely in the ascendancy and in the main holds the field, but the other churches are putting forth vigorous efforts to secure a foothold. The era of unchallenged supremacy has passed, and one of fierce denominational competition is now on. The Baptists are spending missionary money freely to establish themselves here, the Episcopalians, Presbyterians and Campbellites are active, and even the Roman Catholic Church is conducting missions and exhibiting an earnest spirit of propagandism. Henceforth we must be wide awake and aggressively evangelical if we are to preserve in this field what has been bequeathed to us by our heroic predecessors, and build worthily upon the broad foundation which they laid.

Of a splendid future for the Mississippi Delta there can be no doubt. If the invasion of the Mexican boll weevil, now beginning, shall result in breaking up the large plantations which exist here and in cheapening the price of lands, this territory will no doubt rapidly become the home of a large and thrifty white population. Such an incoming tide of immigration will bring to our Delta Methodism a great responsibility and an inspiring opportunity. If, on the other hand, the present plantation system of agriculture should continue, the development of the country will doubtless, notwithstanding, go steadily on. As yet perhaps not more than 50 per cent of it is in a state of cultivation. New railroads will be constructed, new settlements will be made, and new villages spring up. Into these new fields Methodism must be swift to enter. It is in reaching and planting the church in such localities that we so urgently need the assistance of our Mission and Church Extension Boards. There are at present in the Greenville District alone fifteen preaching places without a house of worship, to say nothing of other parts of the Delta. The denomination which first reaches a new community and builds a church secures a position of vantage from which it is well nigh impossible to dislodge it.

It is never altogether safe to essay the role of a prophet, but I venture to predict that if Methodism succeeds in measuring fully up to the magnificent opportunity which here lies out before her, and keeps pace with the development of this marvelous valley, forty or fifty years hence she will have here a domain which will pay more into the treasury of the church than any other of equal area in the entire connection. Shall we prove equal to the task, or let others take from us our patrimony and crown? The future soon will tell.—Board of Church Extension, Annual Report.

What are we coming to? Away up in Minnesota, where morals and good order are supposed to rule, a Sunday base ball game (professional) was preceded by a sermon, the preacher being, according to the press dispatch, Rev. G. L. Morrill, denomination not named. This was in Minneapolis. The following sentence in the sermon was reported: "The West," said Mr. Morrill, "is never content to be behind the East in any progressive movement and will not take a back seat when base ball religious services be considered. For myself, I do not usually attend Sunday games, because I go every other day in the week, but there is no reason why others than myself should not enjoy the sport. 'Live and let live' is a pretty good motto, and I believe that this crowd is largely made up of men who have but this one weekly chance to see the Minneapolis club fight for the pennant. I believe the only sin of Sunday base ball is for the home team to lose, so I say to the Minneapolis boys, 'Go in and climb a notch toward the flag.'" That preacher has a strange conception of the holy Sabbath and his obligation to wayward men. We have not language strong enough to express our condemnation of the preacher, evangelical or other, who thus puts himself in opposition to God's law of the Holy Sabbath. Such a preacher is obliged to break down his influence as a winner of souls.

* * *

Can anybody tell why it is that Roman Catholic Archbishops, Bishops and often the lower order of the clergy, are met on their visits, official and otherwise, with such demonstrations as are wholly inconsistent with the spirit of the mission of a gospel minister? Why are they met, as is sometimes the case, with the paraphernalia of war, drums, musical instruments and guns? That the faithful should not only respect, but honor and obey their spiritual guides, is all right. They are entitled to it by virtue of their office, but to hail them as heroes, or princes of the world, is not according to the gospel. Last week, at Estherwood, La., three priests were met at the depot on their arrival by six hundred people, and received "a salute of twenty-one guns." This is honor such as is paid in American life only to soldiers of distinction—generals, or some hero. As far as we know, Roman Catholics are the only Christians in the world that meet and greet their spiritual advisers with the weapons of carnal warfare. We see in this a recognition of the temporal power of the Pope as well as his spiritual leadership of the Church. Else why pay civic, or military honors to the Pope's representatives? Do the priests drill their men and boys in military tactics? Is that question out of place?

A short time since it was reported that Mr. Taft, president of the United States, visited a barber shop on the Sabbath, and "had his hair cut," in a State where such secular work is in violation of the Sabbath law. Of course, the "Puritans" were greatly shocked. Mr. Taft should not have done it. If he has no scruples, or convictions in regard to the sanctity of the day, he should have respected public sentiment and obeyed the law. Rather, he should not have forced the barber to violate the law. Secular editors who "fear not God nor regard man," though not openly approving Mr. Taft's conduct, are swift to ridicule the people who condemn him. Some may say: this was Mr. Taft's private business—"to his own Master he stands or falls." So be it. But what about gathering around him his ministers of state, and holding an all-day cabinet meeting on the Sabbath? That was public business, and Mr. Taft cannot plead an emergency. There is no emergency. Congress is not in session, and the whole country is at rest. We were not among those who condemned Mr. Taft because of his Unitarian principles, but when we see the principles of our Christian civilization set aside and despised by the President of the United States, we feel bound to lift our voice, though ever so feeble, in protest. President Taft's disregard of the Sabbath will go far towards demoralizing the people.

Governor Haskell, of Oklahoma, is sincerely desirous of enforcing the prohibition law of the State, but, like other officers, he meets with difficulties. He charges what everybody knows to be true, that one of the greatest hindrances to the execution of the law is the aid which the United States government gives to the violation of the law—the law enacted, not by the State, but by the Congress of the United States. The Governor has addressed a letter on the subject to President Taft, which letter is accompanied by a petition signed by 2,000 citizens. In his letter to Mr. Taft, the Goverenor charges the Federal Government "with giving aid to violators of the prohibition law in Oklahoma, first by allowing liquor advertisements to be sent through the mails; second, by not conforming to the law in issuing liquor licenses, and, third, through the abuse of the protection of interstate commerce." The citizens, in their petition, say: "We appeal to you on all three questions above stated for such favorable consideration as you may deem to be within your lawful power at this time; and in case your authority be not now legally complete, we appeal to you to recommend at the coming session of Congress the enactment of such additional legislation as may be necessary to give complete relief on all three propositions to the end that the United States Government may at least cease to give aid and assistance to those who would violate the laws of this or any other prohibition State or district." The next Congress will evidently have to answer to the people if it fails to give relief from interstate exactions, and the issuance of Federal tax receipts in prohibition territory.

We cannot imagine how we would feel sitting down to a $25 dinner. As we expect no such fortune to come to us, we shall spend no time in getting ready for it. But what of our friends, the Jeffersonian Democrats of Mississippi, headed by Governor Noel, who has all along led "the simple life?" It is given out that a banquet will be provided on the occasion of Mr. Taft's visit to Jackson on Nov. 1, and that applications are now being received by the secretary of the entertainment committee for seats at the table, the price demanded being $25 per plate. That is a steep figure for oyster soup, or the regulation "consomme," with a few other things, the liquid refreshments, save cold water and buttermilk, being left out (Mississippi being a prohibition State, and the Governor, who, we presume, will be master of ceremonies, being a stanch prohibitionist). Of course, the raising of revenue is not the object of the heavy charge, but to keep away a crowd—especially the crowd that usually fills space—and their mouths, when refreshments are free. But we dare say the table will be filled. Some will sit down to that banquet, after producing the $25, who will not have paid the last month's grocery bill. Such is human nature! Let those who will, pay the price. They will never have another opportunity to sit down to dinner with the President of the United States.

Ex-Governor Folk, of Missouri, one of the great men of the country, always on the right side of moral questions, standing with such men as Senator Dolliver, Governor Comer of Alabama, and others that might be named, recently delivered an address to 3,000 persons at Bristol, Tenn.-Va. The dispatch does not state the title of his speech. The extracts given indicate that good citizenship was the burden of his theme. He laid the blame for misgovernment, or bad government, at the door of "honest voters," charging them with "inactivity." In the course of his remarks he said: "If the honest voters in the badly-governed cities would assert themselves they could have a local government of which they could justly be proud. In the worst governed cities the good citizens are deplorably passive. In such cases the vicious are always active, and in this way run things as they please." What Mr. Folk says is largely true. But before every honest man can take part in the preliminary work, some things in the primary law must be eliminated. Everyone taking part in a primary election virtually promises, and in some cases is formally made to declare his purpose to "vote for the nominee." It requires an extreme partisan to do that. We do not see how a good man can vote for a man known to be corrupt. This he is obliged to do if he goes into the primary, and a corrupt man secures the nomination. In some instances none but bad men either come forward, or are put forward, and the good citizens can do nothing. The bad elements hold the machine and manage it to suit themselves. And, as a rule, when an independent candidate comes out, there are enough "bosses" and "machine" men to beat him. In a non-partisan election the good elements combine—as in a prohibition contest—but in party elections too many good men think more of the party than they do of putting clean men in office. Maybe, the tide will turn some of these days. We hope so.

OUR EDUCATIONAL SITUATION.

By Dr. J. A. Rice.

V.

We have seen that any adequate conception of education makes an imperative call for religion as an indispensable factor in the educational process.

This call is reinforced by the fact that the dominant educational ideals of peoples have determined their places in history and that the dominant religious faith has largely determined their educational ideals. A glance at China will remind us that her religion is essentially ancestor worship, which glorifies the past, teaching that whatever has been is right. All her education, therefore, is an effort to master the past by developing memory, and the result is universal stagnation. Meanwhile, in Japan, this same ancestor-worship, touched by the modern spirit, has taken the form of aggressive patriotism, and to be a soldier and die for his country is therefore the goal of every youthful ambition and training, with the well known result of making her master of the Orient. In India absorption into Nirvana is the end of all religious aspirations, and the young are trained to a dreamy ease in their several castes. Hence, a stratified people given over to a negative subjectivity. Persia's dualism sought to line up every man on the side of light against darkness, and therefore to develop only moral judgments for sharp discrimination and physical strength for war, to the neglect of all else. The result was a race of high moral ideals, strong martial spirit, but without sufficient moral and intellectual force to endure. The caste spirit in ancient Egypt produced a priest-craft that made large contributions to civilization, but planted seed of disintegration and decay that finally blighted all her educational work, and wiped her off the face of the earth. In Sparta the God of War ruled supreme, fighting was the religion of the people, and the making of soldiers was their chief effort and achievement. Athens worshiped the beautiful and set the standard in certain forms of art for all time, but training that is only aesthetic cannot produce either intellectual or moral power sufficient to guarantee survival in the bitter struggle for existence, and she went to pieces on the moral side. In Rome, the glory of the state was the religion of all, and practical training for service to the state was their only national purpose. But mere practical training does not reach the lower deeps of life, does not even seek to make more than good machines for immediate use, and cannot, therefore, liberate the latent energies of the soul and bring them to the highest manhood. The secular makes no appeal to the infinite in man. National disaster was, therefore, inevitable. In Mohammedan lands, the religion of the will produces a discipline which organized heterogeneous tribes into a powerful people, making them the impersonation of force, but lacking the ethical and spiritual, their end is even now in sight.

Coming to later times, education in France had so suffered from effete religion that in 1600 Henry IV. reorganized the University of Paris, and so, first in modern times, brought the state into the field of higher education. This was the beginning of a formal protest against ecclesiasticism which, later, helped on the horrors of the Revolution, and later still led the world in throwing the Bible out of the schools. The same trend of things in England, which promised like results, was thwarted by the Wesleyan revival. Had Voltaire been a Wesley, there might have been no French Revolution—no Napoleon—no Louisiana Purchase, and a far different history of Europe and America during the last century and a half.

During all these ancient and modern revolutions and evolutions there has been a despised people wandering over the face of the earth—homeless, friendless, holding themselves holy, worshiping one holy and righteous God, basing all the education of their children upon his revelations recorded in a Holy Book, making religion the center of all their society. What but this religious training preserves the Jews alone, of all the nations they touched, to tell the story, and gives them an abiding place among men.

Even the modern conceptions of education and the most approved pedagogical principles are but the working out of the spirit and methods of Jesus and the legitimate expression of Christianity.

So that the relation of education and religion in America is of tremendous moment to every American. It is not education that is to solve our complex problems, but the right kind of education. With all our boastings, our only progress since Pericles has been on the religious rather than on the culture side, for the masses of to-day are even below those of his day in intelligence. If we are so unwise as to shift the emphasis from the religious to the intellectual, none can be so bold as to guess what a thousand years may bring forth. If history teaches anything, it establishes the primacy of religion not only in education, but in social, economic and industrial life as well. Even the present reign of homicide is traceable to the religious unrest abroad in the land. For back of all our homes—back of all our institutions, laws and customs—back of all our reasoning—back of all our strenuous oral endeavors—back of all our earnest social service—back of everything that is worth knowing—of everything that, in the long run is worth doing, is this universal, all-powerful religious instinct. Not more education, therefore, but more religious education, and education that is more religious, is the pressing need of the hour.

Nor is it enough to claim that the home and the church provide the religious training, while the mission of the school is to the intellect, and, in a measure, to the morals. For the soul cannot be thus cut up and dealt with in sections. It is one, and whatever affects a part of its life, affects all. Besides, the student is largely away from these influences in a separate community with distinct traditions and customs, and if reached at all, must be reached by the college.

Since the most fundamental phase of education is religion, the church cannot escape responsibility for the kind of education given, insofar as she is able to influence prevailing types. This is all the more important in view of the fact that the storm and stress period comes during college years. We are only now beginning to feel the momentous importance of this era in the life of our young. Tremendous physical changes are taking place in adolescence, changes in muscular tension, in the temperature of the blood, in all the organs of the body. Along with these physical upheavals there are mental and moral of far-reaching significance. The soul seems then to awaken to a sense of a larger world, of the whole universe indeed. Sex is fully developed, complete selfhood is born. We are hurled helplessly across abysmal chasms and dragged up rugged mountain-slopes to far summits where infinite vistas stretch out in every direction. The whole self is re-selfed, and hence it is a time of intellectual reconstruction. We pass out of the fancies of childhood and a rapid process of disillusionment goes on. It is therefore not uncommon for youth to go to pieces in the terrible struggle of re-adjustment. There is no period in life when a wholesome atmosphere and wise friends are so greatly needed.

This also is the period of conversion. "There is a normal period, somewhere between the innocence of childhood and the fixed habits of maturity, while the person is yet impressionable and has already capacity for spiritual insight, when conversions most frequently occur." "We may safely lay it down as a law, then, that amongst the females there are two tidal waves of religious awakening, at about thirteen and sixteen, followed by a less significant period at eighteen; while among the males the great wave is at about sixteen, preceded by a wavelet at twelve, and followed by a surging up at eighteen or nineteen." (Starbuck.) There is then a rapid drop of the curve down to twenty-five and the per cent. after that is very small. This makes it all the more important that the dominant note in our atmosphere in adolescence be strongly, but wisely, religious.

The church can, therefore, never escape responsibility for the education of the youth of the land. She is the only institution whose peculiar and exclusive business is with religion, and she cannot sever herself from that phase, not only of individual, but of social life. Back of all of our society, back of our commerce and industry, back of all our institutions and enterprises there is somewhere a religious interest, and wherever that interest is to be found the Church must go also.

There are two possible methods of discharging her obligation; one by erecting church halls in conjunction with State and independent colleges and universities, creating and maintaining in them a strongly religious atmosphere, raising the standard of morals and religion so high there as not only to control her own people but to force like ideals upon the whole community. More and more freedom in the classrooms of universities is likely to prevail in America. Indeed there can be no real university without freedom of inquiry, and to this freedom of inquiry Protestantism is irrevocably committed. The only offset to the peril incident to this freedom is in the atmosphere, which is the most powerful factor in university life. The Church is hardly ready yet to venture upon this solution of the problem. Her only other recourse, therefore, is to maintain a sufficient number of strong institutions to do her share of the work and to hold up adequate ideals for all the people.

A FIELD OR A FORCE—WHICH?

By Rev. T. B. Holloman.

Recently, in conversation with the pastor (not Methodist) of a large congregation, he said: "I wish that my church was a force with which I might work, rather than a field in which I have to dig."

Here is, indeed, a fine discrimination as to the pastor's place in the church, and the breathing of a spirit that every man truly called of God to preach can fully appreciate. While he is willing to spend and to be spent in the interest of the Master, he longs for that co-operation of the church which he realizes is so essential to the greatest success of his work. While leadership is his from the very position which he occupies—he must be instant in season, out of season, and ready for every good word and work—there are many details which require attention beyond his strength, or his wisdom. That graphic picture drawn by the lamented Sam Jones of the pastor in the shafts pulling the membership, while the lash is being vigorously applied, is, alas, too true, often in the history of our churches.

When one takes the Discipline of our own church and notes the many requirements at the hands of the pastor (and too often left for him to struggle with single and alone), he is ready to join with the inspired penman in his query: "Who is sufficient for these things?" This was the question which presented itself to the church in the days of the apostles, and which brought forth Stephen and his six associates.

At a conference not a decade back the presiding Bishop exhorted the pastors to attend upon all the societies within their congregations, from the Junior League and Sunday School up to missionary meetings, great and small; adding that in this way only could he keep in touch with his work. In the course of the same address much stress was laid upon "visiting from house to house," and then some most excellent advice (only such as a wise Bishop could give) on diligence in study, that the young man should show himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word. A fine lecture, but who could meet its multitude of suggestions without help at some points?

As I looked upon that class of young ministers as they stood before the chancel and heard them answer affirmatively the questions propounded, I was deeply impressed with the candor with which they replied and the honest purpose within them to meet those obligations. I could but breathe a prayer to the great Head of the Church that he would provide laborers in the various fields to which they might be assigned, to be unto them as Priscilla and Aquilla were unto the great apostle. A Zenas here, and a John Mark there, in all the churches.

"A field to dig in!" What a sense of burden is here expressed! What a cry for relief! "A force with which to work!" What a stirring within him of every power and offering of every energy to the magnifying of the Master, but he was bound with the grave-clothes, which needed to be loosed that he might go.

In this day of multiplication of organizations within the church, this pastor found only a multiplication of duties and no corresponding relief; therefore, he cries out: "O for a force, and not a field!" He must encourage the Sunday school, nurse the young people's society, attend upon "those women" and look after the sick; prepare food convenient for the morning, and for the evening hours, and, most of all, must not forget the collections lest he be counted a laggard in his work.

If it be true that "he is a benefactor who makes two blades of grass to grow were hitherto has grown but one," what an opportunity there is in the church for the developing of benefactors and heroes.

Brethren of the pews, again I call, in the interest of the pulpit, and of the great church to which we belong! Again I appeal that you let not the pastors struggle under the loads which so sorely burden! If the great laymen's movement means anything, it is that this be done.

Edwards, Miss.

KNOWLEDGE OF SELF.

By Rev. Robt. B. Downer.

What a sublime picture of man Psalm 8 reveals: "Created a little lower than the angels, yet crowned with glory and honor, given dominion over the works of God's hands," yet required at the Day of Judgment to give a personal account of words spoken, deeds performed, it becomes him to keep correctly informed of the life lived as the days glide by. Man's influence and responsibilities are rarely ever comprehended by himself. We can revel with the multitude without being able to lose our identity. The megaphone message of God's authority, "Where art thou," is continually heard, even amidst the blasphemies and revilings of sinful life.

There is no escape from God. See 9th chapter of Amos. In 2d Corinthians, chapter 13, verse 5, we are admonished of the wisdom of self-examination, as to the status of Christian faith. Possibly there has never been a time in the history of Christ's earthly kingdom more needful for personal knowledge of divine acceptance than that of the present century. Upon material lines the progress of the Methodist division of Christ's kingdom is marvelous—more educated ministers, more costly church buildings erected, more money given for mission and church work, more laymen interested on all lines; it seems not far from the millenium. Yet there are some indices of abnormal heart action, an indefinite something, seems lacking.

Some of us Methodist ministers have stood before those who had authority to inquire, and we were asked: "Are you going on to perfection?" "Are you groaning after it?" "Do you expect to be made perfect in love in this life?" God's angel has a record of answers given, if our memories are obscured. Will you take offense if I inquire: Have you attained? If not, why not? If not, has not your failure proved a serious loss to you personally and to God's people, as the ambassador of Christ—seeing that it is exceeding difficult to lead others over a route of which you have no personal knowledge?

Is Christian Perfection a superfluity? Is there any substitute for it acceptable to God? Will an average Christian life suffice? Will extra devotion of time, money and talents, exploiting education, missions, church building, works of philanthropy, etc., justify our negligence in being panoplied with all the armor of God, and being filled with all the fullness of God? What is the status of those who, when honest, say without emotion or contrition, "I know that I am not wholly given up to God; I know that there are things in my heart that are contrary to his will," and live this sinful double life for years, not seeking or finding deliverance.

Have this half-hearted class the commendation of even ungodly sinners? Have you never heard of the question: "What are these wounds in thy hands?" Answer: "These with which I was wounded in the house of my friends?"

How many lost souls have stumbled into hell because of your lack of heart-consecration? Why do you do not enter into the joy of full salvation? Do you say, "I have longed for it and am willing to make any sacrifice, and yet I do not know of any reason unless it is my unbelief." Is unbelief a small matter? What caused the bleaching of Israel's bones upon the desert sands? Does not unbelief challenge the rectitude of God?

Is "holding the fort" in contentment the acme of the possibilities of divine grace and power? If in any special attack upon the kingdom of Satan we capture no prisoners, and we stand repulsed, is it wise to be content, saying, "Anyhow, we fired some big guns, made glorious music, had a lively time, gave Satan a frightful scare, and we still hold the fort." What we need is more polish of gun barrels, greater skill in musical harmony; we need more choir practice, possibly some moving pictures, a lot of canary birds, a few extra fiddles and a bass drum—with these we hope for victory at the next camp meeting.

Every lost battle has a cause. Israel's host can be made invincible. All failures can be traced if we will ask the aid of God's search light—the Holy Spirit—and if it is revealed that man is at fault, will it not be wise to get right with God at any cost? Did not Joshua set a noble example—"As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Time moves on, opportunities approach and pass, you are hindering or helping. For some of us the judgment bar of God is near—"that which thou doest must be done quickly." "Dare to be a Daniel, dare to stand alone." Suffer not the blood of souls to lie at your door.

Long Beach, Miss.

AN IDEAL QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.

By Rev. Paul M. Brown.

In these days, when the Quarterly Conference is held to be a decadent institution, and when we are told that "Ichabad" has been written upon the office of the presiding elder, it might be that the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate would like to hear how one pastor made his Quarterly Conference a notable occasion.

When Rev. Wilson Moore became homesick in Arkansas last fall, and transferred to his old Conference, he found himself pastor of Eden Circuit. Few men in Southern Methodism faced, at the beginning of the Conference year, a work that bristled more with difficulties and discouragements than did Brother Moore. Nine weak, demoralized churches, scattered over a territory of more than 500 square miles, which had been devastated materially by flood and weevil, and, morally, by sin of every kind, composed the Eden Circuit, as mapped out by the Cabinet at Leesville. Fortunately for Brother Moore, he had served the people of this charge in former years, and had won their affections and confidence.

A much stronger man, physically, than Moore might well have been dismayed at the prospect of the long ride over rough roads necessary to fill the appointments of their circuit of old-time proportions; but those who know Wilson Moore know that he is not easily daunted. With indomitable will and the pluck of a genuine itinerant, he went to work—but I started out to write of that Eden Quarterly Conference.

Well, Brother Moore decided that he would make his Third Quarterly Conference something more than a perfunctory visit of an official of the Church, and so, weeks beforehand, he began to prepare his programme. His presiding elder was made to sit up and take notice when he was furnished with a programme and requested to get ready to fill his part of it, which was two sermons on themes chosen by the pastor.

During the six months of his incumbency, the said presiding elder had noted with many a sigh the wearisome monotony of the average Quarterly Conference, and so was prepared to welcome any movement toward relief.

That programme left no work of the Church unprovided for. Laymen from his own and adjoining charges had been drafted for service. Those elect women, Sisters James and Sewel, who are so ably leading the women of the Alexandria District in their missionary activities, had been induced to be present. Well, the people were there—lots of them, both Saturday and Sunday. The community provided sumptuous dinners for both days.

We will not ask the space to describe the details of the programme; suffice it to say that, barring the sermon, it was all that could be desired, from the standpoint of both interest and instructiveness.

We found the pastor and his family comfortably housed in a new parsonage, built since Conference, and riding in a splendid buggy behind a strong horse furnished by the generosity of the circuit. Besides these tokens of progress, reports on general state of the church showed the circuit leading most of the charges of the district.

Now, don't let the other presiding elders be casting covetous eyes toward Eden and Moore! He is down in this elder's notebook for a second year on this charge, or something better in the Alexandria District.

It is hardly necessary to say that that Quarterly Conference occasion was followed by a sweeping revival.

Alexandria, La.

IN OUR NEW HOME.

By Rev. Jas. M. Weems.

Thirty years ago we came to Shubuta and found ourselves homeless, as the parsonage was burned a few days before Conference. We were tenderly cared for, however, until the new house was built, and we moved into it. On our arrival this year we went into the same cottage, and into the bedroom where our little 18-months Bessie suffered and went away from us into rest, and memories that the lapse of years had quieted were strangely stirred in the reflections of that first evening at home. Yet, we were sweetly sustained, and the heart comforted in the thought that her mission was accomplished, and that she is now in that rest for which we toil.

Soon after our arrival this year the question of a new location nearer the church and an up-to-date home for the pastor was agitated, and now we are in our new home, which, with its furnishings, is easily worth $3,000. I do not know of a preacher's home in the Conference that excells it in beauty or comfort, and I am sure not one was ever built with less tax on the pastor's time or thought.

And now, with zeal and commendable pride, the ladies are at work to furnish the house in a way to make it a real home and a comfort to those who may be sent to labor among them. As soon as the elect women have accomplished their self-imposed task we are going to hold a dedication service and turn the house over to the Master for the use of his servants who may be sent to labor among them.

Is it wrong for me to wish that I may enter into the labors of others during the remaining years of my ministry? As pastor, I have built two parsonages and bought one, and I have built seven churches. As presiding elder, we have built and bought twelve parsonages and built ten churches. So, you see, I have a practical interest in fifteen parsonages and seventeen churches.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

The Wingate Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which was recently completed, was dedicated on Sunday, Aug. 1, 1909, as "Katherine Bradford Chapel." The building was erected under the pastorate of Rev. E. D. Phillips and a building committee composed of the following: E. D. Phillips, chairman; Dr. Wm. T. Beali, C. C. Clark, J. E. Bell and Robt. E. Bradford, secretary-treasurer.

The New Church at Wingate, Miss.

It is a nice and well-constructed building, and is a credit to the town, as well as to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Dr. Wm. T. Beali preached the dedication sermon from the first chapter of Philippians, twenty-first verse: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." He handled his text well, and all who heard it thought it a fine sermon, especially for a man of Dr. Beall's age, as he has past the 76th year in life, and is still in the service. Dr. Beali was one of the prime movers in building the church.

After the sermon the church was presented to the speaker by Stewards Robt. E. Bradford and C. C. Clark in the following language: "We present you this house to be set apart from all unhallowed or common uses, for the worship of Almighty God."

After the service a sumptuous dinner was served in commemoration of the old-time Methodist style. All ate heartily, and seemed to enjoy the day, the weather being fair and not too warm.

The afternoon service was conducted by Rev. R. S. Gale, and Dr. Beall again at night.

The church was named in honor of the late Mrs. J. J. Bradford, who took the most active part in its erection, and who, on the 13th of last October, passed from the church militant to the church triumphant.

A pathetic scene was the gathering of several decrepit, gray-headed, slavery negroes, who are up in the eighties, and their children and grandchildren, who were given seats in the rear of the house, and who gathered to pay respect to their former mistress' memory, after whom the church was named.

R. E. BRADFORD.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Conference met at 10 a. m., on July 13, 1909, in the Methodist Church at Logansport, La.

The devotional exercises were conducted by the presiding elder, Rev. T. J. Warlick.

George L. Harrell, of Mansfield, was electted secretary, and Rev. P. O. Lowery, of Grand Cane, assistant secretary. The roll call showed most of the ministers present, though very few laymen answered to their names. Before the Conference adjourned, however, many others had reported.

The following committees were appointed by the presiding elder:

Quarterly Conference Record—T. H. Young, Frank Henderson, H. W. Baggett.

License to Preach—J. M. Brown, K. W. Dodson, B. H. Sheppard.

Orders—H. M. Whaling, C. B. Carter, A. C. Holder.

Resolutions—K. W. Dodson, B. H. Sheppard, P. O. Lowrey, Frank Henderson, T. T. Calhoun.

The reports from the various charges show the church to be in good condition spiritually and financially. Some of the brethren reported a scarcity of material for Sunday school teachers.

The following were elected as delegates to the Annual Conference: W. J. Sharp, W. L. Weher, W. F. Henderson and H. T. Liverman. The following were elected as alternates: S. H. Porter, G. L. Harrell and J. P. Scott. Rev. J. C. Rousseau was recommended for deacon's orders.

A resolution memorializing the Annual Conference to create two new districts were introduced and brought forth much discussion. When the matter reached a vote, it was carried by a good majority.

The death of Brother Moncrief was reported, and the presiding elder appointed A. C. Holder and C. M. Morris as a committee to draw up suitable resolutions.

The following were nominated as the committee on license and were duly elected: T. J. Warlick, chairman; C. B. Carter, H. M. Whaling, R. J. Harp, E. P. Craddock.

Mr. R. T. Moore, of Mansfield, was elected as District Leader of the Laymen's Movement.

Rev. N. E. Joyner, of St. Mark's Hall, was present and addressed the Conference on the subject of the French Missions. A liberal subscription was taken up to assist in the support of Rev. C. V. Breithaupt.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan made a strong appeal in behalf of the Orphanage at Ruston.

Mrs. Susie Llngie addressed the Conference on the subject of Epworth Leagues.

President W. L. Weher, of the Centenary College of Louisiana, and President G. L. Harrell, of Mansfield Female College, were both present in the interest of our educational institutions.

The preaching was done by Revs. J. M. Brown, C. B. Carter, R. J. Harp, and Drs. H. M. Whaling and W. L. Weher.

Zwolle was selected as the place for the next Conference.

The good people of Logansport spared no pains in showing the delegates a good time. The business men of the town provided a gasoline launch on which the entire Conference went on an excursion for several miles down the Sabine river. All who were present during the Conference were united in their praise of the people for the hospitality shown.

NEWTON DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The third Sunday in July we assisted Brother J. W. Price in his meeting at Good Hope, on the Harperville Circuit. There were no accessions to the church, but there were some old troubles settled, and quite a revival in the church.

The fourth Sunday in July we were with Brother C. H. Ellis, at Good Hope, on the Decatur Circuit. This meeting resulted in one accession on profession of faith, and the church strengthened spiritually. The first Sunday in August we were at Laurel, where we found Brothers Adams, Moore and Alford busy. Laurel Methodism is enjoying much success under the wide leadership of those three men.

From Laurel we went to Brother J. J. Golden, at Pleasant Grove, Rose Hill Circuit, and preached for him three days in a meeting he had already begun; he continued the meeting two days after we left. Some of the tangible results were 12 accessions, 8 family altars, and quite a revival in the church.

The second Sunday in August we were with that prince of local preachers, Brother J. C. Long, at Hester's Chapel, on the Neshoba Circuit. The meeting resulted in 14 accessions, and a great spiritual uplift to the church.

Then we ran down to Raleigh the third Sunday and held Quarterly Conference; then had three days at home, and then went to the Lake camp meeting.

Brother H. T. Tolle, the efficient pastor, had made all necessary preparations for a good meeting. There were about one thousand people present; the order was almost perfect. The meeting resulted in 23 accessions to our church and 60 conversions.

The preaching was done by Rev. J. J. Golden and the "Beloved." Brother Golden is fine help in a revival meeting. His sermon to the children Sunday afternoon was one of the best we ever heard. The singing of Brother Tolle and his well trained choir added much to the success of the meeting.

THE DURANT DISTRICT LEAGUE CONFERENCE.

The Durant District League Conference was held at Durant, Miss., July 20-21, with delegates representing all Leagues of the District except one.

The Conference opened on Tuesday afternoon of July 20. C. G. Smith, of Durant, gave the address of welcome, which was responded to by Miss Lovie Clark, of Kosciusko, our District Secretary. Walter Boswell, president of the Kosciusko League, was made president with Miss Lovie Clark as secretary.

The programme had been prepared with a view to train the Leaguers in organized League work. Each department was taken up separately and discussed thoroughly.

The Quiet Hour on Wednesday morning, conducted by Rev. R. A. Tucker, was a special feature.

Miss Tommie Foster, a graduate of the Scarritt Bible and Training School, who is to sail in September as missionary to China, brought a blessing to the Conference in the two addresses she gave. The pastors present, Revs. N. G. Augustus, S. M. Thames and R. A. Tucker, did much toward making the Conference a success. The address of Rev. N. G. Augustus on Wednesday evening was especially helpful.

A few Leaguers whose names appeared on the programme could not be present, but their places were filled, so that the entire programme was rendered.

On the closing night of the Conference the voluntary expressions of the Leaguers as to the help received proved that lasting good had been accomplished.

The social features of the Conference were especially attractive. On Wednesday afternoon a reception was given at the home of Mrs. Smith. The people of Durant were uniformly hospitable and proved their interest in League work by their cordial reception of the Conference.

The Durant District League Conference will meet in Durant next year as soon as expedient after the North Mississippi League Conference.

CAPTAIN EDWIN S. WALTON.

Only a few months ago the chronicler had to record the departure from the earthly home of Mrs. Fannie Walton, wife of Captain Edwin S. Walton, of Sardis, Miss. Scarcely has the heavy agony of this sorrow ceased before it breaks anew over the departure of the broken-hearted husband himself. They whose lives could not be twain in life could not be separated in death. One more of the immortal column of that peerless rank of men who make the remnant of the Confederate Veterans has passed away.

Edwin S. Walton, the only son of Benbury and Ann C. Walton, was born in Gates County, N. C., on March 31, 1833. At the age of 3 years his parents moved to Lagrange, Tenn., where Edwin grew to young manhood. The time had come when a scholastic course in college must begin. The University of Mississippi had just been inaugurated, and her halls opened for students at Oxford, Miss. Thither the family moved. Edwin entered the University, and after four years took his diploma. Soon after this the family made another move, and settled in Sardis, Panola county. Edwin joined his father, and spent some years in cultivating a plantation. This pursuit developed a strong, handsome physical frame, and gave him valuable experience for use in the future. How well equipped was this youth for a life of usefulness and honor, for a blessing to his home and an honor to his country. Well had he weighed the question of living. In his early boyhood he submitted his heart to God and united himself with the Christian community in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In that communion he maintained a consistent, active relation to the end of his days. Trained thus under the most refining influences in his domestic surroundings, established in the moral and religious principles which were to be his guide for the years to come, the promise of social and industrial hope was as fair as a capable, industrious young man could wish. But at that moment this fair prospect was overcast with the cloud of fratricidal war. With every citizen of patriotic honor, he joined the ranks as a private in Hudson's Battery, in which command he followed the fortunes of General Bedford Forest, in due time being chosen captain by his fellow-soldiers. This position he held till the end of the war. When campaign and battle could do no more, he quietly returned to his beloved home in Sardis, where he joined his fellow-citizens in building up their wasted fortunes and delivering the State from the despotism of reconstruction methods. He now entered on a career of great usefulness. His fine abilities and culture, his superior judgment and affable bearing won the confidence and good-will of all the people. They had unwavering confidence in his fidelity to truth and honor and right, and in the soundness of his judgment in all matters that affected the welfare of the community and the State. For a while he kept up his planting pursuit; but, finding that the returns were not adequate to the outlay, he established an office in Sardis and engaged in the fire insurance business. Both his taste and his education so well fitted him for this business that he readily passed into an expert adjuster. All parties to questions for adjustment had such confidence in his judgment and integrity that the business kept him on the road most of the time, and thus much away from home, the place of delight and charm to him.

He was married to Miss Fannie Shaw on April 12, 1866. The radiant beauty and pure devotion of this union continued until the year 1909 broke the earthly tie and removed both the lovers to the fairer realms of eternal day. His Fannie was all the world to him. They twain were one in life, and death could not part them.

Captain Walton was a man possessed of the highest characteristics of noble manhood and honor, marked for his sincerity, truth and fidelity; yet a man unpretentious and modest, he always chose his seat amongst the humble, though he might be asked to sit with the highest. He was a devoted son, bestowing on his venerable father the most tender and loving service and attention. He had the highest regard for the domestic relations and virtues. His presence in the home was respectful, courteous and loving. The beautiful devotion to his home was witnessed when, for several years, he gave his constant, unwearied, attentive ministry to his almost invalid wife. When her departure cut off this loving engagement of his heart and hand, the stroke was more than nature could bear, and disease had a ready passage to the vital seats of the mortal powers.

Captain Walton was a man who gave to every question with which he had to deal the most thorough and painstaking investigation, and held his conclusions with conscientious vigor and fidelity. Liberal and patient to an opponent, farthest removed from dogmatism, the tenacity with which he held to his convictions sometimes made him seem stubborn. But those who knew his motives and his manly heart knew how readily he would yield, if duty and fidelity would allow. But he must be true to his own convictions. And so, in dealing with the many questions of policy, of method and of practical action, he found himself unable to agree with others with whom he wished to harmonize and cooperate. While he was fundamentally sound in the doctrines and usages of trinitarian Protestantism, he did not think it necessary to embrace every form and statement of the church as valid and needful. Yet those who knew him well will accord to him the character of a true and faithful follower of our Lord Jesus Christ. He has given to his church and to the community in which he lived a noble, clean, manly life, founded on the doctrines and teachings of our divine Lord. How great a friend to the church, to civic righteousness and manly integrity, have the people of Sardis and Panola county and the wider circle of the country lost. How, then, is it with the bereaved daughter and the loving sisters, who hoped for the association of his life in the paths of earthly intercourse? But they sorrow not as others who have no hope. Jesus said: "Thy brother shall rise again." "He that believeth in me shall never die." The day of reunion, of eternal life, will surely come.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

OFF AGAIN.

This writer is convinced that nothing is more contagious than a habit, unless it be measles. Since succumbing to the infection to roam at large and take in the old camp ground he has been browsing among the hills of his younger days. This however, in response to the distress call of a worthy Brother when his "help had failed."

It has been my pleasure to spend a week and enjoy the privilege of preaching to the good people at Oak Ridge on the Warren Circuit. Here I met many friends of my younger days, and made acquaintance of children whose features were familiar, but whose names I had never heard. Of those known to me in my childhood, only the names of Grant and Harris were to be met with. It was at this place where lived the first pastor of my father's family, whose name I remember was that of Newsom, now an honored superannuate of the North Mississippi Conference; and whom the older brethren say was the founder of the Warren Camp Ground which was destroyed during the Civil War. If Brother Newsom's eyes should fall on this, and he has the strength, I would appreciate any information that he may give me concerning that encampment.) It was in the church at this place, that under the stern command of my leader and dear friend, Brother Ira B. Robertson, I first attempted any public exercises in the church; and from which he led me gently along, until ere I was aware, the Quarterly Conference, with presiding elder J. A. B. Jones, at its head, had me in hand, and conferred upon me the exalted privileges of a Methodist preacher. Powell, C. A., Featherstun, L. R., and the writer comprised the class recommended to the Annual Conference. Two of us abide while the other (a noble soul) has passed over the river and his body lies on the slope of the far-off Pacific, awaiting the glad sound that shall summons from him who giveth his beloved sleep and shall pronounce the "well done."

The old church, which was doubtless sufficient for its day, has given place to a more imposing structure, with seats of modern make and greater comfort. A house which in every particular is an honor to the community and exceedingly comfortable in its arrangements. The name of Brother George Guice is not only associated with the erection of this temple, but lingers yet "as ointment poured forth among the people."

Brother Jim Lewis is nearing the end of his quadrennium with this people and is held in high esteem as a faithful pastor and zealous worker for the Master. If the questionable time-limit did not demand, he might remain longer and round out a fuller work. He has a weekly prayer service which, since its organization, two years ago, has increased to large proportions, many coming two and three miles to attend.

I do not remember to have seen such a gathering of attentive, respectful, refined young people within these years. They are truly a singing band, and singing "with the spirit and the understanding." With the pastor as director and one of Whitworth's brightest graduates, Miss Accie Grant (and who, by the way, is a granddaughter to our honored Brother F. M. Williams) it could hardly be other than an inspiration for the best that the pulpit could produce. I remembered having heard a comment when a boy of this kind! During a great meeting a brother had preached a logical, great sermon, but the people were not moved. Finally one in the audience said, "Why Brother F. can sing more souls into heaven in a day than such sermons as that in a life-time." Remembering this comment, I was comforted that these young people led by their singing pastor would make up for all the deficiencies of the pulpit. Suffice it to say, Mr. Editor, we (I) had a royal time. May God rejoice the hearts of that young pastor, and of those anxious parents in the conversion of that happy band of sons and daughters. What a field for a strong Epworth League if only one could be found to lead! Our need is leaders.

"BISHOP FOR EIGHT YEARS."

This caption for editorials, though radical, is growing rather popular with the passing months. For one, we cannot see the wisdom of such a course upon the part of our Church. One exchange, the "St. Louis Christian Advocate," says the East India men and Japanese want a Bishop on the eight year basis. They claim as the President of the United States is elected for a term of four years, so ought the life term of a Bishop's official administration to have a limit. The Japanese claim, so our contemporary insists, that "keeping a man in the office of the Bishopric for life spoils him for the best spiritual results both in his own life and in the life of the Church at large."

Well, now, that is progress with a vengeance—going to a heathen country to get ideas for shaping a Church policy and forming a Church government. Why not go to the heathen countries for suggestions on religion? If they have such excellent ideas on these matters about which the Church seems to be so perplexed, why not sound these hoary religions made venerable by age on religious matters—doctrine and life as well.

Now as a matter of fact the strongest point in our Church government is its present form of Episcopacy.

It is this that has given the Church her prestige and influence in the world—as has been contributed by no other department of her thoroughly organized Church government. We can conceive of no greater disaster to overtake our Zion in shaping her policy than limiting the Episcopacy to a term of eight years. We clamor for an unlimited pastorate in certain sections and want a limited term of the Episcopacy. The very reasons set forth as ground for an unlimited pastorate are applicable for the continuance of our present form of the Episcopacy. Why not limit the term of deacons and elders orders subject to good behavior and official administration? If it be alleged the Bishopric is not an order but an office, we submit that our analogy holds good, nevertheless. It is claimed that our Episcopacy suffers for lack of efficient official administration, and the limiting the man to the office for a term of eight years would remedy the matter? Why, so? and how could it do it? We do not make reference to a sister denomination with a view of instituting an invidious comparison, but we have a Church in America whose Episcopacy is limited to a term of eight years. Are the Bishops in that Church (the United Brethren) more effective than Bishops in our Church? Is that Church less hampered by reason of its Episcopacy being limited to a term of eight years than is our Church whose Bishops are elected for life? Has that Church made greater progress than ours? Rather our Church has made the greater progress. The doctrines of the two churches are practically the same—so much so that pastors could be exchanged without serious embarrassment to the common cause fostered by both denominations. With profound respect for that great Church we cannot take it as a model for our Episcopacy. If it be insisted that the eight year term of office for the Episcopacy would obviate the mistakes of juvenility on one hand and senility on the other hand, we submit that chances for such mistakes are multiplied rather than diminished by the term of eight years for the Episcopacy. The general Conference would be engrossed with politics, rather than absorbed in the one work of the Master. Not political preferment in honor, but place-seeking would hold the balance of power rather than a sincere desire to put hands upon a man with prayer and consecration and set him apart for life to the office of Bishop. Impress upon the mind of the General Conference the fact that the office of a Bishop is for a term of eight years only and his election will provoke no special concern, necessitating little or no sense of dependence upon Divine guidance in so solemn and responsible a duty. Anyone, almost, would do for the office of a Bishop, and his election would attract little or no attention. If it be insisted that a Bishop soon becomes unfit for any other position in the Church, and therefore, it is not right to force a man in an office in the Church which by its long term renders him unfit for the pastorate, the reply is that he grows the more efficient with the passing years in the office of a Bishop and his removal from the office would be a loss rather than a gain to the whole Church.

This really is true in every other calling—why not in the office of a Bishop? Senator Morgan, of Alabama, was more influential in national affairs the last years in the Senate than any other time during his long term of office as U. S. Senator. His long term gave opportunity for the study of national and international affairs and there was not a position in the State of Alabama nor an office in the gift of its people in which Senator Morgan, in trying to fill, would not have found himself, hitherto accustomed to a world-wide view of things, circumscribed by his more local surroundings. So also with the Bishop. He has been forced by virtue of his office to think and plan on a large scale in Church affairs. His sermons and addresses are made to suit occasions with world-wide range and not narrow local conditions. A first-class Bishop would by the necessities of the case become a second-class pastor. The more efficient the Bishop, the less qualified would he be for pastoral work. But such a regime would not give opportunity for the development of the wisest and strongest possible leadership in the chief pastor. The true Bishop would just be in his prime at the end of eight years, subject to re-election by a process calculated to make politicians rather than Bishops. But why this hue and cry about the term of office of Bishop? Is it because such a proposed term of eight years would give opportunity to divide the plum among more aspirants? An unmade Bishop would be a very unsatisfactory acquisition to an Annual Conference. Like a horse with broken wind he would give promise of a fine race, but only to be disappointing to his admirers because of his broken spirit. Out of the very nature of the case these strong chief pastors would be mediocre men when assigned to the pastorate.

And this unfitness would be due, not to an unwillingness to adapt themselves to the new lot but, by reason of long years in the office of a Bishop, to a lack of adaptability to meet the responsibility of the new local surroundings. Without disparaging either loyalty or proficiency in ministers of the present college of Bishops, we hardly can conceive of a more difficult task than, as presiding elder, to assign any one of the Bishops to a charge in our district. There is not one of them that we would not hail with delight as our Bishop to hold our Conference, but to come up for an appointment at our hands, why, a night-mare would be a pleasant sensation compared with such an experience. Imagine our having (Bishop) E. R. Hendrix and (Bishop) A. W. Wilson in our district, and where in the world would we send them? Of all the "gum logs" they have met in their administration they would be the heaviest and wettest gum logs ever handled. The whole thing is ridiculous. The life tenure of office of the Bishop has been the glory of our Methodism in the past and the secret of her strength in world-wide Church propaganda. Her unquestioned leadership, her devoted loyalty that have been her glory and marked her splendid history have been due to the concentrated power of her leadership embodied in her Episcopacy.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

"POWER FOR SERVICE."

This is the title of a book of some three hundred pages, written by Rev. Benj. Lawrence, and published by Mr. C. O. Chalmers, publisher of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. The book is really a very full and complete discussion of the ministry of the Holy Spirit in the lives of Christians.

The early part of the book is taken up with a discussion of the general phases of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit—Personality, Divinity, and the other points familiar to students of Divinity. The author exhibits close acquaintance with this class of theological literature, and sets forth the old solid arguments in new, terse, and interesting fashion.

Mr. Lawrence is a Baptist, and the book is written from a Baptist standpoint, as is legitimate and to be expected. No phase of Baptist doctrine presents more striking peculiarities than the doctrine of the "Baptism of the Holy Spirit," and the "Work of the Holy Spirit in Believers." Mr. Lawrence presents a fair resume of the belief of the Baptist denomination on these subjects. One who desires to find in concise and explicit form the teaching of a great Church on a great subject will be repaid in reading "POWER FOR SERVICE," even though he may dissent from many of the opinions therein expressed.

Leaving out a few "side-long" arguments for immersion, which are foreign to the subject of the book and would have left it stronger if omitted, this book is a valuable contribution to the already extensive, yet too meagre, literature on the work of the Holy Spirit. It presents great truths from brand new angels of thought, and sets forth views which, while new and strange to people of other churches, represent fairly the views of some millions of enthusiastic and earnest Christian people. The book should have a place on the shelves of every thinking Christian.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Dear Co-Workers: I want to say a word to you about that "membership crusade." At the last Board meeting it was determined to make a special effort this fall to increase the membership of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society. The growth of the work in the foreign fields is so much greater than in the home church that we are unable to meet the demands that are so urgent upon us. The work must suffer unless we enlist more of our women. We will not be satisfied with less than 20,000 new members this year. Let every auxiliary make a special effort during the months of September, October and November to increase its membership.

Let Friday, Nov. 26, be "Enlistment Day." Hold an open meeting and receive publicly all new members who have been added during these three months. If your pastor will give you the Sunday night service, have your meeting then. See that every woman in the church is asked to join the society. Please report to me all new members, that we may keep a correct record.

Mrs. J. B. Cobb, associate secretary of the Woman's Board, will make an itinerary of our Conference the latter part of November, and I am sure she will strengthen the work wherever she goes. She has spent a year in China, Japan and Korea, and can tell much of conditions as she saw them. Don't fail to hear her, if she is within your reach.

We are now turning into the third quarter, and little has been done toward advancement in our Conference so far. Let us increase our membership 1,000 new members, and raise our pledge to $2,000. Is that too much?

A BOY'S ESSAY ON POLITENESS.

Politeness is rather a difficult thing, especially when you are making a start. Many people haven't got it. I don't know why, unless it is the start. It is not polite to fight little boys, except they throw stones at you. Then you can run after them, and, when you've caught them, just do a little bit at them, that's all. Remember that all little boys are simpletons, or they wouldn't do it. It is not the thing to make fun of a little chap because he is poorer than you. Let him alone if you don't want to play with him, for he is as good as you, except the clothes. When you are in school, and a boy throws a bit of bread or anything at you over the desks, it is not polite to put your tongue out at him, or to twiddle your fingers in front of your nose. Just wait till after school, and then warn him what you'll do next time; or if you find you are bound to hit him, be pretty easy with him. Don't keep on eating after you are tightening, and you will be far happier. Never eat quickly, or you might get bones in your throat. My father knows of a boy who got killed over his Sunday dinner. It is not polite to leave victuals on your plate, especially anything you don't like. If you don't like turnips, it is better to eat well into your turnips first while you are hungry, and you'll eat the meat and potatoes easy enough afterwards. Boys should always be polite to girls, however vexing they may be. Girls are not so strong as boys; their hair is long, and their faces are prettier; so you should be gentle with them. If a girl scratches you on the cheek, don't punch her, and don't tell her mother. That would be mean. Just hold her tight by the arms till she feels you could give it to her if you had a mind to.—Children's Answers.

"BUT THEY SEE NOT."

"Mother is feeling quite well to-day, thank you," said Violet Payne in response to a question from a lady seated on the old-fashioned porch that nearly touched the village sidewalk. "You know, it is her eyes that are giving us the anxiety. The doctor sent her here for rest and quiet, and it will be some months before he can determine what will result from his treatment."

"I hope she will soon be much better," said the lady gently.

"So do I," said the girl fervently. "You have no idea, Mrs. Wheaton, how I suffer from the suspense. They won't allow me to do anything for her, and I just have to wait. I can't read, and all I can do is to sit and think what a terrible thing it would be if she should never see again. I can think of nothing worse than being blind."

"I wouldn't give way to despondent thoughts if I were you, dear. Trust in God and keep your mind off doleful things. You know there is never any use in borrowing trouble."

"It is easy to talk when one has never had the experience," said Violet bitterly. "When people say such things to me, I always remember how I tried to console a girl who had lost her mother when I was at school. I meant it all right, but it must have sounded like mockery to her."

A little farther down the shady street Violet was halted by an eager woman who had worked for her grandmother several years, and she, too, tried to console the young girl. Violet often wished the doctor had chosen some other quiet spot than her mother's native village for their retreat, as it annoyed her to have to tell over and over just how her mother was last feeling and what the doctor had said when he was last there. Therefore she was in no mood for conversation when Jennie ran down the walk with some white sewing in her work-worn hands, and "wanted to know" all about the latest developments. Violet noticed the clumsy work she was doing with her needle, and she answered her questions as briefly as possible.

"If there's anything I can do, you'll let me know, won't you?" begged Jennie. "I'd love to do anything I could, because she was always so kind to me."

"Thank you," said Violet formally. "We have a trained nurse and I am there constantly. I am sure there is nothing you could do."

Down the street Violet saw old Mrs. Baxter waiting for her, and she abruptly hurried by a side street to the office to mail her letters. "I get tired explaining to Mrs. Baxter just what is the matter with mother's eyes, and what the doctor charges and what he does," she said to herself impatiently. "She certainly is the most inquisitive person I ever saw."

The long, hot summer days dragged by, and when October came with its crisp nights and splendid days, the great doctor came upon a pale, tearful girl, with such a radiant smile as he left the invalid's room that she knew instantly her mother would see. In a very short time they returned to their city home, and in the joy of having her dear mother, well and happy, the summer almost faded out of Violet's remembrance. Indeed, she scarcely gave it a thought, until her aunt, who had been visiting in the village, came to see them, and spoke of meeting people who asked about Violet and her mother.

"How is Mrs. Baxter?" said Violet indifferently, more to be polite to her aunt than from any interest in the old lady.

"The poor old soul is blind," said her aunt sadly. "It seems she was afraid an operation would cost too much, so she kept putting it off and putting it off until it was too late. She didn't want her daughter to suspect anything was the matter with her, because she was not well. It is a very sad case. And Mrs. Wheaton, do you remember her, Violet? She went away last week, so—"

"Went away?" said Violet, stupidly. "Where did she go?"

"To her long rest, dear. You knew, of course, that she had an incurable disease. She was so cheery and brave to the very last, that even her nearest relatives hardly realized her condition. I could not be sad when they told me about her, for I know she is at rest and happy. In many ways my visit was a sad one, but still it had its bright spots. Do you remember that girl who worked down in Essex five or six years ago, Amy?" she went on, turning to Violet's mother. "Well, she was married while I was there. You know what a struggle the poor girl always had, because she had to help support her family, and how she was so brave with it all. At last, prosperity dawned for them, and Jennie and her lover saw their way clear to set up their own little home. I helped her a little with her sewing, and she was so grateful. Poor child, she never had a chance to learn the things all girls should know about needlework. She cried when I did a little embroidery on her white wedding gown, and said she would keep it all her days. She sent a special message to Violet, and said to tell her how glad she was when she heard the good news about your eyes. She told me that often Violet was too worried to see her as she passed, and she did not venture to ask about you as often as she wanted to."

But before she finished her recital of village news, Violet had stolen to her room and was on her knees beside her bed. "Foolish people, and without understanding that have eyes and see not," was all she could think of for a long time, as she sobbed out her sorrow alone with her face hidden in the bedding. And then came the humble prayer of the publican: "God, be thou merciful to me a sinner," as she bitterly repented that she had not been more helpful to poor Mrs. Baxter in her endeavor to find relief and that she had been selfish enough to think no one but herself needed sympathy and consolation and help. "I might have done so much," was the burden of her lament, but when it changed to the petition that ever after she might see with clear vision, and be able to atone for her selfishness, she found peace and joy and true comfort, along with the assurance that her prayer was answered.—Hilda Richmond, in Forward.

WORK DAY FOR THE ORPHANS.

Setting apart one work day in the year and giving the proceeds of the day's work to the orphanages, has become very popular. The Georgia Methodists adopted the plan several years ago. The Methodists of Mississippi soon fell into line, and then followed Louisiana. If the Baptists did not take the lead, they were at least abreast with the foremost. The returns have always been satisfactory.

Work day for Louisiana Methodists is Saturday, the twenty-fifth of September. For the Mississippi Methodists it is the same day. It is proposed that on this day the boys and girls in our Sunday Schools, and in all Methodist families do some kind of work by which they can earn a little money to help feed and clothe the orphans that have been gathered into the homes—one at Ruston, La., and the other at Jackson, Miss.

Nothing so stirs the hearts of little children as an appeal in behalf of helpless little ones who have neither father nor mother to care for them. The only thing needed to set the children to work is for the superintendent or the pastor to tell the story of the orphans just as it is. The story never needs any word-painting, and cannot well be exaggerated. Faithful Sunday school teachers can do much—possibly more than either superintendent or pastor, by giving their classes a private talk on the subject.

In Louisiana the cry of the orphans is heard on every hand. There is not room at the Home to care for them all, because the managers have not been able to complete the big building. When finished the Home will shelter about one hundred and fifty children. The proceeds of Orphan's Work Day will go far towards finishing the house. The Mississippi Methodists began with a large building at Jackson, but have been compelled to increase the room to meet the demands. At present one hundred and fifty children or more, are in the home. And still the demand grows. It costs much money to build orphanages and clothe and feed the hundreds of little ones gathered under their shelter.

But what is the cost compared to the good results? The children are reared under the best religious influences, and grow up to be good men and women. They bless both the Church and the world. Already the Mississippi Methodist Orphanage has paid for itself twice over in the good men and women who have gone out from it trained in the principles and practices of our holy religion. The same good results will be attained in Louisiana, if the people called Methodists will sustain the orphanage they have located at Ruston.

Let everybody lend a helping hand on Work Day!

A CASE OR TWO IN PROOF.

Dr. S. A. Steel wields what is called a "facile pen." What is better, he writes strikingly; and often convincingly. One of his best efforts was made public in a recent issue of the Richmond Christian Advocate. Federation being one of the subjects discussed.

Dr. Steel tells us that "the leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church (the Northern Methodists) are bent on planting that Church in every nook and corner of the United States," and "in most of the places where they locate we (Southern Methodists) have established churches." "In the South, where we have churches a hundred years old, they seek to push in and plant a rival Methodism." Furthermore, Dr. Steel says, "by dilly-dallying with the folly of federation we are playing into their hands; and by retaining the word 'South' in our name we give them a club to beat our brains out from the marshes of Louisiana to the snow-topped peaks of Seattle."

If Dr. Steel does not mean by the above expression that Southern Methodists should drop the word "South," abandon the policy of federation, and undertake to plant our Church wherever possible for us to do so, we do not know what he means. Further than this, we shall not attempt to interpret his words. We may say, hovever, that, while we do not see our way clear to drop the word "South" from our name, we agree with him that federation, such as is contemplated by the plan adopted, has not been a success, owing, if we are not mistaken, to the clause which leaves the final determination—to organize or not to organize a church in a given community, to the Bishop having charge.

In a certain community, Southern Methodists began work with the very beginning of the town, and kept up with its growth, which was rapid. Notwithstanding, the Northern Methodists proposed to come in and over the protests of official bodies of Southern Methodism planted their Church. This was in open disregard of the plan of federation. In Memphis, which numbers and supports as many churches as are needed, Southern Methodism occupying all the ground, the Northern Methodists a few years ago concluded to take a hand. The brother appointed to the work, in his zeal, determined to build a church. The funds necessary were not furnished. He used what cash he had in hand, and mortgaged is home in a distant city to raise the balance. His church, it appears, never repaid him. His cash is gone, and his home is lost. Now he is calling on friends through one of the church papers to come to his relief. What was all this for? To plant a little church where none was needed—one that could never amount to much, or that would be scarcely felt as a moral power in the city.

The above cited case may be an extreme one—possibly altogether an exception, but it goes far to prove what Dr. Steel says in regard to the purpose of the Northern Methodists. This may be their way of "disintegrating" Southern Methodism.

And they are constantly pleading for union—organic union. Before that big event, we must see something of the spirit of federation in the South. We hear much of the beauty of federation on "the border"—that is, near the old Mason and Dixon's line. We desire to see it "Down South."

WHY?

We are in receipt of a letter from one of our leading preachers in Louisiana, in which occurs this sentence: "The news of Bishop Ward's illness in Japan is very distressing. Worked to death. Sent to a Conference already set up, and apart from us. Why this great sacrifice of labor and money?"

We have Conferences in the Far East—the China Mission and the Korean Mission. They have not yet set up for themselves, and must have Episcopal supervision. It is due them, but why the Bishops of our Church make official visits to Japan we do not know. Japan is independent, and has her own little Bishop, elected for a short term, who superintends the Unified Methodism of the kingdom. The Mission Board still has interest in our preachers over there, who, though laboring in Japan, belong to the Conferences at home. And, possibly, the Board has an interest in the school buildings and houses of worship and other property, and must needs have a Bishop to look after their interests. If we are mistaken, we will be thankful for some one to tell us why our Bishops go to Japan. Why?

LOST ADDRESSES.

After placing the names carefully on the mail list, we have received notice that the postmaster could not deliver papers to the following persons: Can you tell us the correct address of Mrs. Maud McDonald, Rev. P. B. Gresham, B. B. Hodges, L. P. Butler, Miss Mary Jones, and J. B. Rindles. If you send in one of these addresses, please refer to this notice.

MISLEADING REPORTS.

The recklessness and dishonesty of some men in defending a bad cause is past comprehension. In an exciting local option election in Groesbeck, Tex., it was reported to the Houston Post that a prohibition woman took a shot at an "anti" while he was talking to an old negro. The report was wholly misleading, and no doubt was so intended. That is, it was intended to make people believe that a woman actually shot at a man on the street. As a matter of fact, the good woman had a kodak, and was trying to get a picture of "an old, dilapidated negro." So says the Rev. Jno. W. Head, in the Texas Christian Advocate. Why should anybody deliberately try to deceive the public in such a way? The story may have been intended for fun, but there is nothing funny in putting a respectable lady in a false light before the public.

PREACHING BY ECONOMY.

We hear many excellent things said about thrift. The great lesson that the American people need to learn is to keep their expenditures within their incomes. Strangers come here and take our inheritances from us, because they will live on ninety cents a day, when they earn only a dollar. In a few years this same foreigner rides, while his American neighbor walks.

But when a man begins to economize, the least valued and the unnecessary things are cut off. In your homes, bright-eyed children are studying as to the things that father and mother consider most important. On every side your neighbors are weighing your words by your deeds, and discovering therefrom the real purposes and thoughts of your hearts.

If in times of financial stress, you economize on your preacher's table, before you do on your own, and cut down the money you are spending to evangelize the world, before you cut off the money you spend on your own pleasure, you are certainly preaching to men. But the text and the sermon do not glorify your Lord.

Every paper has subscribers renewing and discontinuing all through the year. This Advocate is like all the rest, but of the papers discontinued during the last six months, nine-tenths have been on the plea that economy must be practiced, and the Methodist in question could not afford to take a church paper any longer. We wonder how many of these homes have ceased to take the county paper, and perhaps a daily paper. If you cut off your church paper on the plea of economy, before you cut off your daily paper, or your county paper, or your farm journal, you are preaching to your home and to those about you. You say "It is a matter of minor importance that we be posted in the things of the kingdom. It is far more important that we be posted as to all the crimes and follies and intrigues of the busy world, it is far more important that we learn about some new farming device, or read the latest local gossip, than that we be intelligent members of the great church to which we belong, and that we fill wisely and well our parts in the Master's service." What sermon are you preaching by your economies? H. W.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. S. Duke had 16 accessions to the church in one week at Colle recently, being assisted by Rev. W. M. Campbell, of Schlater.

Rev. T. E. Gregory, of the Tom Nolen Circuit, received 80 into the church during the third quarter. His collections will be in full.

The Rev. J. A. B. Jones has been sick and confined to his house since July 19. He is now improving, and we trust will soon be entirely well.

Rev. J. T. McCafferty has been helping the pastor on the Slate Springs Charge in meetings the past two weeks. Good success attended his labors.

Rev. G. W. Harbin has just closed a good meeting at Haynesville, La., which he held "at the unanimous invitation of the pastor and church conference."

Rev. H. S. Spragins has been enjoying a much needed vacation during the past four weeks. He is now back at his post and ready for the fall campaign.

Rev. J. P. Haney, Greensburg, La., has been sick for several weeks past and unable to fill all his appointments. The nature of his sickness we have not learned.

Rev. John G. Johnson, of Lambert, has had between 40 and 50 accessions to the church this year, and is now in another meeting, being assisted by Rev. T. H. Dorsey, of West Point.

Rev. J. L. Sells, pastor at Coatville, Miss., and Rev. W. B. Jones, presiding elder of the Seashore District, were in the city last Friday, and took occasion to visit the Advocate. We thank them for the honor.

Mr. R. N. Jeffrey, the great singer, so favorably known among our people, will leave in a few days for Kansas City, in which city and neighboring places, he will spend the coming winter. He will return to Louisiana next spring, the Lord willing.

The pastor of Simmesport (La.) charge, Rev. A. R. Hoffpauir, was recently remembered by the Bay Hills Church with a nice "pounding." Accompanying the box a note states: "In deep appreciation and love." So the revival at Bay Hills is still in evidence.

For the personal notices of preachers in the Winona District we are indebted to the presiding elder, Rev. E. S. Lewis. We thank him. We sincerely invite other presiding elders to "go and do likewise," and urge Brother Lewis to keep up the work until he "makes the round."

We had the pleasure on Monday last of meeting Rev. J. G. Galloway, of Magnolia, Miss. Everything goes well at Magnolia, much to Brotther Galloway's delight, but the "Great Iron Wheel" will soon turn, and he will land at some other good place. His four years at Magnolia have passed all too soon.

We record with great satisfaction the fact that Bishop Wilson is in good health and working with ease. This means that the Bishop is doing some great preaching. He has been resting the entire summer. May the Great Head of the Church spare him to us for many years. We need his steady, guiding hand.

In a note to the editor, Rev. Robert Selby, of Natchez, gives the following good news: "We are prospering in the work of the church in this historic city on the 'Bluff.' We have had splendid congregations all through the summer, notwithstanding the intensely hot weather that has prevailed throughout the summer."

Rev. J. B. Randolph has been doing splendid work on the Myrtle Circuit, which he took charge of at the close of his term at Vanderbilt University. He has held five meetings, in four of which he was unassisted. He has received 63 persons into membership, and is now trying to pay off a debt on the parsonage. He is also having a deep well bored for the preacher's home.

Rev. T. J. O'Neil sends the sad news of the death of Lee Carleton, infant son of Rev. W. W. and Mrs. Nora Graves, of the Mississippi Conference. We deeply sympathise with the bereaved parents, for we know what it is to lay our little ones in the grave. It is sad beyond expression, but there is comfort in the thought that "every little hillock represents an angel in the sky," and "we sorrow not as those who have no hope."

Rev. R. T. Nolen reports a good meeting at Poplar Springs, Pinola Circuit. The church was greatly revived and 14 added to the number of the saved. Brother Nolen conducted this meeting and did all the preaching, except one sermon by Rev. W. W. Perry and one by the presiding elder, Rev. J. R. Jones. We have had several notices of Brother Nolen's meetings and every notice has been accompanied by one or more subscriptions to the Advocate.

At this writing we have heard nothing from Bishop Ward except a confirmation of the first report, and that Dr. Lambuth, Missionary Secretary, had cabled the brethren in Japan to arrange for his return home. There is no doubt that the Bishop was in a critical condition on Sept. 6, when the news was cabled to the mission rooms at Nashville. We join the whole Church in prayer for the preservation of the life of this valuable servant of God.

Rev. C. C. Miller, of the Baton Rouge District, reports good work being done throughout the district. Every preacher at his station, every one toiled throughout the summer heat. Protracted meetings are in progress and several genuine revivals have been experienced. Many persons have been added to the church. Brother Miller is now beginning the fourth round and is in sight of the post. He is hopeful, in spite of the boll weevil and financial stringency.

Rev. H. J. Maddox and people of Waynesboro Circuit have been blessed with a great revival at the Fedora Church. He was assisted by Rev. J. E. Sampley, of Meridian, who has recently come to us from the Methodist Protestant Church. Brother Maddox reports 20 or 25 conversions and sanctifications. He says: "Brother Sampley is a good preacher and a fine worker," standing "for the Church and holiness as taught by Mr. Wesley," as do all sound Methodist preachers.

Several communications have come to hand recently in pencil writing. One of these we have been able to "doctor" so as to bring out the color, and will be used. The others will be laid aside. Why will correspondents write communications with pencil, then take pains to hunt up pen and ink with which to address the envelope? There can be but one reason. They are afraid to trust pencil writing. That is one reason why we do not like to send pencil writing to the printer.

Rev. E. H. Mowre, Portland, Oregon, has honored us with an invitation to the dedication of the splendid church just completed there. According to reports it will compare favorably with anything in the West. The printed programme, the daintiest and most aristocratic thing of the kind we have seen in a long while, informs us that Bishop Atkins will preach the dedication sermon in the morning and read the appointments of the Columbia Conference in the evening, after sermon by Dr. McMurry.

On reaching the Advocate office Monday morning, we found the following note on our table: "A presiding elder in the Louisiana Conference has been accused of making a new sermon. The matter is still under investigation, but as yet no charges have been preferred." We think it is time some of them were doing that same. We heard one of the "beloved" preach a sermon on a certain Quarterly Meeting occasion, and the next time we heard him at the same place—the two occasions being but a few months apart—he preached the same sermon.

A SPECIAL REQUEST.

Dear Dr. Boswell: In a few days the second session of Centenary College in Shreveport will begin, and prospects look encouraging for another successful year's work. We are anxious to get in touch with the Alumni, old students and friends of the college, and to this end we have secured the services of Judge S. C. Fulliove, of this city, as Alumni Editor of The Maroon and White, the college magazine published by the students. We would be glad to have all the old students write to him, giving their addresses and occupations, so that we may in this way keep in touch with them through the pages of the magazine. We would also be glad to have our friends subscribe to the magazine, and we assure them that they will be able to keep in touch with the college and student body by reading it.

With best wishes, we are,

WRENN BROWN,
E. A. HOFFPAUIR.

THE TRAINING SCHOOL.

Rev. W. A. Betts was appointed President of the Mississippi Conference Training School, located at Montrose, Miss., at our last Annual Conference. He is a resourceful and an indefatigable worker. He knows how to do things, and does them. If you want your boys or girls to know how to do things, send them to Montrose. Brother Betts is a skillful trainer of the young. We have needed this very school in Mississippi for many years, and now that we have it, let us fill it to overflowing.

AN URGENT APPEAL.

A fearful storm swept over Monterey, Mexico, a few days ago. It was accompanied by a cloudburst, which deluged the valley. News has just been received from Brother W. F. Quillian, in charge of our church and school, that the destruction of life and property has not been exaggerated. He writes: "More than 3,000 persons and $8,000,000 in property have been swept away. Fifteen thousand people are homeless. But for the relief that has been given them they would be without clothes and food. The Government has made a liberal subscription, and assistance is being received from the United States. Worthy citizens have opened their doors and given of their means. We are doing what we can. The Hospital and Laurens Institute have both been offered to the authorities. We are collecting clothing and seeing that it is being properly distributed."

A telegram indicates that our missionaries and members are safe. The roof of the Victoria Building was damaged. This was erected by the Rosebuds for their work in behalf of the Mexican children. When I was in Monterey a week before the storm, preparations were being made to open the Institute. The prospect for the year was excellent. Brother Phillips, the presiding elder, and Brother Quillian, the pastor of the church and the principal of the school, were in high hopes. The hospital chapel was full to overflowing with patients the morning I left the city. It was a delight to see the poor women and children ministered to by our physicians and trained nurses."

In view of the emergency I appeal at once in behalf both of the sufferers and of our institution. Dr. Pinson wired Brother Phillips permission to draw for $300 for relief. This was an emergency and we had to meet it. Our missionaries are without surplus for distribution and the board will be at a heavy expense for repairs. May we not count upon immediate financial aid sent through J. D. Hamilton, treasurer, Board of Missions, Nashville, Tenn. He who gives quickly gives twice in such a cause. We should have at least $2,000 without delay. What is not used in relief distribution can be put on the buildings at once, that our great work in that central city shall not be interfered with.

W. R. LAMBUTH,
Secretary Board of Missions.

TOPIC FOR SEPTEMBER 19, 1909

(BIBLE STUDY SUNDAY.)

Luke xxiv:45-48.

The key to the understanding of the Scriptures, as a whole, is Jesus himself. He is the "Word" within the printed word. In him there is seen to be a marvelous unity and consistency throughout the entire literature of the Old Testament, and harmony between the Old and New Testaments.

With all the knowledge that the disciples had of God's message in law, prophecy and psalms, they needed to have their understanding opened to see that the heart of it all is Christ suffering, dying and rising again for the salvation of "all nations." So Jesus, after he is risen and before his ascension, shows them that his sufferings and death which they had not been at all able to understand is written beforehand on every section of the Scriptures, and, vice versa, that all difficulties in the interpretation of Scripture are dissolved when referred to Christ and his work. In order to profitable Bible study, let us remember that:

1. The object of knowing the Scripture is to understand Christ. Understanding the Scripture is understanding him, and, failing to understand him, the key of the Scriptures is lost. For us the best place to begin Bible study is in the gospels, rather than in Genesis. Knowing the life of Jesus we have the key to what goes before and what follows.

2. The various parts of Scripture are profitable in proportion to their bearing upon Christ.

It is a mistake for a Bible student to follow no other plan than reading the Bible straight through. Some parts are of infinitely more value than others. The moral teaching of the Old Testament is profitable just in proportion as it approaches the law of Christ.

3. All Bible students need to have their minds opened that they may understand the Christ of the Scriptures.

The same thing that Jesus did for these disciples, he promised would be done for all disciples by the Holy Spirit whom he would send. "He will guide you into all the truth." (John 16: 13. Let us pray for this indispensable help.

4. If we understand the Scriptures we have the Christ vision.

We see that "repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations," and we ourselves are his "witnesses."

Study of the Bible in a devotional spirit is necessary to Christian life and service, and this study should be both intense, and continuous. (James i:25).

FROM INVERNESS, MISS.

I write to let you know of the meetings held on this charge this month. It has indeed been a month of great rejoicing, and I am glad to have been able to labor in the Master's vineyard. I will give briefly the results as they were apparent to me. Eternity alone can disclose the true results.

The meeting at Inverness was held the first week in August, with Brother H. S. Spragins, of Greenwood, preaching. He preached strong, forceful gospel sermons, and the congregations were greatly impressed. There were four accessions to the church; three by letter, and one on profession of faith. The members of the church were strengthened, and many made public their determination to follow the Master more closely.

At Isola, the meeting was held the third week of August, Brother T. B. Clifford, of Yazoo City, assisting. Brother Clifford had to be absent from two services, and while there, suffered with neuralgia, but his preaching was thoroughly evangelistic, though plain and practical; and many professed before men their strengthened zeal and faith. There was one addition to the church by restoration.

The meeting at Caile was one of the best meetings I have ever held. Brother W. M. Campbell, of Schlater, did the preaching, the writer led the singing, the people prayed, and God did the rest. There were twenty conversions, sixteen accessions to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and three accessions to the Baptist Church. At every service the people had their choice of church membership; the main consideration was souls for Christ, church membership came later. There was a great deal of enthusiasm manifested; but nothing was done under stress of excitement, and this meeting served to illustrate afresh the great truth, that, "A meeting must be 'prayed down,' instead of 'worked up,' if anything is accomplished for the Master." One of the stewards of the church was called to preach, and you will hear more of him soon, for he has accepted the call, and intends to "get busy." Brother Campbell's preaching is earnest and he seems to lead the congregation to the "foot of the Cross," where they see "the Son of Man as he is lifted up, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life."

I have led the singing in all of the meetings, and I thank God that he has given me a voice which I can use in his service. To God be all the praise and glory.

With best wishes, and hoping to send in some subscriptions soon,

JAMES S. DUKE, P. C.

CAPUDINE CURES HEADACHE.

There isn't any headache remedy that does the work like Hick's Capudine. For sick or nervous headache, headaches frm heat, cold, grip or stomach troubles —it gives immediate relief. Liquid; easy to take. Sold by druggists.

It is strange what devices are being used to advance the brewing interests of the country. In one place it has become so hard to hold to the expected amount of sales that prizes and premiums are being offered to persuade the people to drink. We have seen in this city a picture of a baby draining a beer mug, and the inscription, "bring the roses back to the cheeks." It were better to let your babe fade with the roses, than to send it out in life handicapped with an appetite for liquor. Is it not something of a farce to see the peddlers of drink resorting to all the devices of the patent medicine men, and the premium processes of the tea stores, and the chewing gum manufacturers, and covering all their efforts with a sanctimonious interest in the welfare of the dear people?

We desire to state to the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate that after having made a very careful investigation of COCA-COLA, we have concluded to accept its advertising.

We find by consulting the most eminent authorities that COCA-COLA does not contain in the minutest proportions either cocaine, morphine, or any other narcotics, that it is not injurious to health, but is refreshing and invigorating in its physiological effects.

COCA-COLA contains about the same amount of alcohol as is found in a vanilla ice cream soda, or in a glass of ordinary soda water. The infinitesimal amount of alcohol in COCA-COLA is derived from the flavorings used.

It contains caffeine in less quantity than is found in a cup of strong coffee and about the same quantity as is usually found in tea, but it is absolutely free from the tannic acid found both in coffee and tea.

Notwithstanding the absolutely innocent character of COCA-COLA, competitors have encouraged and paid for circulations of false and injurious statements concerning the article, thereby leading many sincere persons to a false impression of the component parts of this really meritorious beverage.

In the interest of truth and of justice, complete information will be supplied either by The COCA-COLA Company, Atlanta, Ga., or by ourselves, giving analysis of the article by leading chemists of the United States and statements from prominent physiologists as to the physiological action of COCA-COLA. The COCA-COLA Company are willing, if so desired, to pay the expense of scientific investigation of the effects of COCA-COLA, by any church, body, or temperance organization, or by any combination of religious publications, which desire to know the truth and to publish it.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

It is frequently quite perplexing for parents to select a college or school for their sons or daughters. It is a most important matter, too; for the impression received during this educational period of a young person's life have an indelible effect upon his future career. On another page will be found the announcements of the leading educational institutions of the South under religious auspices, and we suggest that you consult them and write for their catalogues.

THE ORPHAN GIRL.

No home, no home, cried a little girl
At the door of a rich man's hall.
As she tremblingly stood on the marble steps,
And leaned on the polished wall.
Her clothes were thin and her feet were bare,
And the snow had covered her head.
"O give me a home," she feebly cried,
"A home and a piece of bread."

"My father, alas! I never knew,"
And the tears dimmed her eyes so bright;
"My mother sleeps in a new made grave,
'Tis an orphan who begs to-night."
The night was dark and the snow fell fast,
But the rich man closed his door.
His proud face frowned, as he scornfully said,
"No home, no bread, for the poor."

"I must freeze," she said, as she sank on the steps,
And strove to cover her feet
With her old tattered clothes all covered with snow,
Yes, covered with snow and sleet.
The rich man slept on his velvet Couch,
And dreamed of his silver and gold,
While the little girl sleeps on a bed of snow,
And murmurs, "So cold, so cold."

Another hour, and a midnight storm
Rolled on like a funeral knell,
The earth seemed wrapped in a winding sheet,
And the drifting snow still fell.
The morning dawned and the little girl
Still lay at the rich man's door,
But her soul had fled to a home above,
Where there's room and bread for the poor.

MOUNT HERMON CIRCUIT.

We have just closed a gracious revival on the Mt. Hermon work. The Lord was present in great power. The revival began at Mt. Hermon, on the 23rd of August, continuing ten days. It reached far into the surrounding country.

Brother A. S. Lutz came to us on the second day—did the preaching with great power, preaching two sermons a day. People came for ten miles away, some that had not been to church for a number of years. We dismissed the meeting at the church for one service and held service at one brother's house, six miles away, who has been afflicted for years and could not attend church. Here he had thirty of his neighbors gathered with him to hear the gospel.

We then removed to Sunny Hill where they have a commodious school building and is four miles to the nearest church. Here they were anxious for the gospel. We remained there two days. Large crowds attended every service. The Baptists are in the majority here but were very generous in co-operation. In this meeting our church at Mt. Hermon was greatly blessed and the membership revived, resulting in thirty accessions and a large number of conversions. The church was revived in every way.

Dear Brethren of the Baton Rouge District: Please see that your official boards bring to the Fourth Quarterly Conference the proper statistical reports.

Charges desiring assistance from the Mission Board will please take notice that it is the policy of the Board of Missions to help those who show a disposition to help themselves. The appropriations for the year 1910 will probably be made on a basis of what was done in 1909, rather than on promises to do things in 1910.

Will all the pastors please try to have their entire official boards present at the Fourth Quarterly Conferences? Let the pastors be prepared to nominate stewards and trustees who will do the work to which they are elected.

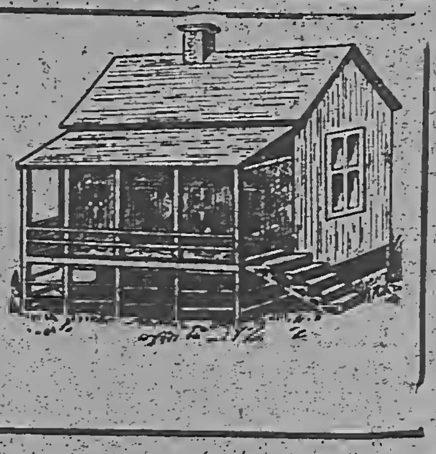
It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly—read letter below:



Brookside, Ala., May 4, 1903.

The two physicians here had 3 very obstinate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johnson's Tonic. I removed all the printed matter and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle as a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

MT. PLEASANT CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I take my pen in hand to let the readers of the Advocate know how well we are getting on in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

On the occasion of our third Quarterly Meeting, Rev. W. M. Young, our presiding elder, dedicated our new church at Salem. The dedicatory sermon, as well as the one preached on the preceding day, was much enjoyed by the pastor and people. The house thus set apart for the worship of Almighty God is beautiful and commodious.

Beginning with, and including the Quarterly Meeting, we held special services for nine days. During about half this time we had the services of Rev. John Boyd, a minister of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church. Brother Boyd is a young preacher of very fine parts, and preached to our delight and profit. Five joined our church on profession of faith and two joined the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church.

On the second Sunday in August we commenced a meeting at Marshall Institute Church (a beautiful new church which we hope to dedicate at our fourth Quarterly Meeting) and continued it for five days. The church was much revived and six joined our church on profession of faith. In this meeting I had no ministerial help.

On the third Sunday in August we commenced a protracted meeting at Union, having with us Rev. W. J. Echols, of Pleasant Grove, Miss., who preached to the delight of our people. The church was considerably revived, and there were several conversions; I think, and several will join the church I reckon as a result of the meeting.

On the fourth Sunday in August we commenced a meeting at Mt. Pleasant, Brother Raper, of Byhalia, came to us on Monday, and did all the preaching from that time on over the following Sunday. As results the church was greatly revived, and sixteen were added to its membership on profession of faith. Brother Raper is a fine preacher, and very pleasant in the social circle. We certainly enjoyed his labors among us.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

Obituaries.

Obituaries not over two hundred words in length will be published free of charge. All over two hundred words will be charged at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around.

On September first, the angel of death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Hughes, Amory, Miss., and claimed for his victim little SARGENT, the first-born and only child of these sad parents. He was a little less than two years old and was the joy of that home, almost idolized by these young parents and very tenderly loved by grandfather and mother. To-day the home is gloomy and our hearts are sad. On Wednesday, Sept. 1, little Sargent was taken from us by the grim monster who has invaded and brought sorrow in so many homes. Sargent had been a very lovable child all of his short stay on earth, and his dear little life had very tenderly twined itself around the hearts of all who knew him, and all was done by loving hands and skilled physicians to continue his stay on earth, but God, in his providence, saw best to take the precious little jewel from a world of sin and transplant him in the kingdom of light where sin and sorrow are not known. Lord help us to say, "Thy will be done." Little Sargent cannot come to us, but thank God we can go to him.

His Grandfather, L. T. S.

Mrs NETTIE WALKER was born in Lamar County, Ala., Sept. 21, 1880 and departed this life Aug. 26, 1909, at Old Houlka, Chickasaw County, Miss. She was married to Mr. F. J. Walker in 1901. This happy union was blessed with one son—dear little John Curtis, a bright-eyed, sweet little boy he is. A devoted wife and tender, loving mother has gone to her reward. She was the daughter of Rev. Mr. Crim, of the Alabama Conference. She has a brother who is a member of the North Alabama Conference, stationed at Alabama City. She joined the M. E. Church, South when quite young and lived a consecrated Christian till death. She was corresponding secretary of the Home Mission Society, also conductress of Eastern Star. She filled her place well in all the capacities. Mrs. Nettie was a true Christian. She was ever ready to praise God under all conditions of life. She was a true wife, a devoted mother, and a faithful church worker. She died as she lived, triumphantly. We are not left comfortless, for we have the blessed assurance that she has gone to the reward she so richly deserves. Her remains were laid to rest in the Houston Cemetery to await the resurrection morn. I deeply sympathize with Brother Walker and little John Curtis, but their loss is her eternal gain.

T. J. DURRETT.

Brother JOHN F. BUFKIN was born, Nov. 8, 1841 in Jasper County, Miss., and died at his home in Buckatunna, Miss., March 27, 1909, after much suffering from wounds which he received in the left leg at Jonesboro, Ga., Aug. 31, 1864. Suffering from the effect of the wounds for forty-four years, he, on the 26th of May 1908, had his leg amputated just below the knee. It was hoped that the operation would prove successful, but the trouble manifested itself again in a few months, then nothing could be done to check the onward tide, till death mercifully came to his relief. He served during the war as a member of Company H, 27th Mississippi Regiment, under General Walthal. Those who stood in rank with him know of his loyalty, faithfulness and courage. Seven times was he wounded in battle, and though a sufferer nearly all of the forty-four years since the war, he never uttered a complaining word. He remarked to the writer a few months before his death, "Though I am now nearly sixty-seven years old, and have suffered for these forty-four years with wounds and am now maimed for life, I have never regretted having been a Confederate soldier, because I still believe as I did then that we were in the right." These are also the concluding words of an inquiry he made for comrades through the Confederate Veterans. He was happily married to Miss Nancy C. Heidelberg, Aug. 23, 1866. Nine children were born unto them, eight are still living, four sons and four daughters, all of whom are good, useful citizens and filling important positions in life. Brother Bufkin joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early life and lived a devoted Christian until the day of his death. He never seemed to grow old, the tabernacle of flesh grew feebler and the step was less elastic, but the ability to work, the serene faith and unflagging hope suffered no change. He was not emotional in his nature, yet no man gathered into his bosom a fuller sheaf of blessings, delight, and joy than he. His was one of the happiest lives I ever saw. His trust in God was childlike. He was helpful to his pastors, always looking after their interest. To him the call of his church was the call of his God. May God's richest blessings rest upon the sorrowing wife and children.

B. W. LEWIS.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from earthly scenes our dearly beloved young brother, JAMES SEATON HAM, a member of Central Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and of the Board of Stewards. (He was a member of the church and of its Official Board; he lived a consistent, Christian life and rendered important and faithful service as steward); therefore, be it resolved by the Board of Stewards, that:

First. It is the sense of this Board that in the death of this young brother the church has lost one of its most useful and promising young members, and the city of Meridian one of the brightest and most capable of her younger citizens.

Second. That while this Board feels keenly the loss of his services and will miss constantly his genial presence and companionship, we recognize in his taking away the hand of Providence, and humbly bow in submission to the Divine will.

Third, That his pure life, noble ideals and unfailing devotion to his mother, brother, sisters and friends are a source of genuine consolation to us, and we proudly point to his brief career as a worthy example for the younger members of this congregation.

Fourth, That we extend to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy and condolence and assure them that in this great grief our hearts beat with theirs in sorrow and that we mourn with them over the loss of their dear, departed son and brother, one so truly noble and lovable.

REPORT ON COCO-COLA.

In last week's issue of this paper we printed letters from the State Chemist of Georgia and the assistant chemist of the University of Texas, who have made analyses of the popular temperance drink showing that COCA-COLA contains no cocaine or other injurious ingredient. We print below a copy of a letter from Professor Burney, of South Carolina College. Dozens of chemists have analyzed COCA-COLA and all agree as to its freedom from cocaine, morphine, whisky and all injurious materials. A booklet has been published containing these reports and a copy will be sent free to any reader of this paper who has any doubt whatever as to COCA-COLA being what it claims to be—a pure, harmless, delicious, refreshing, temperance drink.

CHEMICAL DEPARTMENT,
South Carolina College,
Columbia, S. C., Jan. 17th, 1906.

This is to certify that I have bought in the open market an original package of five gallons of COCA-COLA, bearing the label of "The Coca-Cola Company, Atlanta, Ga." and have subjected the same to careful analysis.

The object of this investigation being to establish the presence or absence of cocaine, and possibly of other injurious alkaloids, I operated on quantities of three to five times the amount contained in a bottle of the carbonated beverage. The extractions of the syrup were repeated until the alkaloids were entirely removed, and the crystaline substance thus obtained was further separated by fractional extractions, after which it was concentrated and tested. Since this concentrated product failed to respond to the test for cocaine, it is clear that the alkaloid is absent; or, if present at all, then in quantities too minute to allow detection. The active constituent of COCA-COLA syrup proved to be caffeine, and in quantities seemingly less than in a cup of good coffee or tea. There was no evidence of the presence of other alkaloids.

Yours truly,
(Signed) W. B. BURNEY, Chemist.

HOME REMEDY

Mrs. Temple Clark suffered for years, before she found relief in that popular, successful woman's medicine, Wine of Cardui.

Mrs. Clark, who lives in Timberville, Miss., writes: "Cardui has been worth more to me than a carload of silver. If it had not been for Cardui, I would have been dead. I love a dollar, but I have never seen one that I do not think as much of, as I do of a bottle of Cardui. I now keep it in my house, as regularly as I do coal oil or coffee, and have done so for years.

"Some years ago I jumped off a horse and had a mishap, and for about four years after that I suffered intense agony. At last I was induced to try Cardui, which cured me, and now I am well and happy.

"I am sure Cardui will cure other sick ladies as it has me."

Cardui is for women. It acts specifically and in a natural manner on the womanly system and has been found to relieve pain and to restore woman's health.

If you are nervous, miserable, or suffering from any form of female trouble, try Cardui. What it has done for other sick ladies it surely can do for you. Sold by all first class druggists, with full directions for use.

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 19, 1909.

REVIEW.

I. Cor. xiii:1-16.

Golden Text: "So Mightily Grew the Word of God and Prevailed."—Acts xix, 20.

Going over again lessons that have afforded many pleasant and profitable hours of study, we find that many features have escaped our attention; and in this discovery we are enabled to add new thoughts to what has been already firmly implanted in our memory. It is just so in reading and re-reading the Bible; the student that has a Bible marked by himself will find the second or third reading even more beneficial than the first. The regular and consecutive study of God's Word is like the pathway of the Christian pilgrim as he journeys from the world, by the way of the cross, to the crown. The record of historical facts are interesting and alluring, but we use such as only a help to a deeper meaning that will come to us as we read, guided by the Spirit. Our deepest sympathy and love fills our heart as we learn of all that Paul suffered for the gospel's sake, calling to mind that "all who live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution." There is open for all the great Fountain of strength for every burden that is placed upon us. This was the source of Paul's strength and the secret of his greatness; he was in constant communication with the Holy Spirit.

He needed not the cry of the man from Macedonia to urge him to duty, but only to show him where that duty was, then to be exercised. God plans the work of his servants. Faith is the leader, and the events that follow come in regular order, as intended by the great Author and Finisher. Paul went to Philippi, and at the prayer meeting outside of the city, by the river-side, Lydia semed to be waiting for the opening of her heart by the Lord, and then, thankfulness following, she opened her house as a home for the servant of God. This was the humble beginning for the great things that followed as Paul proceeded from city to city, sowing the seed that was to produce so great a harvest. From the sunshine of love in Lydia's home, we turn to the hour of midnight, in the Philippian jail, where Paul and Silas, bleeding under the persecutor's lash, with feet fast in the stocks, sang praises to God until the foundations of the prison were shaken by the mighty power of him who saith, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay." So was Paul's life in the service of Christ; so is the life of every follower of Jesus: "Troubled on every side, yet not distressed; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed."

Persecution was the emphasis of the gospel; it is also the ungodly man's recognition of a Christian's influence.

Persecution always attended Paul wherever he went, but he had the aid of friends in making escape. He never showed the least spirit of retaliation, for he was the one that once wrote: "The servant of God must not strive."

As Paul went from city to city the gospel grew and spread abroad among the people. He used the Scriptures in showing that Jesus was the Christ, but the envious Jews would not accept such an interpretation, and almost always they were the only people that resisted the apostle's earnest appeals. Pauls learning gave adaptability; he was equally ready to address superstitious Athens as he was material Corinth. As he said of himself: "I am made all things to all men, that by all means, I might save some." He preached an "unknown God" where a monument had been erected telling of such ignorance, saying that this same God was very near to everyone; this opened the door for preaching Jesus, the resurrection and the judgment. He told of the brotherhood of man, of how God, of one blood had made all nations. The gospel was then, and is now, sufficient for the intellectual mind, for it is reasonable, it is satisfying. The difficulty with the higher criticism is that pride has grown as the sphere of intellectual research has broadened. Paul was learned, yet he never forgot the meekness and gentleness he was taught by the Master; in this same humbleness of mind consisted his greatness. He did not arise above his fellows, for he knew that to reach them effectively, he must be on a level with them. While he worked with his own hands, he preached the gospel taught by the "Carpenter's Son." Honest toil ennobles the character, and such is the will of God. No Christian is content to receive something for nothing. Work is a blessing, and some day it will be so equally adjusted, that he that maketh much will have nothing over, and he that worketh little will have no less; for it will all be done in the spirit of that love that brought the Son of God from heaven to teach men, that self must never be loved more than a neighbor. Paul's love for his fellow-men proceeded from his love for Jesus Christ, a love that so filled his whole being that he said, "I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord." These are some of the many truths we take up in our review, then in reflection we turn our thoughts self-ward. Do we so love the Lord Jesus that we are wholly submissive to his will? He once measured love toward him by the pardon he bestowed. O the burden of sin he carries for us, gratitude also should awaken our hearts to a love that cannot be spoken unless we love him as our hearts and consciences tell us we should, we have a blessed Christian experience to learn. Let us love him so that at his call, we will be ready at any time, to go anywhere, to do any work for him that loved us, and gave himself for us.

SEASHORE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

I was glad to hear from a gentleman who took part in the four gatherings on the Seashore Camp Grounds, and who heard many of the summer residents speak concerning the same, that the concensus of opinion was that the "Preacher's Institute" was the best of the four. In addition to the Biblical, theological and educational discussions and presentations there was a spiritual influence that was unusual, and it was felt by all those who attended with any regularity.

Some things were said, possibly, with which some of the gentlemen could not agree, but in the main there was little unfavorable criticism to be offered against the views of the speakers.

The speakers, themselves, were enthusiastic with regard to the prospects for a great school.

Dr. John M. Moore, who has large experience, and observation, with such work wrote me a few days ago as follows: "I was delighted when I read the plan of the next session upon which your committee had agreed." Dr. Joel T. Daves, of Atlanta, Ga., expressed himself in the same gratifying manner as to our future work. I am sure that, if the ministers of the patronizing Conferences will be patient and helpful in their attitude to the school, the board of directors will establish an institution that will very soon be far-reaching in its good effect upon the ministry and membership of the Church.

Much of the programme for next year has already been arranged and the lecturers engaged.

Bishop E. E. Hoss, if he is in the United States, has engaged to do special work. Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus, of the Armour Institute of Technology, of Chicago, and Dr. Mathews, who was with us this year, will be with us next year, and Dr. Henry T. Cope, General Secretary of "The Religious Education Association," has agreed to do special work in Psychology. We will have a specialist on Hymnology, and also courses for the undergraduates of the several Conferences. I feel sure in saying that not a man who attended the Institute in June will fail to be present next year if it is possible for him to get there.

There may be a lot of youthful enthusiasm with the board of directors, but it is an enthusiasm that proposes to do things and you will find every member ready to do his part. We have seen what the school can do, and our purpose is to have it accomplish more and more every year.

ROBT. SELBY,
Chairman Board of Directors.

"LET US PAY THE DEBT."

Because of the great and imperative need, and believing in the devotion of the Methodist people to such a worthy cause, the Board of Directors of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage borrowed the money to complete the splendid building that now stands about finished in the moral, healthful, educational city of Ruston, La., a building of which every Methodist in the State should be proud, our large, well-constructed Orphans' Home. The Board has builded wisely a durable, carefully-planned, well-constructed building, artistic and beautiful, economical and convenient. This building will last for generations and be a benediction and a blessing to the homeless and destitute children of our great State.

But the debt of $14,000 is a great hindrance to us in our work. We cannot reach out and do the good that we should do as long as we are burdened with this heavy debt. We now have thirty-five children in the Home, being double our number in the last three months. There are twenty-three applicants for admission. The cry of some of these is most pitiable. Yet, for lack of funds, and with one-third of our debt almost due, we are forced to hesitate in taking these children.

We have forty acres of land, which should be placed under fence and prepared for raising truck and vegetables—ample ground to supply all our table needs. A man should be employed to look after this work; yet we cannot go ahead with these plans for lack of money. We could use at least four good milk cows, and should have them at once, and yet, if some good friends do not give us the cows we are unable to buy, and these thirty-five children must be deprived of this essential element of food. Other features of our work should be developed, but for lack of means our hands are tied.

Now, if we could be rid of this debt we could proceed with our plans and soon have one of the best and greatest institutions of the kind in all the land. The good we would accomplish is beyond human ability to estimate. What a blessing to humanity and a boon to our work, if some wealthy person would relieve us of this debt? Surely, Louisiana, with her great wealth, has that man. Such a man would immortalize his own name and make it a blessing to untold numbers of unfortunates for the generations to come. But there is not a person among us but can do something. Every little helps. Fifty cents each from all the Methodist people in the State would do it, and we would have a surplus left.

On Sept. 25, "Orphanage Work Day," we believe that nearly all our Sunday School scholars and members of the Church will give the proceeds of the day's labor to the Orphanage. Each child can find some task; each member of the Church can give the price of his day's toil, and if all would do it, the aggregate would cancel the debt.

Let everyone—Church member, Sunday School scholar, Christian friend, and all who wish to help the homeless children—bring or send their gift to the Superintendent of the Sunday School, or pastor of the Methodist Church, on Sunday, Sept. 26.

ROB'T W. VAUGHAN, Financial Agent.

Ruston, La.

A WORD FROM PORT GIBSON COLLEGE.

The 10th session of the Port Gibson Female College will open Sept. 22 with a faculty of twelve teachers and officers, besides two tutoresess. Whilst there is room for a few more pupils, already, in advance of the opening, a sufficient number have applied to guarantee an attendance fully equal to that of last session. Among the vacation improvements made are: A new gallery to the Dining Hall building, a fresh coat of paint upon the Ames building, and a fresh coat upon the exterior of both the brick buildings.

With gratitude we recall the fact that there has not been a protracted fever case or any very serious illness among our students during the past four sessions.

Our faculty has been carefully chosen. With one exception, all are teachers tested by a full experience. Our Voice Department has become a prominent feature. Our teacher of vocal music is probably the best in the State.

We hope for a session of splendid results to the bodies, minds and hearts of the daughters entrusted to us, and we ask for the continued help and sympathy of our preachers and people.

HENRY G. HAWKINS.

THE PHYSICAL EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL.

It is exceedingly gratifying that so many of the first-class magazines of the day, some of which circulate by the million, both those intended for general public and those published specially for women readers, are taking such an interest in matters relating to the welfare of the people, both as pertains to domestic affairs and home life, and to the great matters of public and national concern. One of these, the McClure's, in its October number, gave the results of recent long continued and most painstaking experiments concerning the use of alcohol on the human system, that will be nothing less than revolutionary for those that have entertained the notion that the use of alcohol under certain conditions and circumstances is beneficial. The character of these experiments and the conclusions reached are set forth by Henry Smith Williams, M.D., LL.D. He says: "In recent years a large number of scientific investigators have attempted to substitute knowledge for guess work as to the effect of alcohol, through the institution of definite experiments. Some have tested its effects on the digestive apparatus; others its power over tthe heart and voluntary muscles; still others, its influence on the brain. On the whole, the results of these experiments are singularly consistent. Undoubtedly they tend to upset a good many preconceptions. But they give better grounds for judgment as as to what is the rational attitude toward alcohol than have hitherto been available.

"The traditional role of alcohol is that of a stimulant. It has been supposed to stimulate digestion and assimilation; to stimulate the heart's action; to stimulate the mind. The new evidence seems to show that, in the final analysis, alcohol stimulates none of these activities; that its final effect is everywhere depressive and inhibitory (at any rate, as regards higher functions) rather than stimulative; that, in short, it is properly to be classed with the narcotics and anesthetics. The grounds for this view should be of interest to every user of alcohol; of interest, for that matter, to every citizen, considering that more than one thousand million dollars of alcoholic beverages are consumed in the United States every year."

We may quote his summary of the results of the experiments on some parts of the human system: "As regards digestion, alcohol does indeed stimulate the flow of the digestive fluids, but it also tends to interfere with the normal action; so that ordinarily one effect neutralizes the other.

"As regards the action of the heart, the ultimate effect of alcohol is to depress that organ, in large doses to paralyze it."

As to the effects of alcohol on muscular activity, "the experiments show that alcohol does not increase the capacity to do muscular work, but distinctly decreases it. Doubtless this seems at variance with many a man's observation of himself; but the explanation is found in the fact that alcohol blurs the judgment, as Voit remarks, it gives not strength, but at most the feeling of strength. A man may think he is working faster and better under the influence of alcohol, than he would otherwise do; but rigidly conducted experiments do not confirm this opinion. "Both science and the experience of life," says Dr. John Abel, of Johns Hopkins University, "have exploded the pernicious theory that alcohol gives any persistent increase of muscular power. The disappearance of this universal error will greatly reduce the consumption of alcohol among laboring men. It is well understood by all who control large bodies of men engaged in physical labor, that alcohol and effective work are incompatible."

As relates to alcohol as a brain stimulant, the celebrated physicist and thinker, Von Helmholtz, is quoted as declaring that the very smallest quantity served effectively, while its influence lasted, to banish from his mind all possibility of creative effort; all ability to solve an abstruse problem." We may here introduce the pertinent words of Prof. Munsterberg. He says: "Of course alcohol before serious intellectual work disturbs me." "Certainly," says Dr. Williams, "all the evidence goes to show that no mind is capable of its best efforts when influenced by even a small quantity of alcohol. If any reader of these words is disposed to challenge this statement on the strength of his own personal experience, I would ask him to reflect carefully as to whether what he has been disposed to regard as a stimulant effect may not be explained along the lines suggested by the words of Prof. James: "The reason for craving alcohol is that it is an anesthetic even in moderate quantities. It obliterates a part of the field of consciousness and abolishes collateral trains of thought."

Experimental evidence tends to establish the position of alcohol as an inhibitor and disturber, rather than a promoter of mental activity. Kurtz and Kraeplin estimate that after giving 80 grains per day to an individual for twelve successive days, the working capacity of that individual's mind was lessened by from 25 to 40 per cent. Smith found an impairment of the power to add, after twelve days, amounting to 40 per cent; the power to memorize was reduced by about 70 per cent. Forty to 80 grains of alcohol, the amounts used in producing these astonishing results, is no more than the quantity contained in two or three quarts of beer, or in a half bottle to a bottle of ordinary wine.

Prof. Aschenffenburg, commenting on these experiments, points the obvious moral that the "so-called moderate drinker, who can consume his bottle of wine as a matter of course, each day with his dinner—and who doubtless would declare that he never was under the influence of liquor—is in reality never actually sober from one week's end to another. Neither in bodily or mental activity is he ever up to what should be his normal level."

Dr. Williams gives the results of these recent investigations in a warning to the users of the drug, as follows: "So I am bound to believe in the light of what science has revealed, that if you take alcohol in any quantity whatever: (1) That you are tangibly threatening the physical structures of your stomach, your liver, your kidneys, your heart, your blood vessels, your nerves, your brain. (2) That you are unequivocally decreasing your capacity for work in any field, be it physical, intellectual or artistic. (3) That you are in some measure lowering the grade of your mind, dulling your higher esthetic sense, and taking the finer edge off your morals. (4) That you may be entailing upon your descendants yet unborn a bond of incalculable misery."—W. W. Washburn, in Michigan Christian Advocate.

DIRECTIONS.

Correspondents will please direct all communications intended for the Editor to 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La. Communications intended for the Business Department should be addressed to the Manager of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Write with ink, and only on one side of the paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after two weeks, notify us, and we will make it right. Papers will be continued unless subscribers order otherwise.

Glances at the World.

We have never studied the laws governing baseball. We do not know whether the regulations are founded on what the original abolitionists called "the higher law," or whether the laws that were wont to regulate trade in slavery are in vogue. The latter, it appears. We often read of players being sold by one league to another. Whether a bill of sale passes we are not informed, or whether the man sold is consulted, or receives part of the price, we have never seen stated. The bare statement of the sale is announced, and without protest. In the sporting columns of one of our daily papers we read a notice to this effect: "An important baseball trade was consummated on the 9th," whereby Boston gets pitcher Charley Smith and $2500 in cash for 'Doc' Gessler, the heavy-hitting Boston outfielder." So, not only are players sold, but traded with a big amount of money to boot—sometimes. It must be understood that the players who are bought or bartered, are professionals, men who are in the sport for money. There are no preachers in the country, and comparatively few lawyers or doctors, who get as large salaries as some baseball players.

The commercial world has been greatly excited for several weeks past on account of the illness of Mr. E. H. Harriman, the controller of so many railroads, and one of the leading spirits of Wall Street, New York, the center of the money power of the country. The fear was that if Mr. Harriman should die, the business interests of the country would be disturbed and possibly bring on a panic. But Mr. Harriman died, greatly lamented by hundreds of good citizens, but the business of the country was not even jarred. This leads the Inter-Ocean to say (before Mr. Harriman's death) "there is no indispensable business man among us to-day. Prosperity is more broadly diffused than that. It is, in a way, 90,000,000 strong." "There may be a monetary pause, but that is all." "This is no one-man country." Besides having control of such immense interests, Mr. Harriman was immensely rich in his own right, his estate being valued at $192,000,000. That is more money than Adam would have accumulated had he worked for the last 6000 years and earned $85 every day. Mr. Harriman had enemies—he likewise, had many friends, and in his family life was an ideal husband and father.

According to the latest figures there are in the United States 4,833,620 women who earn their own living. These figures do not include school teachers or others who are engaged in what is called "the professions." They refer only to those who labor in the trades. They are "bread-winners"—in instances not a few, they are bread-winners for the family. Nearly one-half are under twenty-five years of age. Nearly one-quarter are under twenty-one. At least three-fourths of these women are filling men's jobs, all because, while they do the work as well as men they do it for much less money. Of the 303 kinds of work there are only nine that women are not doing. Of course, many of the women are at work outside of the home of necessity, and are to be honored for their courage and independence. But far too many, daughters of well-to-do fathers are at work in stores, offices and other places simply for the money. And, it is said, whether justly so or not, we do not know, that money-making becomes so fascinating, as to overcome all desire for home, and home-making. They prefer single life to husbands and children, and thus thwart the divine plan, and cheat the State out of thousands of good citizens. This is pure commercialism wholly out of harmony with the divine economy, and tends to lessen the number of families which constitute the foundation of both Church and State.

The biggest dispute between men of note that has occurred since the Schley-Sampson contention in 1899 is now on between Commodore Peary and Dr. Cook, both of whom claim to have discovered the North Pole. Naturally, opinion is divided—some side with Peary and some with Cook. Peary denies positively that Dr. Cook reached the pole, and affirms just as strongly that he did. The two gentlemen are presumed to be trustworthy—nothing in their lives has developed to show the contrary, and as far as we are able to determine there is no reason why we should not credit the statement of both explorers, and settle down in the belief that both of them reached the pole. We gather from the vast amount of matter printed on the subject that Peary was the best equipped man in every particular that ever undertook a polar search, while Dr. Cook in comparison was poorly equipped, and further that Peary was determined to find the object of his search, and having found it was determined to let no man take from him the glory of the first sight of the pole. It grieves him to think that another man reached the goal in advance of him. It is more than poor human nature can stand. In view of the vast amount of time and labor employed, and the untold sufferings endured, the achievement was great, but the practical benefits will amount to nothing. A few fancies of men have been dissipated by learning that there is nothing at the pole except ice. Nothing lives there, not even polar bears. We await further developments.

And now comes Cardinal Gibbons, a "prince of the Church," the head of the hierarchy of Romanism in the United States and supposed to be a man of great intelligence and observation, and reiterates a statement long since worn out by liquor dealers and their friends, viz: "You cannot legislate for virtue." The liquor dealers were a little plainer of speech. They said, "You cannot make men good by law." Nobody ever undertook to do that. Nobody thinks of doing that any more than the Governor of a State thinks of making a good man of a criminal by pardoning him. But prohibitionists do desire to suppress the liquor traffic which creates and promotes intemperance, and which directly and indirectly is responsible for seventy-five per cent. or more of the crimes against society and the State. If we drive one man out of the liquor business, while we do not make of him a good man, we deprive him of the opportunity of tempting other men to ruin. The effort is worth while. Cardinal Gibbons says: "There is only one thing to do, and that is to inoculate abstinence in the young people so that they may not become slaves of liquor. Believe me when I tell you there is no vice like that of intemperance, no vice that is followed by such dire results." That is good advice, and if the Cardinal will tell us how to "inoculate abstinence in the young people," say in New Orleans, with open saloons on almost every corner, no doubt fathers and mothers will be glad to follow the advice. But it is just as impracticable to make abstainers of all young people, so long as the saloons remain open, as to legislate virtue into men. Inoculate the young with abstinence principles by all means, at the same time apply legal suasion to the liquor dealer.

We read much in the papers about "the return of prosperity." What we read must be true, but multiplied millions of our citizens see nothing of it. Instead, to them the times seem harder than ever, for, while their wages have not increased, what they eat and wear costs them more than ever. The Review of Reviews for September, says: "All through the past summer the prices of the necessaries of life have been slowly advancing, reaching on August 1 the highest figure reported for that date, save one in 1907. It is rather startling to see that the average cost of the supplies practically every household must buy has increased over 49 per cent. since 1896. The Bradstreet Agency has selected 106 articles of domestic consumption and has kept a careful record of their prices, month by month, for seventeen years. The highest point ever reached was in March, 1907, after which came the moderate slump caused by the financial disturbances of that year. We are now marching steadily back toward this high record, and the August figures are only a little less than 7 per cent. below it. Some of the individual cases of increased costs are much more impressive than the average. Pork has advanced from $8.25 per barrel to $21.75; eggs, from 12 1-2 cents a dozen to 28 cents; mutton, from 5 1-2 cents a pound to 11 cents; corn, from 34 cents a bushel to 80 cents; wheat, from 64 cents a bushel to $1.20, and so forth. The figures given are wholesale prices, and as a rule, the advance to the ultimate consumer has been decidedly greater. It is rather interesting to note, in reading the Bradstreet statistics, that the commodities controlled by the trusts have generally shown a smaller increase in price than the average. Thus refined petroleum sold in 1896 for 7.8 cents a gallon, and the wholesale price now is 8 1-2 cents; sugar cost in 1896 4 7-8 cents per pound and costs now 4.85 cents; anthracite coal in 1896 cost $4.25 a ton and is now $4.90.

Attention to air navigation is world-wide. It will soon be a craze. The practicability is assured. The patterns of ships are many. Concerning the relative merits of the "airship," and the "aeroplane," the St Louis Republic has the following to say: "The Zeppelin airship reached Berlin, some 380 miles in an air line from Friedrichshafen, on Lake Constance, which the big craft, calls home, soon after noon on Sunday. The time was somewhat over fifty-six hours, the airship having met with an accident en route which necessitated a long stop at Bitterfeld. It came in in a broken-winged condition, with one propeller out of commission. This is much more significant than perfect performance would have been. A vehicle which may be relied on only when conditions all jump together to insure success is in the last analysis but a toy. Transportation depends on instrumentalities which can achieve half speed when full speed is impossible, and which may be depended upon to reach a destination, though late. The Zeppelin ship limped into port just as a twin-screw steamer would do with one engine out of commission. It had previously completed a journey after somewhat serious damage to the "hull" by collision with a tree. It has therefore demonstrated that it can safely withstand the ordinary mischances of the road to fabric and motive power; it is a practical means of transportation. The development of the heavier-than-air machine is a much more brilliant triumph of human intellect and scientific imagination than the invention of the Zeppelin ship. The study of the principles underlying the soaring of birds by Octave Chanute and the application of these principles to the construction of gliding machines inspired the Wright Brothers to elaborate a complete theory of flight and embody it in a machine which gives man the power of the eagle. But the solid usefulness of the Zeppelin ship, which can remain "afloat" without any means of propulsion and may crawl home with partially disabled machinery, is likely to be much greater than that of the fragile mechanism which must glide surely to earth as soon as the motor ceases to revolve."

By Rev. J. A. Rice, D.D.

VI.

President Snyder, in a recent number of our Review, made an admirable statement of the situation with reference to the small denominational college. Those interested, who have not read that article, ought to do so at once. Our condition on the financial side is anything but encouraging. The productive value of our endowments is growing less and less. Only a few years ago we could realize eight per cent. on long time, now we do well to get six. A generation ago a quarter of a million dollars endowment would yield enough to meet the current expenses of a strong institution, but the returns from that endowment are now cut almost in half. While the price of money is going down, the cost of education is going up. Only a generation ago seven or eight men, ten at most, could teach all the subjects required in a small college of high grade, but now the number of subjects required to be taught is increasing steadily. New fields of research are constantly opening up, and new chairs are therefore needed almost every year in progressive universities. So rapid is the advance of knowledge that the old text-book method of teaching has had to give place to the lecture system, and this in turn requires large libraries and a complete line of Reviews, both of which have to be replenished constantly. Rapid changes in the scientific field require new apparatus at great expense. The elective system now prevailing gives great advantage to the college that can offer the largest number of elective subjects. This of course, means great expense. Here we are then, the price of money steadily going down, the cost of education steadily going up. And there are those who are offering all these advantages. The State university, with ample resources to meet every demand, and in addition to that, following the logic of Democracy, offers free tuition, and thus reduces the expense to the student to the lowest possible figure. We have also the independent institution, backed in some cases by limitless millions, and competing strongly with the State university in the advantages offered and prices charged. Then we have the Carnegie foundation, forcing a new definition of the college and higher standards everywhere, while they offer an immense advantage in pensioning teachers in approved institutions, and excluding the church school from that number. Then comes the General Board of Education and the Southern Board, offering help upon certain conditions, which are such as to guarantee the strength and permanence of those schools accepting such help. Fortunately, the church schools are not tabooed by them, but one of the indispensable conditions upon which money can be gotten from them is the raising of adequate amounts by the friends of the institution applying. This again requires large amounts of money to increase perceptibly the efficiency of our colleges, and put them at ease in their struggle for existence. In other words, the tensity of the competition is increased by the increasing efficiency of our competitors, and our only hope is a like increase in our material resources. This, of course, makes our conditions hard and our situation perilous. The plea of church loyalty has been overworked, parents must be loyal to their children as well as to their church. It is unfair to ask our people to sacrifice the equipment of their children for securing their place in the world in order to patronize our own institutions simply because they are our own. It is true that money cannot make a college; it is equally true that a college cannot be made without it. Garfield's description of a university, as Mark Hopkins, on one end of the log, and the boy on the other, has much in it: but the boy who will depend upon Hopkins and log as a substitute for libraries and laboratories, will be left in competition requiring knowledge of literature and science, whatever he may get of inspiration and moral momentum. It is true that the highest culture is "caught and not taught;" it is also true that if we catch it we must go where it is and where it has the necessary means of imparting itself. No matter what the viewpoint, then, from which we approach the subject, the one inexorable call is for more money. It is utterly impossible to meet the growing demands for enlarged scope and increased efficiency in our institutions of learning with their present meager resources. If this money is not forthcoming, our present colleges, most of them, will be forced to a second place, and will ultimately rank scarcely above the high school.

Fortunately for us, however, our people are growing rich, and as soon as they are aroused to the inalienable responsibilities of wealth and the unparallelled opportunities offered by the church for service to society at its most vital point, they will come to our rescue. It is a very simple proposition that we must get money from people who have money. The small contributions of the poor are as sacred as life itself, belong to the holy of holies in all our treasuries. For out of their penury they give more than all our millionaires, but the fact remains that we cannot endow our colleges with nickels and dimes gathered in public collections alone. Our appeal must be to men and women of means. Whatever may become of other institutions in society, the church will endure. It is based upon the abiding religious instinct in its social relations, and not until that instinct has perished will the church cease to hold a vital and powerful place in the evolution of the race. If moneyed men are wise, therefore, they will look more and more to the church as the one only secure guardian of their benefactions. Social and political conditions change and with them all social and political institutions. Independent foundations may be destroyed or utterly perverted, and there can be no absolute guarantee of their permanent efficiency for the reason that they stand alone, with no powerful social instinct behind them. Even if they should endure, it is possible that they might prove a curse rather than a blessing. The most conservative, on the whole the sanest and the securest guardian a man can find on earth for any of his money he may desire to put at the disposal of the eternal years, is the church, against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. Let our moneyed men and women remember that they have built up their fortunes by using freely the institutions and forces of society. They have brought to their service the whole machinery of modern civilization. They have laid their hands upon every agency they could possibly make contribute to their welfare. They have let nothing pass they thought worth anything to them. They have made themselves by using others. They have in a sense built into their fortunes the souls and bodies of their fellow-men and women. They and their money alike are therefore the creatures of their times and of their country. Let them feel the force of Carnegie's dictum, "It is a disgrace to die rich." They owe a reasonable per cent. of what they have accumulated, not only to this generation, which has been faithful to their interests, but also to the generations to come after. It is not the bestowing of a gift, but the paying of a debt we therefore call for. Who that fails to respond to this call of righteousness can maintain at its highest his own selfhood?

But if there were no higher motives for setting aside a part of their means for the service of their fellow-men, self interest should prompt such a course. There are two kinds of immortality, personal and ethical. Earnest souls long, not only to live on themselves, but to win an abiding place in the heart of the world. One way of saying in Hebrew that a man is to be famous is to say, "They shall call his name." What a pitiable outlook for a man who has worked hard and built up a great business to go out forever and leave nobody to call his name when his generation has passed. What a magnificent outlook for such a man to set aside an endowment that will make men call his name for a million years, that will make it impossible for his social and ethical self ever to die. I do not see how a rich man can fail to appreciate this unspeakable opportunity, open to the rich, to work on forever. And I cannot see how, no matter what his religious convictions may be, he can fail to see that the church, which goes back to the beginning of history, and by all tokens seems destined to go on to the end—is the only absolutely secure custodian of his contribution to the far future.

But, of course, the church must show its practical capacity for administering in this way. If we split up our interests and dissipate our energies by doing a little here and a little there, we cannot hope to command the confidence of the well-to-do. We have made many mistakes in the past by undertaking the impossible task of keeping up a number of schools, some of whose territories have overlapped. Co-operation and combination are the inevitable trend of the world to-day, and the church must heed that trend. With the development of rapid transit it will be little less than a crime to foster inadequate institutions all over the country. Our only hope is to center upon a few, wisely distributed over our territory, and combine our energies in developing them. We should make a wise selection of those points best suited to our needs for the future and strengthen them as rapidly as possible. When we have decided upon this combination of forces at strategic points and shown a disposition to make these progressive centers—then, and not till then, will we prove our wisdom in educational administration and command the confidence of those upon whom we must depend for ultimate victory.

JACK'S PATCH.

By Rev. T. B. Holloman.

On the last page of the issue of Sept. 3 of the Nashville Christian Advocate appears a paragraph on the economy of our great church in caring for her superannuates, which reminds me of a story that came from the antebellum days. As is known to everyone acquainted with the plantation life of those times every negro, who chose, was allowed a spot of his own selection for his patch, which was, of course, planted in watermelons, and from which no small amount of pocket-change was derived by the slaves. Saturday afternoons were usually given by the masters, and they were employed for the cultivation of these patches.

To those of us having had observation of those days, the striking affinity of the negro and the watermelon for one another, there is nothing strange—each seems made especially for the other; and no horticulturist, be he ever so skilled, can equal the black man in raising this luscious fruit. Indeed, I remember to have heard one experienced in all the arts of Burbank say: "Let the white man be ever so careful in the selection of his seed, then the negro with seed from the rejected neck of the poorest specimen, when the show-down came, would put the master to the blush."

What tempting sights were those patches with mountain sprouts and Georgia rattlesnakes smiling on the vine, and Oh, how sweet! Somehow the fruit from these vines was more delicious than any other.

Now, my story, as I recall it, runs about this way: On one of those plantations where there were a score or more of negro families, there was a man whose name was Jack. Jack was an unusually industrious and frugal slave—thrifty and economical. As usual, Jack was among those who planted the patch, and from its proceeds had laid by quite a purse. On the old plantation Christmas times were enjoyed equally by the whites and blacks. "Christmas gift" went up as heartily from the people in the "quarters" as from those in the "big house," and old Master was not slow to recognize the pleasure to the slaves in catching his "Christmas gift." It was truly a week of merry-making, fully up to Irwin Russel's characteristic "Christmas in the Quarters."

The forthcoming gift from old Master was the source of many a "sposin," and conversation for weeks before the yule tide came.

Upon the occasion of which I write the master had gathered around him his faithful servants and was bestowing his annual tokens of appreciation.

Jack was the last to be called; all the others having received their gifts. The master addressed Jack thus: "Well, Jack, you have been a good servant; always punctual and always faithful." This of course aroused the expectations of Jack for something of a superior character. The master continued, "Jack you made a good patch this year, did'nt you?" "Yas, sir." "And you got good prices for your melons, did'nt you, Jack?" "Yas, sir." "And you hav'nt wasted your money have you, Jack?" "No, sir, Master, I'se got it at my house now, in de trunk." "Well, Jack, I haven't any present for you."

And this reminds the writer of one of the most burning sentences that ever fell upon his ears, when one of more than usual intelligence and observation remarked, "O, well, you know the Methodist church puts a premium upon poverty in its ministers." Did such spirit grow out of desire that our ministry should be in all things like him "who had not where to lay his head," it would be a conclusion for which we should bow down and give thanks; but if out of the spirit which actuated the old master in his dealing with the faithful Jack, cannot be too highly deplored. I am in hearty sympathy with the writer of the paragraph when he says that "right to support rests in the service rendered rather than in the good or ill fortune of the person who may chance to be enrolled as a Conference claimant," and furthermore, that he is right when he calls for a change in the humiliating demands for statements which are required from our claimants. Better than our present plan would be to distribute one-half on score of service and the other on present ground of necessity. What say those of the Honor roll?

Edwards, Miss.

CHRISTIAN SEED-SOWING.

By Joseph S. Terry.

The time of reaping is at hand in the material world. The sower went forth in the springtime and scattered the seeds. Upon one plot of ground he planted corn, upon another cotton, and so on until his crops were planted, and if his duty to these has been faithfully performed, he shall realize an abundant harvest.

So it is in the spiritual world. The springtime of sowing is at hand, and the plots are open. To some are given different ones. For instance, to the mother is assigned that plot of ground which brings forth the choicest fruit, the home. To the father that plot in which he moves day after day, and with which he constantly associates, the outside world. And so to others as they are capable.

What does it mean to be a sower of Christian seed? Does it mean that at some indefinite period, just merely as a result of our sowing, we shall present to our Lord ten talents? Not so; God expects everyone who sows not only to reap, but to prepare it by applying the refreshing influences of the divine truth that it may bring forth, in due season, a more abundant harvest, even a hundredfold.

It is alarming when we look into the homes of our land, and see the family altars chilled, as it were, by the coldness of sin, instead of the home being a place in which the tendencies of the boy or girl are turned toward the heavenly goal, it is a place in which the popular customs find residence and the kingdom of Jesus Christ is a side issue. Who is it that composes the spectating audience of the Sunday baseball and theatre? Is it those boys and girls whose hearts have become fruitless, having the heavenly light excluded from their souls?

Oh, that we had our land and homes filled with such mothers as was Susannah Wesley, whose memory should never die in the heart of Methodism. Yes, for such Christian seed-sowers, upon whom the Church of God could depend for spiritual co-operation. Mother, can't you be so?

It is a common thing to hear abuse and censure heaped upon our colleges and theological institutions, upon the ground that they corrupt the better nature of the youth. Because there have been some who drifted in ruin from home to college, and there consummated it, these "dry bones" begin to rattle and make a great noise, but thanks be to God they are breathless, and to those who are so afflicted we would suggest to reflect a moment upon their early home influences, which sowed the seed.

It should become a matter of great concern to every Christian worker, that because of no responses to the church bells, and the empty pews staring the preacher in the face, we have Sunday amusements. We should magnify the word preached so that it may wrest from the sceptre of sin the homes of our land, that the host whose bones are dry, might stand up "an exceeding great army" in the strength of our Lord, and join the ranks of him who is "the Captain of their salvation."

IS IT RIGHT?

By Rev. J. M. Alford.

In the spirit of love I ask the above question. In this day of development and business activity the whole country is a-stir. People are "coming and going." I think I am safe in saying that as many people have left the town of Bogalusa: (I mean the Mill-town proper) as were here at the beginning of the year. Of course many are still here who were in the town at first, but many come and stay perhaps only a month, some not that long, and are gone.

I have had occasion this year to study human nature, also the habits of men and women. This is a good place to see and learn something of human life in all of its phases: We have a cosmopolitan state of things here. It is in the church work. We have as many different notions and ideas as there are members. Our church membership is composed of people from Maine to California, and from Canada (we have Canadians in the church here) to the Gulf. We also have members from other countries who cannot speak good English.

Now in this day of rush and business changes we have largely a floating population. This is especially true in many sections of the South where our country is developing and the people are becoming adjusted to a new order of things. Many members are "lost sight of" because they are not urged by the pastor to take their certificate and deposit same as soon as they locate. I notice people come here who move all their property—cows, a horse and buggy, chickens, and even cats and dogs and leave their church membership behind. This is the last thing they think about moving, and often it takes pleading and prayer and a revival, and perhaps, serious trouble in the home before they will consent for the pastor to send for their certificate.

Early in the year a number of people came here from a certain town. I was delighted to learn that many of them were Methodists. I visited them and invited them out to church. I tried to make them feel at home. Of course, I at once, reminded them that they should let me send for their certificates. But for reasons they preferred to let them remain where they had been. Occasionally one or two would come out to church. I continued to visit them and for their good I would insist that I send for their certificate. After much pleading I was informed, by more than one of them, that the pastor where they had been had extorted a promise from them to let their membership remain as he would be hurt financially if they moved it.

Now, I thought this was very unjust and unkind. I think it is contrary to the spirit of Methodism and a hindrance to the progress of the kingdom. I am expected to be the pastor of those Methodists who hold membership somewhere else bound up by a promise "extorted" from them by their former pastor. "I would let you send and get it but I promised Brother —— to let it stay as he needed our support." "Brother —— begged me so hard not to move my membership that I promised." "I would let you send and get my certificate but I cannot go back on my promise to Brother ——." These are some of the reasons given why some Methodists are not willing to become members here. I cannot get my hands on them. They are here, and do not support the church here. They support the other pastor, and the pastor here is expected to look after them, if he does not, they are without pastoral care. Now, is it right?

A few days ago, a lady who had left here wrote me to send her certificate. They had assessed her and wanted her to get her certificate. Now bear in mind this lady left here and went to the place where all the Methodists came from whom I have mentioned. The same pastor! He assessed one of my members even before her membership was transferred and insisted that she get her certificate, yet he "extorts" promises from those leaving him to let their membership remain. I ask, "is it right?"

The Reily-Taylor Co., New Orleans, U. S. A.

To begin with, I believe it is an injustice to the individuals. They will lose out in interest when their membership is somewhere else. They feel and know their pastor is far away from them. They have nothing in common with the local church. I am at a disadvantage to do them good and I have absolutely not the least jurisdiction over them. This, they recognize, and often take advantage of same. Ever since these members came here I have heard expressions like this: "I never heard of Brother —— doing such a thing in —— (referring to the place where he had lived)."

I want to say this as I close: Any Methodist preacher who loves God, and the Methodist Church, and souls, better than he loves his pocket-book, will not use his influence to retain the membership of his members who go to some other place where there is a Methodist church. When my members leave here I insist that they take their certificates with them. I know it is for their good.

READ AND RESPOND!

Will those who have subscribed to the support of Brother C. V. Breithaupt, our missionary, at Houma, La., forward their subscriptions to Rev. W. W. Drake, Lake Charles, La., at once? This is a very urgent matter. Brother Breithaupt is doing a very fine work in that most needy field, and deserves the support of every loyal Methodist in the State. Our local French Mission Board has no source of revenue except the contributions of those who have subscribed to this work; and Brother Drake, the treasurer of the board, cannot pay Brother Breithaupt's salary for the current month unless the subscriptions are sent in to him at once, as the treasury is empty. Certainly you can appreciate what this means to Brother Breithaupt and his family, and the embarrassment to the board. The board is not only embarrassed with Brother Breithaupt's immediate needs, but is dependent upon your prompt response to meet its obligation to the Conference Board of Missions, for moneys borrowed, which are now past due.

Brethren, sisters, friends, everybody who have subscribed to this fund, and those who love Jesus Christ and are interested in this work, please read and respond. J. E. DENSON, P. E.

OUR WORK.

Perhaps we are prone to think that our work as an auxiliary of the present Society is of minor importance because forsooth we are but a handful in comparison with those auxiliaries in the towns and cities, but we should not forget that "little drops of water make the mighty ocean," and we, as a factor in the mighty work of the great parent Society are as a wheel within a wheel, helping to turn the machinery that makes possibilities in our work that each little auxiliary may be proud of and when the roll is called up yonder, we will receive our reward. The statistics of our last Annual Conference show an increase in all the various lines of work. The grand total of money raised for 1908 being $7509.58; the same for 1909 was $10,225.75. Total gain, $2716.17.

These "true facts" should give us greater zeal and each should go forth with renewed energy that it may be said for each member individually, "she hath done what she could." The great connectional idea and truth should be another incentive to greater activity in our work.

To know and feel that each one has an individual right to be spirit-filled and enthused, that she counts one in the grand army of the Woman's Home Mission work. It being, aside from the great accomplishments already known and acknowledged, the only organization of the kind that is authorized by our church. "Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O ye careless daughters." Know ye not that the blessed Master is calling, calling for you?

METHODISM'S SUPREME NEED.

By Rev. Rob't B. Downer.

Just now our Advocate family is pressing upon our attention many of Methodism's present needs. Possibly the possession of an inexhaustible, 100 per cent dividend-paying gold mine would satisfy the major part of them, and still leave unsupplied "methodism's supreme need."

The sanctified ark of God, when leading by divine authority, made the host of Israel invincible against all resisting forces. The same ark, under leadership of Samuel's sons, failed to redeem Israel, and became spoil for the enemy.

Methodism, traced to its origin, reveals the special handiwork of God for a specific purpose. "The Holy Club of Oxford," composed of loyal sons of the Established Church of England, had a holy ambition to render personal service to the Divine Master, clarifying the spiritual atmosphere of the church, and extending help and hope to God's poor. The seed sown brought forth more than a hundred-fold harvest. Special care was given that all disciples should possess the witness of the Holy Spirit to the fact of their spiritual regeneration; also that they should go on to the possession of entire sanctification, or perfect love.

When some of these disciples reached the shores of North America the Bible motto, "Holiness unto the Lord," was the inscription upon their banners. To spread scriptural holiness over the land became the supreme duty of all Methodist ministers, and as yet no General Conference action has declared any substitute. Before admission into full connection as itinerant ministers, there must be an affirmative answer to the questions concerning Christian perfect love. As far as our Book of Discipline is concerned, the Methodist Church of the twentieth century stands committed to the life, and promulgation of perfect love.

"Perfect love" is the supreme need of Methodism. With it permeating the whole host, from Bishop to the baby roll of our Sunday schools, Methodism becomes an agency in the hands of the Holy Ghost—to cause a nation to be born in a day. Every material want upon all lines will be supplied when none but wholly sanctified men fill the offices of Bishop, presiding elders, pastors-in-charge, missionaries, editors of Advocates, secretaries of Conference boards, presidents of our schools and colleges, Sunday school workers and official members of minor conferences. A Spirit-filled church, in the hands of the Holy Ghost, will speedily usher in the millennium. If this statement is accepted by you as true, my brother, my sister, is it not your present duty to get your heart right with God? Then, consecrate your whole being, with all its possibilities, to the glory of God's kingdom and the elevation and salvation of this material, earthly life of ours.

To be wholly sanctified will compel the acquirement of every possible honest dollar, and the disposal of it as God may elect. Careful watch will prevent all wastage for selfish gratification. One will constantly bear in mind that "Thou, God, see'st me," and unto thee only must I give an account of my stewardship at the last day. Of course, you will possess and use a prayer closet, not for gifts of personal enjoyment, but for power for service. You will not be upon your knees when duty is demanded of your feet to act the part of God's ravens, in conveying in person bread, words of sympathy and love for the poor.

Yes, it is quite likely that, as a minister filled with the Holy Ghost, you will find it quite correct to use as kindling many choice literary sermon-gems, filled with beautiful thoughts concerning the ideal life, but totally devoid of power to lift up Christ, so serpent-bit mortals may look and live. If a Bishop, you may have to experience your Gethsemane before being crowned with a Pentecost. Most likely being an ensample to the flock, you will abstain from all appearance of evil. When preaching to a conference of wholly sanctified ministers, how your soul will thrill with holy triumph, as from a heart-felt experience you unfold the mysteries of that unfathomed text, "Be filled with all the fulness of God." Very little, if any, friction will occur about appointments, unless some two or three thousand dollar preacher begs to exchange with a missionary sent to serve a $300 work. Talk about a preacher being "degraded" by being moved from any position and sent to a work paying less money! Such sentiments cannot exist when Christ sits enthroned in every heart.

What a demand the Advocate family will create when all editors are red-hot for Christ! Now, would it not be glorious if the next General Conference is composed of "wholly sanctified" members, and, in answer to special prayer, a second Pentecostal baptism descends on opening day? After adjournment, it would not be long before all Southern Methodism would be in possession of its greatest need.

Long Beach, Miss.

NOTICE TO LOUISIANA PREACHERS AND METHODISTS.

Because of the great need of our Orphanage, and the physical impossibility for me to reach all the territory in the State, I have persuaded Rev. Walter G. Harbin to assist me in the field until Conference. This arrangement is not to interfere with Brother Harbin's engagements to hold meetings in the State. I am trying to arrange dates for him with some of our pastors, and I hope that the same courtesy will be extended to him that has been accorded me. Much of Brother Harbin's work will be private solicitation, and his unannounced appearance in any charge may be expected. I hope that the preachers will assist Brother Harbin all they can.

Brother Harbin has already spent one day in this work and by private appeal secured a good sum for the Orphanage. We believe Brother Harbin will do us good work for the short time between this and Conference, that he can devote to this work.

Sincerely, ROB'T. W. VAUGHAN.

A LAST WORD.

From all sections of the State we learn that the Sunday Schools and churches with but few exceptions are going to observe "Work Day" for the Orphanage. We feel confident that the result will be most gratifying. We sincerely hope that every Sunday School in the State will do their best, if so it will mean a God-send to the Orphanage, and bring untold relief to many a needy child. We urge our people to do their best.

Carry what is made on Saturday, the 25th, to Sunday School and church on Sunday the 26th, and give it to the superintendent or preacher, and he will send it to the Orphanage.

May the richest blessings of our Heavenly Father abide on our people in their effort to provide the means to house the homeless, feed the hungry and clothe the destitute children that have thrown themselves on our great Church for the care and protection we can render. Sincerely,

ROB'T. W. VAUGHAN.

"ELDERITIS" AND OTHER DISEASES OF THE MINISTRY.

Mr. Editor: I have always regarded you to be good authority on all questions of Theology and Church Government, and I thought perhaps that you might be able to throw some light upon the cause and cure of these dreadful diseases about which this scribe is attempting to write. Of course I would not presume to attempt to write a treatise upon any of the subjects of medical science with which the learned M. D.'s are called upon to deal in their every day practice. I presume that a knowledge of the theory and practice of medicine lies outside of the realm of even your large and varied acquirements of things intellectual. But these diseases of which I write are peculiar to the ministry alone, and for this reason, I thought that you, perhaps, could shed some light upon their cause and cure.

To reach a correct diagnosis of his case and find out the remedy to apply the learned M.D. must carefully note the symptoms of his patient. I shall therefore describe some of the symptoms of "Elderitis" in order that you may correctly diagnose the case and tell to a long-suffering public the remedy for its cure.

The symptoms of "Elderitis" are most alarming in many instances, and manifest themselves according to the peculiar mental characteristics of the sufferer. In studying this disease, I have observed that mental modes and predispositions must be taken into account, for they enter as a vital factor in the diagnosis of the case.

With some, this disease goes at once to the head, making necessary the use of a washtub for a hat, so fearful is the swelling thereof. With others, this disease has the effect of elongating the walking apparatus so that no pants made by the tailors of these modern days will come within six inches of the shoetops. With others, this disease has the effect of enlarging the entire anatomical structure of the one so afflicted, so that no pair of even Mr. Taft's pants would fit a man formerly of Tom Thumb's dimensions. With others, an "Overlook-me-tis" symptom appears in the early development of the disease. This, I am told, shows the disease to be deep seated.

I had occasion, not long since, to study the disease of "Elderitis" in which the "Over-look-me-tis" symptom had abnormally developed. I noted that the sufferer was unable to recognize an ordinarially small preacher, not having the ear of the Bishop, the distance of the width of an ordinary railway car. I have always been interested in scientific study, and so I observed this case very closely. I observed that the sufferer always kept his eyes elevated as if viewing some object in the clouds. The thumb of his left hand was securely hooked in the arm-hole of his white-dotted, dollar and a quarter, pique vest, forming with his left arm an angle of about sixty degrees with the floor of the car. With his right hand, the sufferer was nervously stroking his new, six weeks old, Chester A. Authur side burns which had undergone a fresh coat of varnish, doubtless that morning. I observed also that the sufferer very nervously shifted an unlighted cigar from corner to corner of his mouth, and frequently let drop his lower lip so that three gold-filled teeth came prominently into view.

I have been told by good and competent authority that when the disease of "Elderitis" develops the "Over-look-me-tis" symptom, then, if death does not ensue, which is very frequently the case, a condition of "Don't-know-you-tibus" is sure to set up. Being very much interested in my study of this case, I observed closely and found that this was true; especially so when the sufferer bought a nickel's worth of bananas from the passing news butch. I have also been told that this peculiar development of "Elderitis" shows that the sufferer is incurable, unless, perchance, the quadrennium treatment given in "Lick-skillet-mission Sanitarium" or in "No-socks-circuit Hospital" will prove availing. I hope, my dear Doctor, that you can enlighten me at this point.

But there is still another very dangerous disease to which the ministry is liable, and which many, I fear, have contracted. I have observed that this disease appears quadrennially, and very strange to say, it becomes almost an epidemic the year preceding the meeting of the General Conference. In some quarters it is never thoroughly stamped out notwithstanding the most powerful disinfections are used to exterminate the germ. It will survive the most rigid winter of indifference and the drastic formaldehyde of organized opposition.

I have been told that the scientific name of this disease is "Gen-Conf-delegatis." However, I will not vouch for the correctness of this name, for I am not well acquainted with scientific formularies. I shall, therefore, content myself with giving you, my dear Doctor, some of its manifested symptoms.

In studying this disease, I have observed that like "Elderitis," a correct diagnosis can be reached only after the peculiar mental modes and characteristics of the sufferer are taken into account.

I have observed that those so afflicted manifest a most unusual concern for the welfare of the church, and often speak and write of the policies needed to be in force. They also develop symptoms of real distress lest the church will fall into the hands of weak and untried men who will not measure up to the requirements of the hour. They also have distorted imaginations, seeing plots and combines that will be ruinous to the church unless checked by very drastic, repressive measures. I have observed, again, that those so afflicted manifest an unwonted, quadrennial concern for the rank and file of the ministry, speak of the dear brethren in tender terms, and even shed copious tears when referring to the hardships of those serving our mission stations.

I have also observed that those afflicted with this dreadful disease are often found, seemingly unconscious to all surroundings, humming to the tune of "Ortonville C. M.," as written in the old hymn and tune book, the following hymn so expressive of the feeling uppermost in the soul:

To make the laws of Southern M—
Direct her policy,
To save her from small men, Ahem,
Needs such a man as me.

And so I say, my brother dear,
Be careful how you vote;
Small-men will make your lot most drear,
And you the blame must tote.

Of course, I do not care to leave
My sheep unfed a month,
Still if you just persist, I grieve,
But pack my little trunk.

And off to Asheville I will go,
And there'll be something doing;
By speech and vote, the world will know
I've saved the church from ruin.

And so I say, my brother, gallant,
Don't let them get you up a tree;
Assist, you say, make out your ballot?
I would but for my modesty.

I have also observed, my Dear Doctor, that this disease in the early stages of its development manifests the dreadful symptoms of "Write-many-letter-ibus," and that this proves that the disease is exceedingly stubborn and hard to handle. Now I have been told that in some instances when the "Write-many-letter-ibus" symptoms first appear, a state of perpetual reaction and rest to all concerned can be obtained by a most drastic use of fluid extract of "Skidoo-ibus-et-twenty-three ibus," hyperdermically administered. But as to this, however, I cannot speak with the authority of one who knows, for my observation is that even this drastic remedy will produce only a temporary or quadrennial cure.

It is likewise true, as I have observed, that when this fearful malady develops symptoms of "Write-many-letter-ibus" then it is that a restless, uneasy state of "Take-a-short-trip-ibus" is most likely to set up. This, as I have been told, shows that the disease is incurable. Not even that time-honored remedy, the use of which "the memory of man runneth not to the when of its beginning," namely: little paper ballots, with another fellow's name written plainly thereon, will bring about a permanent cure. Or at least, this is what the wise ones tell me, my dear Doctor, but I am ready to stand corrected if by any means I have been misinformed.

I have endeavored to point out and diagnose these dreadful diseases to which the ministry is liable and which, I fear, many have contracted. I most earnestly hope that you will be able to point out the remedy that will bring about an effectual cure. The medical fraternity of to-day is accomplishing great things in its work of discovering specifics for the various ills to which flesh is heir, but so far as I have learned nothing has been done in this peculiar field of investigation. Now is your golden opportunity to win for yourself and for those that come after you an eternal fame and the undying gratitude of a long-suffering church.

With bated breath, with dreadful awe,
We now beseech you, learned in law
'Clesiastical,
Formulate that combinitis
That'll rid the church of "Elderitis"—
Ministerial.

For you, a learned double D,
Can make the blindest of men see,
That "G-C-Delegatis,"
Belongs to men whose mould of mind
Unfits them to make any kind
Of G-C-legislatis.

Then, Champion, strike! Apply your whip!
Nor fear the curse of scorn curled lip!
For we stand by you, hip to hip.
With gladness, beatific.
Seize! seize! your mighty fountain pen
With which you've routed Baptist men,
And Campbellites, and Calvinists,
And Nashville's learned Revisionists,
The whiskey gang, the higher critic,
Those who ignore our Bishopric;
In fact, all men who would besmirch
And spoil the garments of our Church.
Then, Champion, seize your fountain pen,
Lambast them most terrific!

PRAYING DICK.

Some of the railroad men declared it was only a fortunate accident; but others, even some of the wickedest, always insisted it was a providence. As for Praying Dick, he would only say, "That's the way it was," and never tried to explain it.

Dick Cameron, known to the other railroad men on the Missouri division of the A., T. & S. F. railroad as Praying Dick, was day operator at Mud Flat. In fact, he was the only operator at Mud Flat, and also agent. He went on duty at 6 o'clock in the morning, and worked until 7:30 in the evening: selling tickets, handling freight, baggage and express, and doing all the telegraphing.

Mud Flat was a very sorry sort of place: a little rain-splashed, sunburned wooden town of fewer than two hundred people. It was situated near the bank of a torpid, dirty little river, and most of its inhabitants belonged to that class contemptuously referred to as "river rats." There was not a church in town, and only one Sunday school, which met Sunday afternoons, as that was the only time Cameron, the superintendent, could leave the depot.

It was his interest in this Sunday school, together with the constant appearance near his telegraph keys of a well worn Bible, from which he sometimes sent messages over the wire when business was slack, that gave him his nickname.

Cameron was not agent at Mud Flat from choice. When he had moved there with his young wife and baby girl five years before, they supposed it would not be for more than a year at the worst.

Just why he had not been promoted was rather a puzzle. Some of the trainmen said, with an oath, that it was because he was too pious: a fellow had to be a "sport" to stand in with the "brass collars," they declared. Others said—and no doubt more correctly—that it was because Dick did his work well and was not always raising a row, as every other agent did who was sent to Mud Flat.

But there was something more than either of these reasons, something of which Dick Cameron was quite well aware: and that was his lack of any marked ability. He was a fair, painstaking operator, a faithful, accurate agent; but he possessed no special qualifications that would push him forward and mark him for promotion. He had never expected to be a great railroad man; but he had hoped and longed for a good station in a good town, where they could have good church and social advantages and an adequate salary. He longed for such a change more than ever now that the little girl was old enough to enter school.

At the height of his ambition he had sometimes dreamed of being agent at Wellington, the next station above, fifteen miles up the road. Wellington was a fine town of five thousand inhabitants, good schools and churches, nice clean streets, and buildings that were attractive, just the sort of town in which they would best enjoy themselves, and in which to raise and educate the little girl. The salary, too, was good, $120 a month, more than twice what he received at Mud Flat. But of late he had not hoped for any promotion; even a change at the same salary would have been welcome.

* * * * * * * *

The dispatchers sat at their keys in the railroad building at Mayfield headquarters for the Missouri division. It was a pleasant May night, and a vagrant breeze wandered in through some open window and stirred the sheets on the dispatchers' tables. One of the dispatchers relaxed for a moment and yawned. Everything was running smoothly. The Limited was on time, and there was no congestion anywhere along the line.

His companion, the dispatcher handling the east end, and on whose line was now the fast California Limited, checked that train out of Marion, looking at his watch—it was exactly 2 o'clock—and turned to speak to Griffith, the night chief, who had just come up and stood leaning on the railing behind him.

Instantly the dispatcher whirled and caught the key. Quickly and sharply he asked a question of the night man at Wellington, and grew deathly pale as the answer came back haltingly. With nervous haste he ordered Wellington off the line, and called Marion, the next station below Mud Flat.

"Is the Limited out of the yards?" The question fairly cracked along the wires.

"Yes," came the answer.

"Goodness! Griffith,"—the dispatcher turned a ghastly face to the night chief—"there's going to be a wreck. Fool at Wellington forgot orders. Limited and fast freight headed straight for each other. Get the train master quick. Get out the wrecking crew, and take every doctor in town."

The terrible news ran through the building like a shudder; and the first thought in every man's mind was of the suffering and death in store for the passengers sleeping securely, and of their fellow-trainmen hurrying on those two monsters to their own death.

Every man about the building who could leave his post ran up to the dispatchers' rooms. Among them was the superintendent, who had just come in on a train, and stopped at his office to leave some orders.

The dispatcher was still trying desperately to find some way to stop one of the trains. The superintendent and the others, most of whom were old operators themselves, stood by with drawn faces, silently reading off the wire the messages that went and came.

"For heaven's sake, man," the dispatcher was saying to the operator at Marion, "can't you reach Mud Flat, some way? Can't you do something?"

"Nothing," came the reply. "Station there closes at 7:30; no night telephone service; no time if there was."

The dispatcher leaned back, and breathed heavily. He took out his watch, and most of the men did likewise.

"They will meet"—he stopped as if choking for an instant—"in six or seven minutes. It will be about a mile below Mud Flat, on that crooked stretch of road. Nothing on earth can save them."

No one spoke, but each man watched the second-hand of his watch as it crept around and around. Outside down in the yards the shrill whistle of the wrecking train blew again and again calling the crew to duty; the train master was busy at the telephone calling doctors; along the platform and in the yards men raced in preparation for the rescue train.

But inside the men stood silent, paralyzed by the horror of it, watching the seconds tick away. One minute, two, three, four—

The despatcher could stand the silence no longer. He caught the key, and began to curse the operator at Wellington. "You crap-shooting ham, you have murdered a hundred people"—and on and on in swift, lurid oaths, he abused the guilty man.

Then some one down the line broke in. The despatcher ceased his blasphemy, and stared at the key as if he saw a ghost. And every man of the scared, anxious group leaned forward in amazement.

"The Lord is merciful and gracious," the message came slowly and evenly, "slow to anger and plenteous in mercy; he hath not dealt with us after our sins—"

"My!" exclaimed the dispatcher, "that is Praying Dick."

He grabbed the key, and called frantically, "CG CG CG."

"As a father pitieth his children—"

"CG" desperately repeated the dispatcher, and then Cameron answered his call.

"Red light quick—stop train," said the dispatcher.

"All OK," came the slow, even reply: "Freight now on siding."

Several of the men turned away, not daring to look into one another's eyes.

The relief was too great; the dispatcher's hand trembled so he could not hold the key. The night chief stepped in and took hold of the instrument.

"How long have you been there?" he asked of Cameron.

"About five minutes," answered Dick.

"How did you happen to be up at this time of night?"

"Don't know."

"What waked you?"

"Don't know. Just waked up, and came over to the depot. Heard dispatcher talking to Marion. Got out and flagged freight."

That was all the explanation he ever gave, or ever could give.

The next day Dick Cameron, the day man at Mud Flat, got a message from the superintendent, rather an unusual one from such an officer. It read:

"Praying Dick—Shake, and accept thanks. Auditor will be down on 14 to check you out. You are to take charge to-morrow as agent at Wellington. 'All things work together for good to them that love God.'"—W. W. Hamby, in Christian Endeavor World.

DEATH OF BISHOP WARD.

Death has again visited our ranks and taken from us another General Superintendent, the sixth since our last General Conference. At the meeting of the College of Bishops last May Bishop Ward was assigned to the Mission Conferences in the Far East. When the time came to start he was not well, though to all appearances there were no serious or alarming symptoms, and his physician thought a sea voyage would be greatly to his advantage. But he grew worse, and when he reached Japan he was very ill and had to be carried to a hospital for treatment. He fell into the hands of our missionaries, who cared for him, especially Rev. S. E. Hager. The brethren in Japan, if we are not mistaken, regarded his case as hopeless from the day they first met him. The disease, an affection of the brain, was exceedingly painful—the pain continuing until death came to his relief in Kobe, Japan, on the 20th of September.

In the death of Bishop Ward our church has lost one of its strongest men. For years no man stood higher in Texas—his brethren believing him to be equal to any position in the connection. This idea was impressed on the church at large, and he was elected as one of our missionary secretaries. He labored in that capacity for four years, and at the General Conference in Birmingham, May 17, 1906, he was elected to the Episcopacy. His career in this office was short—a little more than three years—but during that time, by his prudence, judgment, wise management and preaching ability, convinced the church that in selecting him as one of our chief pastors, a wise choice had been made. He was in the prime of life—possibly had not reached the limit of his powers—certainly he was constantly growing in usefulness, and in the good opinion of his brethren. He was only 51 years of age, and apparently had many more years in which to work for his Lord. But the Master knew best, and has called his servant from labor to reward.

The whole church mourns, but bows in submission to the divine will—the will of our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things well. What must be the sorrow of the loving wife, separated from her husband by a broad ocean, when he needed her gentle ministries, who can tell? Nothing but divine grace can comfort her. May she have that in rich abundance!

The Louisiana Conference of all the Conferences will feel specially grieved. Bishop Ward presided over its sessions every year since his election as Bishop—three years—and would have held it again, had he lived, in December; and the brethren were looking forward with great interest to his coming. When they meet him again it will be in "the general assembly and Church of the first-born which are written in heaven."

WHAT THE CHURCH WANTS.

Above all things the Church of to-day wants grace and wisdom. This is true of all denominations, but especially of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Not that Southern Methodism is in any respect worse than other bodies, or is more likely to succumb to evil influences and depart from the faith, but because of the near approach of the General Conference, at which time there is always manifested a spirit of restlessness in regard to existing conditions, accompanied with appeals, memorials, or personal recommendations for change. They are generally as numerous and diverse as were the doings in the Church at Corinth, when every every one "had a psalm, a doctrine, a tongue, a revelation or an interpretation."

The coming General Conference will not have before it a greater number of calls for change by way of repeal or amendment of existing laws, or the enactment of new ones, than previous sessions, but there will be before it demands for radical legislation. Some of these demands were heard, considered and thrashed out, years ago. Some of them are newly formed and are supposed to be full of life. If all the demands are complied with the home folks will not know their own Church after June 1, 1910. The demands may be enumerated as follows—in which enumeration we will doubtless overlook some of great importance to those who urge them:

Somebody will ask that the name of the Church be changed. The call for this is not as loud nor as insistent as it was twenty years ago.

There will be a call for a few changes in the Ritual. The last General Conference appointed a commission on revision. The commission has the subject under consideration and will report at Asheville next May.

Somebody will undertake to revolutionize the Episcopacy, (1) by cutting off the life tenure and making Bishops elective for a term of years, four or eight, subject to re-election; or twelve, not allowing re-election, but retiring them, some say to the pastorate, and others on a pension; (2) by taking from the Bishops the authority to transfer preachers from one Conference to another except by arrangement among themselves at their annual meeting, or by consent of the Conference to which it is proposed to transfer a preacher.

The presiding eldership will be considered, and it is proposed—not to do away with the office, for every one that has undertaken to "solve the problem" acknowledges its usefulness if not its necessity, but to give the Annual Conferences the authority to elect the presiding elders outright, or to nominate double the number needed for the office, and from these let the Bishop select the men for the places. An effort will also be made to rule presiding elders down to one term of four years. And somebody, believing in the working power of presiding elders, and desirous of maintaining their dignity, will try hard to make them the Bishop's legal advisers, and not allow one appointment to be made without their knowledge and consent. Those who advocate this policy are liberal and magnanimous enough to allow the Bishop the deciding vote in case of a tie. These propositions aim ostensibly at the regulation of the presiding eldership only, but they affect likewise the authority of the Episcopacy.

The question of abolishing the time limit of the pastorate will again be put forward for discussion. It has been buried time and again, but still lives.

The educational interests of the Church will be fully considered, as will also the question of consolidating Church papers, particularly those devoted to special departments of work. Perhaps a hundred other matters of more or less importance will be subjects of memorials, petitions and resolutions, and be disposed of by ratifying the committees' recommendation of "non-concurrence." Many papers for lack of time will never reach the General Conference.

Unfortunately, many brethren who advocate measures, especially those in regard to the Episcopacy and presiding eldership, seem to do so without considering that they involve constitional changes that the General Conference alone is powerless to effect. These constitutional matters if endorsed by the General Conference must go the round of the Annual Conferences before they can be effected. Much time will be required, and we may say much labor will be lost, for we do not believe the Church is ready for such radical legislation.

In view of all these things, the anxiety about the election of men to the Episcopacy, not to mention the restlessness of some who are clamoring for a more "democratic government," we insist that what is needed now in the Church, among both the preachers and the people, is more grace and wisdom. Our great concern should be, not what can we do to bring our Church up-to-date, but what can we do to best glorify God and advance his kingdom among men? It will require all the grace and wisdom we can command to answer that question. The General Conference is not supposed to be made up of politicians, but of men intent on serving God.

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. W. Perry, writing from Terry, Miss., says: "We have closed our last meeting on the Terry circuit. All four of them were good ones. Will give a fuller account later."

Rev. L. R. Roberts, writing from Basin, Miss., requests us to announce that "Salem Camp Meeting will be held, beginning October the 6th, and continue about five days. All preachers are invited to attend."

Rev. W. W. Graves has just completed a nice parsonage on the Homewood charge, and reports the work generally as "moving along nicely." We thank him for kind words and good work in behalf of the Advocate.

Rev. R. A. Meek of the Greenville (Miss.) District informs us that Rev. J. R. Countiss is now engaged in a meeting in Greenville, with Rev. G. A. Klein of the Memphis Conference doing the preaching. We trust many may be saved and added to the church.

Rev. A. S. Lutz is grieving over the damage done to his church, the Felicity Street, by the storm that swept over the city last Monday. The roof we learn was considerably torn up—about $500 damage was done, which we hope will soon be repaired. Services in the church, we presume, will not be interrupted.

Rev. K. P. Foust of Olive Branch, Miss., sends us a fine report of his charge. We call attention in advance to what he says about his League, and ask readers to bear in mind that his Olive Branch League numbers almost as many members as the village has inhabitants. We rejoice with Brother Foust in his great success.

The Columbus, Miss., Dispatch of recent date has this complimentary notice of one of our preachers, the pastor of the Sturgis charge: "Rev. W. R. Goudelock commenced his protracted meeting at Vaughan's Church last Sunday. He preached two very excellent sermons Sunday. He plainly denounces sin in all of its forms."

Dr. W. L. Weber sends us the following note from Shreveport, dated September 15: "Centenary opened again to-day with about one hundred students on hand—fully twice as many as the first day last year." We rejoice with Dr. Weber, his faculty and the trustees, and all others who are interested in the success of our college. May the number of students be doubled before Christmas.

Rev. W. G. Harbin has been appointed special financial agent for the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage. This we take it is an excellent appointment. He will enter upon the canvass as soon as he closes an engagement at Stuttgart, Ark., where he is at present. We commend Brother Harbin to the pastors and their flocks in Louisiana. We trust that he may be abundantly blessed in his mission.

A devoted parishioner sends us the following good words: "Rev. C. P. Moss resumed his work last Sunday, September 12, at Batesville, Miss., after a month's vacation, and delivered a gloriously worthy sermon on, 'A Good Conscience toward God,' every utterance being strictly founded on truth. It so inspired the congregation that it began to bear good fruit ere the evening passed away. He is accomplishing a great work at Batesville, or rather God is, through him."

Rev. G. W. Bachman, our colporter, was called to Texarkana, Ark., the first of the month by the illness of his youngest sister, Mrs. Eucinda F. McKnight. She died a few hours after his arrival. For many years she had been a devout Christian and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. She was laid to rest in State Line Cemetery, Texarkana, to await the resurrection. The bereaved family hope to meet her in that glad day. Her pastor, Rev. S. C. Dean, has furnished us a memoir which will be printed in due time.

The grim reaper has been busy in the home of our brother and friend, Dr. J. L. Lercir of Amite, La., three of the family having been taken away inside of six months. First, his sister, Mrs. J. R. Taylor, died August 29. She died in Amite, but her home was Dallas, Texas. Then his little daughter, Carrie Lawrence, four years of age, went away. Then on September 10, his mother-in-law, Mrs. Emily Carrie Wayne of New Orleans, entered into rest. All these sweetly sleep in Jesus, and the bereaved ones have hope of a glorious reunion by and by.

Rev. B. P. Fullilove of Abbeville, Miss., reports three meetings resulting in twenty-five additions to our church and three to the Presbyterians. At Abbeville he was assisted by Rev. J. H. Smith, whose sermons were enjoyed by all. At Union Hill, Rev. W. J. Ward assisted. He delighted the people with his gospel messages. At Andrew Chapel, where there were seventeen added to the church, he had no ministerial assistance. We are rejoiced to hear that old Andrew Chapel is still alive. Many good people worshiped there in the long ago when Rev. James Perry and this writer traveled the Oxford circuit when it was composed of eighteen churches and three or four other preaching places. "Circuit riding" was something in those days.

We think our readers will be pleased with the faces of the two little girls whose pictures appear on another page. These little girls, without home and friendless, were found by Rev. Paul M. Brown and carried to the Louisiana Orphanage—among the first children cared for by that great charity. They are beautiful, lovable and obedient, are intelligent, quick to learn and are anxious to be good and do good. They give promise of growing into useful women. If the Orphanage never accomplishes any more good, the care and saving of these little girls will repay the Methodists of Louisiana for all the money they have spent in projecting and carrying on the work. Remember Saturday, the 25th, is orphanage work day, and give the proceeds of the day's labor to the cause.

BISHOP WARD—AN ESTIMATE.

By Dr. Jno. A. Rice.

It is difficult for me to give offhand an adequate estimate of the man who has fallen at his post in Japan. Bishop Seth Ward, D.D., was born in Texas, fifty-one years ago. He received his education in the country schools, and entered the ministry quite young. From the first he was sent to an student. While very young he was sent to an appointment where one of Texas' famous teachers lived. He went to the teacher for suggestions as to what to read. This distinguished educator said afterwards that at the close of four years the young preacher could tell him what to read.

I first met him at the University of Chicago in the summer of 1901. He came up with a party of teachers and preachers from his state. The fact that he braved criticism and went to what was at that time for lack of better knowledge regarded as a hotbed of heresy, even for six weeks, showed the kind of stuff he was made of. Without college training himself, he at all times had a passion for the truth and was open to receive it whether it happened to tally with his preconceptions or not. The truth and not the form in which it is expressed, though those forms might be hoary with age and held holy by a thousand traditions, truth was his passion. He studied all the time. Ever alert to modern conceptions, he was adept in asking pointed questions that might add to his store of knowledge. The last time he was in my library he went carefully through all the new books that had been added and asked for an estimate of each with which he was not familiar. He read constantly on his endless travels. I have never known a man to grow so rapidly as he did during the last five or six years. The lines of his interests were constantly moving. Had he lived ten years longer this country preacher without technical training would have been one of the scholars of his church. His power of detachment was marvelous. He could strip a question of all its entanglements and connections and look at it with judicial mind to an extent beyond that of almost any man I have ever known. Cool, clear-minded, accurate in his intellectual methods, he was one of the best advisers on almost any question I have ever known. And he was frank. Whatever he said he meant: that, nothing more, nothing less. Language was to him a means not of concealing thought but expressing it. He saw clearly and could and would tell what he saw. This applied to business as well as other matters. Bishop Galloway once told me that they had never had a man in the mission rooms at Nashville that was his equal in caring for details. Four years of unexcelled work in the capacity of missionary secretary elected him Bishop in 1906. This element of his make-up fitted him for his episcopal office. As an administrator of the affairs of the pastorates under his care, no man ever elected to that high office in his great church was his superior. The estimate in which he is held in Louisiana is shown by the fact that he was asked for to preside over this Conference this year for the fourth time in succession—a thing rarely, if ever done in the whole history of the church. And we would have been glad to have had him four years more.

When he came here, he found many difficulties that seemed insurmountable. Yet, the last time I saw him, he said that conditions were so exceedingly fine here that the Conference could run itself this year and did not need a Bishop. In that opinion any man who knows would concur. What he did here, he did everywhere he was sent. Marvelously versatile in his sympathies and interests, remarkably adjustable to difficult and changing situations and conditions, always alert to shifting currents of thought and [illegible] instinctively a judge of men, he was by nature a great Bishop. It was in his blood. Indeed a distant ancestor was a Bishop in the English Church, and this aptness was therefore not new in his lineage.

For one reason alone, Methodism could ill afford to lose this gifted son of providence. There is a strong tendency among us toward a greater democracy. In theory our Bishops are supreme, but there is a deep desire on the part of many to modify this autocracy and in every way possible make Methodism democratic. This is shown by resolutions recently passed by the Missouri Conference memorializing the law making Conference (the General Conference which meets next year) to elect Bishops for a term of years instead of for life as now, and another to require him to make his appointments in presence of his presiding elders, and, of course, with their approval. And still another to remove the four years' limit. With the spirit underlying this general movement, Bishop Ward, who was thoroughly modern, was in full sympathy. He did not hesitate to pronounce himself a democrat.

As a preacher, he was a surprise to his friends during the last few years. His growth was by leaps and bounds. His sermon here a year or two ago on the "The Kingdom of God" was a masterpiece measured by any standard, whether of thought content, clearness, vividness, impassioned earnestness, elegance of diction and charm of delivery or moving power. Behind his words one felt the momentum of measureless reaches of experience of life. Indeed the man was behind all he said and did. There was a granite solidity and a crystal transparency in his every attitude. In the social circle chaste and elegant, in the home a delightful companion, in the administration of affairs, accurate, painstaking, careful of details; in dealing with men always just and kindly, in the chair the courteous gentleman, as well as the master of assemblies; on the platform the unrelenting advocate, in the pulpit the sound exegete as well as the stirring orator, and above all, everywhere the brother to all men, the devout Christian to be loved, and the friend to be trusted to the last, Bishop Seth Ward will grow through the years in the abiding place he made for himself in the heart of the church to which he gave all the energy lent him of God.

THE ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.

Dear Advocate: I am glad to report things moving on smoothly on the Alexandria District. A card from Brother Purcell reports a fine meeting at a school house on his charge in which he was assisted by Brother Holliday of the Pelican charge.

The contract has been let for the new church at Columbia, which willl be completed before Conference. An eligible lot has been secured for our new church at Natchitoches. A number of meetings have been planned for the autumn months. Finances are behind, but everybody seems to be ready for "a steady pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether for the home plate."

Miss Winnie Martin of Tennessee has been assigned by the Woman's Board of Home Missions to the Alexandria District to work in connection with our saw mill churches. She will begin her work in the next few days.

The pastor at Alexandria has announced that Rev. Joe Ramsey will assist him in a meeting in October. Rev. J. D. Harper, the pastor in Bunkie, has begun a meeting in which he will be assisted by his son, Rev. Henry Harper of Natchitoches. There will be nothing wanting in the sweetness and melody of the notes of these harpers.

WATERFORD CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell I wish you and those who read the Advocate to know of the gracious revival just held by the members of Old Asbury Church and those of the Presbyterian Church at the beautiful Spring Creek Presbyterian Church, conducted by our pastor, Rev. W. L. Broom, assisted by Brother Smith, of the Presbyterian Church.

Twenty were received into the Methodist Church and two into the Presbyterian Church on profession of faith, and one into the Presbyterian Church by letter. The membership received a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

The sermons of Brother Smith came from a loving heart, and were delivered in simple, beautiful, scriptural language. The Holy Spirit seemed to be in every thought of the speaker.

For a young man, Brother Broom can hardly be excelled. He is as modest as a maiden, brave as a soldier, wise as a philosopher, and his faith and zeal like an apostle. At times his large audiences were held spellbound by his earnest, loving words. If every pulpit in our beloved Methodism was filled by preachers like Bro. Broom, the cry of a dearth of preachers would not be heard. Under such faithful preaching young men would fall upon their knees and cry out: "Lord, here am I; what wilt thou have me to do?" "Send me, send me." Fathers and mothers would ask God to take their sons and daughters and use them for the glory of his name.

A heathen mother, who had two sons—a poor little cripple and a bright, vigorous little boy—was visited by a missionary after she had thrown the healthy little boy into the river for the crocodiles to eat, that the wrath of the gods might be appeased, and this mother was asked why she did not give the little cripple boy to the gods and save the little boy that was well and happy for herself. She replied: "The gods will only be satisfied with the best." Will not this heathen mother, who had never heard of the Savior's love, rise up in the judgment and condemn the mothers of Christian America? She made a sacrifice of her best son to satisfy her gods, and our mothers will not dedicate their sons to the service of the true God.

May the Holy Spirit cause some mother who may read these lines to fall upon her knees and give her best boy to God that he may be used to carry the message of the Savior to perishing souls, is my earnest prayer.

We have a good Sunday school, and have begun a weekly prayer-meeting. Next Sunday we will organize the women into a Home Missionary Society.

To God be all the praise.

PINE GROVE, LA.

Mr. Editor: I suppose a word from Pine Grove will be in order. We began a meeting at Pipkins' Chapel on Wednesday night after third Sunday in August. Brother W. E. Alford, of Magnolia, Miss., father of J. M. Alford, of Bogalusa, did the preaching for us. This man of God did some good preaching that will be remembered by all who heard him. The weather was bad, but he stood firm and told them of God and his Son, whose blood was shed for sinners. The church was greatly revived, one young man joined the church. May the Lord bless this good man. We closed on Sunday night with a good, old-fashioned hand-shaking.

On Tuesday night following we began at Pine Grove. Our good presiding elder, Rev. C. C. Miller, was with us, and gave us two strong sermons. Then came Rev. J. M. Alford from the largest sawmill town in the world. He gave us good, strong gospel, that stirred things. The church members were greatly revived, and many promised to erect family altars. Eleven members were received. This is said to be one of the best meetings that has ever been held at Pine Grove Church. The house was filled with anxious listeners, and the preaching was full of the Holy Spirit. Any one will do well to get J. M. Alford to assist them in their meetings.

We expect to hold at Killian Chapel and Montpelier soon. We will remember the dear old Advocate as we go along. H. C. MURPHY, P. C.

RIPLEY AND BLUE MOUNTAIN.

Dear Dr. Boswell: If you will kindly allow me a little space in your good paper I will give the readers a short account of my work.

First, I wish to say that I never served better people than are found on the Ripley and Blue Mountain Charge. They are religious, loyal and liberal. The stewards placed the salary at $900, which is $200 above any former assessment, all of which will be paid. We have already paid off our foreign and home mission assessments, and also the church extension claim, and have a part of the other claims in cash. Our new house of worship at Blue Mountain is worth nearly $3,000, and is all paid for, except about $600. In the beginning of the year we did not have so much as a church organized there. We have organized two new Sunday schools during the year, two W. H. M. S., and added 134 new members to the charge.

We had a great meeting at Falkner. Forty new members were added, and everything in good condition. This charge is in fine condition, and is fast growing to be one of the strongest charges in the district.

During the summer I have helped Brothers Martin, Stephens, Flynn and Floyd in meetings, in which we had a good time. During all this busy year I have secured twenty-five subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. J. H. BASS.

"Saloons are the graveyards of ambitions and burial grounds of many wasted lives." In these striking words the Chicago Tribune gives two columns of space to a discussion of the menace in the saloon's "back room." "No other agency in Chicago," writes Elias Tobenkin, in this Tribune article, "can compete with the 'rear room' of the saloon in the matter of destroying character, ruining homes and blighting lives," quoting a careful student of this phase of city life.

The motor boat is opening a large number of forgotten navigable streams. Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, practically declare to be navigable, any stream in which you can float a canoe or a sawlog at ordinary stage of water. All navigable streams are under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. It might surprise some men who have drawn barbed wire across such streams, the penalty that uncle Sam imposes for any obstruction of a navigable river. In the case of an individual obstructing such water he may be fined, not exceeding $2500, or imprisoned, not exceeding a year. This law may be invoked any time that a United States district attorney awakes to the fact of its violation. No one has cared in the past, but as the motor boat opens up the multitudes of streams over which it readily makes its way, there will be more and more a demand for the removal of all obstructions.

ARCOLA AND HOLLANDALE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The physical atmosphere in these parts is hot, dry and dusty, but the water of life flows fresh and sweet from the throne of God and the Lamb. The Lord of Hosts is with us. He has been with us all the year, but especially during our revival meetings.

We held our meeting at Hollandale the last week of May, with Brother Curtis, of Coldwater, one of the purest and best men of the Conference, doing the preaching. It was unfortunate for us that Brother Curtis was limited to one week with us. Brother, don't limit yourselves to a few days to hold a meeting. There were only two additions to the church, but there was a deep and lasting work of grace wrought among the membership of the church. The people of Hollandale will not soon forget Brother Curtis, nor the earnest gospel message he brought us.

Our next meeting was at Arcola, which some of the old residents say was the best meeting Arcola ever had. Brother Lagrone, our Conference missionary evangelist, did the preaching. He smote the forces of evil with the strength of a Galahad. There were twelve additions to the church, and a moral revolution wrought in the town. A Law and Order League of thirty men was organized, and men set to work to correct the evils that were disgracing and ruining our community. The old serpent will not forget the death-dealing blows from this faithful man of God. Brother Lagrone also gave us a striking and helpful representation of the work and needs of the mission fields.

We have just closed a great meeting at Murphy. Here we had just completed a new church, lights and furnishings complete; paid for it, and have some money yet. What do you think of that? Brother Countiss did the preaching. Planting himself upon the impregnable rock of Holy Scriptures, he defied the powers of sin in the name of the Most High God. "Jesus only," was the key-note of his soul-thrilling messages. The Holy Spirit was manifestly present from the first to the last service. Nineteen were added to the church, and one candidate for membership in the Baptist Church—all adults. It was an inspiring occasion to see sixteen strong men, some gray-headed veterans of the hosts of sin, laying down their arms before the King of kings and taking upon themselves the oath of allegiance to his kingdom. A men's prayer meeting and a ladies' prayer-meeting were organized, the Sunday school revived, and so the work of the kingdom goes on in this community, and in its heart of hearts no man can claim a warmer place than Brother J. R. Countiss. We all feel that we have been with a man who knows God.
